"The doctrine of assumption of risk generally pertains to controversies between masters and servants, although litigation, attended by circumstances which make the defense available, may arise between parties not sustaining that relation. Arise where it may, the defense is one which must rest on contract; or, if not exclusively on contract, then on an act done so spontaneously by the party against whom the defense is invoked that he was a volunteer, and any bad result of the act must be attributed to an exercise of his free volition, instead of to the conduct of his adversary. The word 'assumption' imports a contract, or some kindred act of an unconstrained will. Whenever a man does anything dangerous, he faces risk, but it by no means follows that, legally speaking, he assumes the risk." It has no application to the case of a passenger injured while attempting to alight from an electric car at a dangerous place selected by the carmen, though she made no demands to have the car returned to a safe place for alighting. Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 314, 316, 102 Mo. App. 573.

ASYLUM.

See "Orphan Asylum—Orphanage."

An asylum is defined by Webster to be an institution for the protection and relief of the unfortunate. A soldier's home is included in the term "asylum," used in Const. art. 2, § 3, providing that no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while kept in any almshouse or other asylum or institution wholly or partly supported at public expense. In re Smith, 89 N. Y. Supp. 1006, 1010, 44 Misc. Rep. 384.

AT.

The word "at," when used to designate a place, may, and often must, mean near to. It is less definite than "in" or "on." "At" the house may be in or near the house. Town of Waynesville v. Satterthwait (N. C.) 48 S. E. 661, 665.

"At" means in the neighborhood of. Where a petition in an action against a telegraph company for negligently delivering a message announcing the increased illness of the recipient's mother alleges that plaintiff was at the home of her sister at H., a small village, there is no variance between such allegation and evidence that plaintiff's sister's house was two miles from the village. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Roberts (Tex.) 78 S. W. 522, 524.

AT THE END.

The words "at the end," in 2 Hill's Ann. St. & Codes, §§ 462, 463, providing that the lien of a judgment remaining unsatisfied at the end of five years after the rendition may be revived, mean "after the expiration" of five years. Tacoma Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 74 Pac. 393, 394, 33 Wash. 285.

AT OWNER'S RISK.

Where apples were stored with a public warehouseman for hire, the recital in a receipt given therefor that they were "at owner's risk" did not relieve the warehouseman from liability for injuries arising from his negligence in failing to protect them from unusually cold weather. Denver Public Warehouse Co. v. Munger (Colo.) 77 Pac. 5.

AT PLEASURE.

See "Remove at Pleasure."

ATLANTIC SEABOARD.

The words "Atlantic seaboard" as used in a contract by which a seller of a fishing trade agreed as a condition of the sale that he would not become engaged or interested in the business of catching or manufacturing the products from certain classes of fish along the Atlantic seaboard, in competition with the business of the purchaser, for a specified term, would seem to be broad enough to include such indentations in the coast as Delaware, New York, or Massachusetts Bay, and, at least, a location of a plant on Chesapeake Bay, about 70 miles from the Atlantic Ocean. Fisheries Co. v. Lennen (U. S.) 130 Fed. 533, 535.

ATTACHMENT.

See "Warrant of Attachment."

Attachment proceeding as civil action, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

ATTACK.

See "Collateral Attack"; "Direct Attack."

Impeach equivalent, see "Impeach."

ATTEMPT.

The word "attempt," in an instruction that the attempt of accused to prove an alibi does not shift the burden of proof, did not mean to discredit the evidence of defendant on the question of alibi; but it evidently meant that the fact that defendant had offered evidence for the purpose of proving an alibi did not shift the burden of proof. People v. Lang, 76 Pac. 232, 234, 142 Cal. 482.

"An act done with intent to commit a crime, and tending, but failing, to effect its commission, is an attempt to commit that crime." Pen. Code, § 34. "Felonious intent alone is not enough, but there must be an overt act shown, in order to establish even an attempt. An overt act is one done to carry out the intention, and it must be such as would naturally effect that result, unless prevented by some extraneous cause." Defendant formed a plot to obtain possession of certain indictments, for the purpose of destroying them, by bribing the assistant district attorney having them in his charge to deliver them to him for a certain consideration. A third party, pretending to act for the district attorney, delivered them to him, and he took possession of them and walked away, whereon he was arrested and the indictments recovered. Defendant was properly convicted, under Pen. Code, § 94, of an attempt to unlawfully remove documents from a public officer, and, under section 531, of an attempt to commit grand larceny in the second degree. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 789, 178 N. Y. 274, 18 N. Y. Cr. R. 269.

ATTORNEY.

Attorney's fees as costs, see "Costs."

Where plaintiff was admitted to the bar in 1893, but never filed the certificate required by Laws 1899, p. 406, c. 225, with the clerk of the Court of Appeals, or practiced law, except for about a year after admission, he is not an attorney, within Code Civ. Proc. § 73, prohibiting an attorney from buying a chose in action with intent to sue thereon. Thompson v. Stiles, 89 N. Y. Supp. 876, 44 Misc. Rep. 334.

ATTORNEY'S LIEN.

An attorney's lien is simply the right to hold or retain in the attorney's possession the money or property of the client until his proper charges have been adjusted and paid. It requires no equitable proceeding for its establishment. Sweeley v. Sieman, 98 N. W. 571, 123 Iowa, 183 (citing Foss v. Cobler, 105 Iowa, 728, 75 N. W. 516; In re Wilson [U. S.] 12 Fed. 235).

AUGMENT.

Increase synonymous, see "Increase."

AUTHORIZED AGENT.

See "Duly Authorized Agent."

AUTREFOIS ACQUIT.

"To entitle a defendant to the plea of autrefois convict, or acquit, it is necessary that the offense charged be the same in law and fact." People v. Kerrick, 77 Pac. 711, 712, 144 Cal. 46 (citing People v. Helbing, 61 Cal. 620).

AVAILABLE COAL.

"Available coal," within the meaning of a contract referring to certain unmined coal, includes coal under a creek and under a railroad, which could be mined by leaving proper supports at a greatly enhanced cost. In re Redstone Oil, Coal & Coke Co.'s Dis-solution, 56 Atl. 355, 356, 207 Pa. 125.

AVAILABLE FUNDS.

In a contract to pay a teacher the available funds from certain school lands for one year, the words "available funds for one year" meant the profits derivable from the capital during that time, whether it was actually received by the commissioners before the close of the year or not. Commissioners of Section 16 v. Criswell, 6 Ala. 565, 571.

AVERAGE.

See "General Average."

BAGGAGE.

A woman's jewelry, and every article pertaining to her wardrobe that may be necessary or convenient to her traveling, is regarded in law as baggage. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Fales (Tex.) 77 S. W. 234, 235.

A female traveler's own clothing, and that of her children, including fancy work and miscellaneous ornaments, a savings bank and contents, and a zither key, all of which are carried in her trunk, constitute baggage, for the loss of which she is entitled to recover. She may also recover for the loss of a small amount of her husband's underwear, which was being carried in her trunk as a part of her baggage; it appearing that her husband was traveling with her. She cannot, however, recover for the loss of articles constituting household goods, which she was carrying in her trunk, though she and her husband were changing their residence by removal from one state to another; the carrier having no notice of the fact that such goods were being transported as baggage. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Baldwin (Tenn.) 81 S. W. 599-602.

BAIL

See "Admitted to Bail."

"Bail" is defined as to set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned on security being taken for his appearance. State v. Davis, 75 Pac. 857, 858, 27 Utah, 368 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

BALLOT.

A ballot is a paper to express intent, and where its language is plain it must be so taken. Stanton v. O'Kane (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 245, 246.

A blank piece of paper, having on it no words or marks of any kind whereby the meaning and intent of the person who deposited it may be ascertained, is not a "ballot," and hence such paper cannot be considered in summing up the total vote, a majority of which a candidate must receive in order to be elected; for a ballot is a form of expression for a candidate to be voted for. Murdoch v. Strange (Md.) 57 Atl. 628, 629.

BANK.

The word "bank" is defined in standard dictionaries as "the face of a coal vein in process of being mined"; "the surface immediately about the mouth of a mine"; also, "to form or lie in banks." Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193.

In commercial law.

"The receiving of deposits to be kept and returned on demand is the generally acknowledged feature of every bank, whether incorporated or unincorporated, whether its profits are obtained and business success accomplished." A bank cannot, by naming itself as a brokerage concern, conduct the banking business and receive deposits, the same as a bank, without being in fact subject to the statute regulating banking. Individuals are not prohibited from engaging in, but are permitted to conduct, banking business. State v. Leland, 98 N. W. 92, 93, 91 Minn. 321.

Of river.

"A river is a running stream of water, pent in on either side by banks, shores, or walls." "A fresh water river, like a tidal river, is composed of the alveus, or bed, and the water; but it has banks, instead of shores. The banks are the elevations of land which confine the waters in their natural channel, when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks; and in that condition of the water the banks, and the soil which is permanently submerged, form the bed of the river." State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877 (quoting Gould, Waters).

BANK DIRECTOR.

As trustee, see "Trustee."

BANKING.

The business of banking is defined to consist in discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt, receiving deposits, buying and selling exchange, coin, or bullion, lending money on personal security, and obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes; and to these specified powers, and those necessary to the exercise of the powers expressed, the bank must confine its operations, and acts of officers not embraced in the terms of the law are not binding upon the corporation. Commercial Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank (Tex.) 80 S. W. 601, 603.

BANKING GAME.

A banking game is a game of one against the many. A game of dice, in which one person sits behind the table and takes all the bets of the persons playing on the outside, the dice being thrown by the parties alternately, is a "banking game," punishable under Pen. Code 1895, art. 388, providing that any person who shall bet at any gaming table or bank shall be punished. Faucett v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 548.

BANKRUPT.

The term "bankrupt," defined by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3418], includes a person against whom an involuntary petition or an application to set a composition aside or to revoke a discharge has been filed, or who has filed a voluntary petition or has become a bankrupt, and does not include officers of a corporation declared a bankrupt. United States v. Lake (U. S.) 129 Fed. 499, 502.

BANKRUPTCY.

See "Act of Bankruptcy."

BANQUETTE.

To "banquette a street" can have no other meaning than to construct along the side of it such a sidewalk as is required by the city ordinances; that is, a sidewalk up to grade. Redersheimer v. Bruning (La.) 36 South. 990, 991.

BAR IRON.

Imported muck bars, produced by converting pig iron into wrought iron in the puddling furnace, and then rolling the wrought iron through a set of rolls, from which it comes in the form known as "muck bars," are within the meaning of "bar iron," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 123, 30 Stat. 159 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1638]. Moorhead Bro. & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 127 Fed. 779.

BARGAIN.

The word "bargain" is broad enough in its meaning to include "contract." Koenig v. Dohm, 70 N. E. 1061, 1064, 209 Ill. 468.

BASEBALL.

Playing baseball on Sunday as a crime, see "Crime."

BASTARD.

The word "bastard," in our language, both in its legal signification and in its literary use, has a well-defined meaning. Webster defines it as follows: "A natural child; a child begotten and born out of wedlock." Now, in order that the child be begotten and born out of wedlock, it follows that the mother is an unmarried woman. In law the word is defined as follows: "A child whose parents were not married to each other at the time of its birth." Camplon v. Lattimer (Neb.) 97 N. W. 290, 291.

BATTERY.

See "Assault and Battery."

A battery is the actual infliction of an injury. State v. Dyer (Del.) 58 Atl. 947, 948.

BE IN FORCE.

A policy of life insurance and the application on which the same was issued provided that it should not "take effect or be in force" until delivered to the applicant in person during his lifetime and while in good health. The expression "take effect or be in force" merely intended to distinguish between policies which have not been delivered and those which have been delivered. Austin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n (U. S.) 132 Fed. 555, 559.

BE RESPONSIBLE FOR.

A treasurer of a corporation, merely empowered by the by-laws to "have charge of and be responsible for" the securities of the corporation, has no authority to change the registration and sell certain of its bonds without special authority. Jennie Clarkson Home for Children v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 348, 353, 92 App. Div. 491.

BED.

"A river is a running stream of water, pent in on either side by banks, shores or walls." "A fresh water river, like a tidal river, is composed of the alveus, or bed, and the water; but it has banks, instead of shores. The banks are the elevations of land which confine the waters in their natural channel, when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks, and in that condition of the water the banks, and the soil which is permanently submerged, form the bed of the river." State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877 (quoting Gould on Waters).

BEER.

"The primary meaning of the word 'beer' is a malt and fermented liquor containing more or less alcohol." Webster; Century; Black, Intox. Liq. "There is a secondary sense in which the word 'beer' is used to describe certain nonalcohol beverages, as root or persimmon beer; but, when so used, it is generally preceded by a word descriptive of the kind of beer referred to, as persimmon beer, root beer, and the like. When the word 'beer' is used alone, without the descriptive word, it is generally, almost universally, taken as referring to the malt liquor sold under that name." Black, Intox. Liq.; Williams v. State (Ark.) 77 S. W. 597, 598.

A Japanese alcoholic beverage made from rice by processes similar to those in making beer, which resembles still wine in its percentage of alcohol, which in quality is only remotely similar to beer, is not sufficiently similar to warrant its classification as such, under Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 297, 30 Stat. 174 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1655]. Nishimiya v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 650.

BELIEVE.

See "Best of the Knowledge and Belief."

The words "rely" and "believe" are nearly synonymous. "Rely" is to depend on some one or something as worthy of confidence; to repose confidence; to trust; used with "on" or "upon." "Believe" is to accept as true on the testimony or authority of others; to have faith or confidence in the truth of any one or anything. Spencer v. Hersam (Mont.) 77 Pac. 418.

BELONG.

The words "the town to which he belongs," in Rev. St. 1883, c. 14, § 1, relating to the care of a diseased person at his expense if able, otherwise at that of the town to which he belongs, mean the town in which he has his pauper settlement. Inhabitants of Machias v. Inhabitants of Wesley, 58 Atl. 240, 241, 99 Me. 17.

BENEFICIAL

An irrigation act was attacked for uncertainty in the description of those portions of the state to which it was made to apply, the alleged insufficient description being as follows: "Those portions of the state of Texas in which, by reason of insufficient rainfall, or by reason of irregularity of the rainfall, irrigation is beneficial for agricultural purposes." The appellate court, in passing on this objection, held that the act was not void for uncertainty, basing this holding on the holding of the court in the case of McGhee Irrigation Ditch Co. v. Hudson, 85 Tex. 587, 590, 22 S. W. 398, in which case it was held that a similar irrigation act, which described the portions of the state to which it applied "as those in which, by reason of insufficient rainfall, irrigation is necessary for agricultural purposes," was not void for uncertainty. The only difference in the description in that act and the act under consideration is in the use of the word "necessary," instead of the word "beneficial"; and the court held this difference immaterial. Barden v. Trespalacios Rice & Irrigation Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 461, 465.

BENEFICIALLY ENTITLED.

Testator devised the residue of his estate to a son, as trustee, to be managed for 20 years, with directions that from the net income the annuity of a specified sum should be paid to testator's three children, and provided for the disposition of the income in case any of the children died during the period, and for the distribution of the residue at the end of the period, and for the contingency of each of the children dying prior to the expiration of that period without issue surviving the period. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 120, § 366, imposing a tax on the transfer of property by will where one becomes "beneficially entitled in possession or expectation to any property or income thereof," the residuary estate could not be taxed until the expiration of the 20-year period; for until that time it could not be known who would be beneficially interested therein. People v. McCormick, 70 N. E. 350, 352, 208 Ill. 437, 64 L. R. A. 775.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

An association formed to extend aid to sick members and to defray burial expenses of their dead from funds accumulated from initiation fees and monthly dues is not a benevolent or religious society, within a code provision relating to misdemeanors of treasurers of such societies. State v. Dunn, 46 S. E. 949, 134 N. C. 663.

BEQUEST.

Collateral bequest, see "Collateral."

In common acceptation, "bequest" and "legacy" are synonymous terms; but "bequeath" is the term generally by which a gift of personalty is made in a will, and a legacy is the money or personal property bequeathed. In re Campbell's Estate, 75 Pac. 851, 853, 27 Utah, 361.

BEST KIND OF EVIDENCE.

To say that certain evidence is the best kind of evidence is tantamount to saying that it is better than any other kind. Witlick's Adm'r v. Keiffer, 31 Ala. 199, 201.

BEST OF THE KNOWLEDGE AND BELIEF.

The term "best of the knowledge and belief," as used in a statute providing that an order for the examination of a judgment debtor shall issue only if certain facts be made to appear by affidavit, which affidavit shall be made to the best of the knowledge and belief of affiant, does not permit an affidavit to be made on the best information and belief of affiant. Ackerman v. Green (Mo.) 81 S. W. 509, 512.

BET.

The legal meaning of the term "bet" is the mutual agreement and tender of a gift of something valuable, which is to belong to one of the contending parties according to the result of the trial of chance or skill, or both combined. Mayo v. State (Tex.) 82 S. W. 515, 516.

A bet, like an ordinary contract, involves a concurrence of wills. There must be an offer and an acceptance thereof in accordance with its terms; and the acceptance will not be complete until it is actually or constructively communicated to the party making the offer. McQuesten v. Steinmetz (N. H.) 53 Atl. 876, 877.

In order to constitute a bet, there must be a tender or offer to bet by one party and the acceptance by the other. The party who tenders the debt is not the party to accept the bet. It is the party to whom the tender is made who is the acceptor, and a person tendering or offering a bet on a horse race was not within Acts 1903, p. 68, c. 50, § 1, making it an offense to take or accept any bet on a horse race. Windsor v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 312, 313.

BETTERMENTS.

The improvements, for which Sand. & H. Dig. § 2590, authorizes compensation to one holding under color of title before causing possession to be transferred to the real owner after judgment in ejectment, are technically and commonly denominated "betterments"; and the definition of the term "betterments" to be found in the books is "improvements made to an estate. It signifies such improvements as have been made to the estate, which render it better than mere repairs. * * * The term is also applied to denote the additional value which an estate acquires in consequence of some public improvement, as laying out or widening a street, etc. To entitle one to betterments depends upon his bona fide supposition that he bought the title in fee." Bouvier, Law Dict. This definition is that given substantially in all jurisdictions having similar statutes. Sometimes we say the improvements must be permanent, and not merely temporary. The idea seems to pertain that the improvements are such as were added to the value of the land as it shall come into occupancy and use of the true owner; for he is the person required to pay for them, although they have been made without his consent. Greer v. Fontaine, 77 S. W. 56, 57, 71 Ark. 665.

BETWEEN.

The word "between," if accurately used, imports that not more than two persons or groups are set against each other, and those groups are earmarked and shown to be regarded as groups. The children of the brothers of an illiterate testator take per capita, and not per stirpes, under the residuary clause of a will in which, after making a bequest to certain nephews and nieces, the testator provides for an equal division of the remainder "between my brothers Edwin and Charles children." McIntire v. McIntire, 24 Sup. Ct. 196, 197, 192 U. S. 116, 48 L. Ed. 369 (citing Ihrle's Estate, 162 Pa. 369, 29 Atl. 750; Records v. Fields, 155 Mo. 314, 35 S. W. 1021).

As used in a joint will of a husband and wife, providing that, in case of the death of either, the property of the one first dying should vest in the survivor, unless the survivor marry again, when the property inuring to the survivor's benefit by the death of the other should be divided equally between the survivor and the children of the survivor and the deceased, the word "between" is used in the sense of "among," and the survivor does not take one half of the estate and the children the other half. Edwards v. Kelly, 35 South. 418, 420, 83 Miss. 144.

BICYCLE.

As carriage, see "Carriage."

BILL.

See "Cross-Bill"; "Domestic Bill"; "New Bill."

A claim of the superintendent of the poor of the county is a "bill," within Acts 1903, No. 397, establishing a board of auditors of Saginaw county, and providing that no bills against the county shall be audited in any other manner than as provided by the act, except the bills of the county drain commissioner and the expenditures authorized by the board of supervisors. Morrison v. Kent (Mich.) 97 N. W. 45.

BILL OF PARTICULARS.

The bill of particulars is not a part of the information. It is quite generally, if not universally, held by the courts that the effect of a bill of particulars is to limit the claim and restrict the proof to the very matters therein specified. The sole office of the bill of particulars is to give the adverse party information which the pleadings, by reason of their generality, do not give. State v. Dix, 74 Pac. 570, 572, 33 Wash. 405 (citing Spokane & I. Lumber Co. v. Loy, 21 Wash. 501, 58 Pac. 672, 60 Pac. 1119, 3 Enc. Pl. & Prac. 527).

BITCH.

"Bitch" is defined in Oxford Dictionary as a term applied opprobriously to a woman, strictly a lewd or sensual woman; by Webster, as an opprobrious name for a woman, especially a lewd woman. The term is frequently used as a general term of opprobrium, without any definite reference to chastity; but it is capable of such references. Stoner v. Erlisman, 56 Atl. 77, 206 Pa. 600.

BLANCO P. CARRARA.

Where a subcontract for the furnishing of the marble work of an office building provided that the marble should be "Blanco P. Carrara" marble, and plaintiff's witnesses testified that such marble was not pure white, but was marble of the character furnished, and that pure white marble was known as "Blanco Puro," while the architects testified that by "Blanco P. Carrara" they meant to specify pure white marble, whether plaintiff had substantially complied with the contract was a question for the jury. George A. Fuller Co. v. B. P. Young Co. (U. S.) 128 Fed. 343, 345, 61 C. C. A. 245.

BLENDED FLOUR.

Blended flour is flour mixed with corn meal, about half and half, of a dark color and of a peculiar odor. Bunch v. Well Bros. & Bauer (Ark.) 80 S. W. 582, 65 L. R. A. 80.

BLOOD POISONING.

As disease, see "Disease."

BLOWN GLASSWARE.

Thermometers and lactoscopes, composed chiefly of blown glass, but in part of other materials, are not dutiable under the provisions in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B. par. 100, 30 Stat. 157 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1633], as "blown glassware," but under paragraph 112 of said act, as manufactures of which glass is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for. Elmer & Amend v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 439.

Blown glass blanks, which need further manufacture to prepare them for the trade, are not "blown glassware," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 30 Stat. 157 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1633]. United States v. Durand (U. S.) 127 Fed. 624.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

A board of education is in fact a board of trustees, and the term "board of education" is simply another name for trustees; and Pen. Code, § 1575, authorizing the trustees to sue and be sued, and making the board responsible for judgment, must be construed to apply to and include city boards of education, as well as boards of county school districts. Hancock v. Board of Education of City of Santa Barbara, 74 Pac. 44, 48, 140 Cal. 554.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The term "board of supervisors" means an aggregation of town officers. There is no method by which one supervisor can be legislated or construed in a board. People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463, 472.

BODILY HEIRS.

The words "bodily heirs" have the same meaning as "heirs of the body," and are words of limitation, and not words of purchase. Marsh v. Griffin (N. C.) 48 S. E. 735, 736 (citing Donnell v. Mateer's Ex'rs, 40 N. C. 7; Worrel v. Vinson, 50 N. C. 91, 94; Leathers v. Gray, 101 N. C. 162, 164, 7 S. E. 657, 9 Am. St. Rep. 30).

"There is no substantial difference between the words 'heirs of his body' and 'bodily heirs.' They are all words of limitation, and not of purchase, and the latter have the same meaning as the former, unless there is something in the instrument to show that the donor used them in some other than their technical sense." A will, after making a gift to testatrix's daughter, gave to her son and his bodily heirs, forever, certain property, and provided that if either of testatrix's children should die without leaving a surviving bodily heir, before receiving its share of testatrix's estate, such share should descend to the surviving child and its bodily heirs, forever, thus devising to the son an estate in fee tail, which is by statute a life estate, with a remainder in fee to his children living at his death. Miller v. Enslinger, 81 S. W. 422, 424, 182 Mo. 195.

A deed to a married woman and her "body heirs" vests a fee simple in the grantee. Bingham v. Weller (Tenn.) 81 S. W. 343, 845.

BOILER.

As structure, see "Structure."

BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

The expression "bona fide purchasers" is to be understood as the equivalent of purchasers without notice. Wilkins v. McCorkle (Tenn.) 80 S. W. 834, 835.

To be a "bona fide purchaser without notice" the defendant must not only have agreed to purchase without notice of the complainant's previous agreement, but he must also have actually paid the purchase money and taken his deed without such notice. Cranwell v. Clinton Realty Co. (N. J.) 58 Atl. 1030, 1035.

BOND.

See "Requisite Bond."

A bond is an obligation in writing to pay. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 93, 111 La. 982.

The phrase "a bond provided for by this Code," as used in a code provision authorizing the execution of a sufficient bond, in case a bond provided for by this Code be adjudged to be defective, refers to the bonds which the Code authorizes only, and has no application to an appeal bond given in an election contest. Galloway v. Bradburn (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1013, 1015.

BOND FOR THE PAYMENT OF MONEY.

A bond conditioned for the performance of an act or service is not within the statute which provides that all "bonds for the payment of money or other things" may be assigned by indorsement. Shackleford v. Franks, 25 Miss. 49, 52.

BOOK OF ORIGINAL ENTRIES.

"A book of original entries is a book in which a merchant keeps his accounts generally and enters therein from day to day a record of his transactions." A book of a firm, which was not one of the firm's regular books, and which contained only the account of one person, and in which the entries were not made contemporaneously with the transaction, was not a book of original entries. McKnight v. Newell, 57 Atl. 39, 40, 207 Pa. 562.

BOOMAGE.

"Boomage" is a fixed charge on logs, payable at the place of delivery. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 35 South. 828, 83 Miss. 499.

BORACIC ACID.

A dry, antiseptic preservative, consisting of an intimate mechanical mixture of boracic acid and borax, the former being the more valuable component, is an article not enumerated in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1626], either as "boracic acid," under paragraph 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1626], as "chemical compounds," under paragraph 3, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1627], or as "borax" or "borate material," under paragraph 11, 30 Stat. 152 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1627], and is subject to an assessment at the same rate of duty as boracic acid, under said paragraph 1, by virtue of section 7 of said act (30 Stat. 205 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1693]), which prescribes that on articles not enumerated, manufactured of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable, if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value. Berth Levi & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 420.

BOTTLE.

Bottle-like containers of glass, used in chemical operations, and known as Koch flasks, and certain so-called Wolf flasks, shaped like bottles, but having two or three necks apiece, are "bottles or jars," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, 30 Stat. 156 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1633]. Eimer & Amend v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 439.

BOYCOTT.

A boycott may be defined to be a combination of several persons to cause a loss to a third person, by causing others against their will to withdraw from him their beneficial business intercourse, through threats that, unless a compliance with their demands be made, the persons forming the combination will cause loss or injury to him, or an organization formed to exclude a person from business relations with others by persuasion, intimidation, and other acts which tend to violence, and thereby cause him, through fear of resulting injury, to submit to dictation in the management of his affairs. Gray v. Building Trades Council, 97 N. W. 663, 666, 91 Minn. 171, 63 L. R. A. 753.

BRAKEMAN.

See "Extra Brakeman."

BREAKING.

As used in a statute defining burglary, the word "breaking" has a well-known and definite meaning at common law; and in order to constitute it the action of the person accused must have been such as would, without additional effort, have made an entry possible. Gaddie v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 78 S. W. 162, 163.

Unbuttoning the outside door of a chicken house and removing the slat fastening the inner door constitute a "breaking," within the meaning of the term as used in a statute defining burglary. State v. Helma, 78 S. W. 592, 594, 179 Mo. 280.

BRIBERY.

The offense of bribery embraces any attempt to bribe. Commonwealth v. Bailey (Ky.) 82 S. W. 299.

It is not necessary, in order to constitute bribery, that the vote of a public official bribed should be in a measure valid and enforceable. State v. Lehman, 81 S. W. 1118, 1129, 182 Mo. 424, 66 L. R. A. 490.

Bribery in elections involves moral turpitude, and falls within the class of crimes deemed infamous, within Const. art. 4, § 4, declaring that no person who has been or shall hereafter be convicted of bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime, shall be eligible to the General Assembly, or to any office of profit or trust in the state. Christie v. People, 69 N. E. 33, 35, 206 Ill. 337.

BROTHER-IN-LAW.

The husbands of two sisters are "brothers-in-law," within the meaning of the law providing for the recusation of judges. State ex rel. Ribbeck v. Foster, 36 South. 554, 556, 112 La. 533.

BUILDER'S LIEN.

The term "builder's lien," in a contract providing that the contractor shall have a builder's lien, has reference to the lien described in the Constitution and the statutes, and extends, not only to the house or building erected, but also to the lot or lots of land necessarily connected therewith. June & Co. v. Doke (Tex.) 80 S. W. 402, 406.

BUILDING.

Other building, see "Other."

"Building" is defined as an edifice erected by art, and fixed upon or over the soil, composed of stone, brick, marble, wood, or other proper substance, connected together, and designed for use in the position in which it is so fixed. It includes an ordinary fence. Swasey v. Shasta County, 74 Pac. 1031, 1032, 141 Cal. 392 (citing Bouvier, Law Dict.).

A hotel is a "building," within Cr. Code, § 36 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 38), defining burglary as breaking or entering a dwelling house "or other building." Bruen v. People, 69 N. E. 24, 206 Ill. 417.

A wall cannot be held to come within the term "building." Clark v. Lee, 70 N. E. 47, 185 Mass. 223 (citing Truesdell v. Gay, 79 Mass. [13 Gray] 311).

As officer, see "Officer."

BULK.

See "In Bulk."

BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of the proof and the weight of the evidence are two entirely distinct and separate things. The former does not change, but the latter may, according to the nature and strength of the proofs offered on the trial. Even when the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, the burden of the proof does not shift to the defendant in any proper sense. All that is meant by such an expression is that the other party must go forward with his proofs, if he would not have a judgment against him. Gibbs v. Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank, 99 N. W. 703, 705, 123 Iowa, 736.

BUREAU.

See "Head of a Bureau."

BURGLARY.

Burglary is defined as "the breaking and entering in the night of another's dwelling house with intent to commit a felony therein," and "if a man in the nighttime breaks into a dwelling house, intending to commit therein some act which in law is felony, he is guilty of burglary, whether he succeeds in doing what he meant or not." Mann v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 80 S. W. 438 (citing 1 Bish. Cr. Law, §§ 437, 559).

BUSHELING SCRAP.

"Busheling scrap" has a definite signification. It consists of small pieces of wrought iron and steel, there being two grades, No. 1 and No. 2. Lichtenstein v. Rabolinsky, 90 N. Y. Supp. 247, 98 App. Div. 516.

BUSINESS.

See "Carrying on Business"; "County Business"; "Doing Business"; "Money Business"; "Transacting Business." Any business, see "Any." As property, see "Property."

The word "business," as used in a will reciting that, in consideration of the fact that the testator had during his lifetime given a son the "business" of an express company and other interests of much value, etc., must be regarded as meaning the establishment of the enterprise, its good will, its connection with transportation lines so established, which were valuable adjuncts, and almost a necessity for the culmination of final success to the son. Solley v. Westcott, 88 N. Y. Supp. 297, 301, 43 Misc. Rep. 188.

The word "business," in Const. art. 8, § 5, declaring that all civil and criminal business arising in any county must be tried there, means causes of action, including probate and other civil proceedings. Sherman v. Droubay, 74 Pac. 348, 349, 27 Utah, 47.

BUSINESS DONE.

Laws 1896, c. 908, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 118, § 1, imposes an annual tax on the gross amount of the premiums received by domestic insurance companies for "business done" in the state. The premium which represents the business done is the amount that the company has the benefit of and furnishes an equivalent for. The business done through a canceled policy is the insurance made or indemnity furnished during the period that the policy is in force. That is the only business that a fire insurance company can do. People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 177 N. Y. 515.

BUSINESS OF AN INTERSTATE CHARACTER.

Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 857, c. 908, § 184, provides for a franchise tax to be assessed on the gross earnings of a transportation corporation within the state, which shall include its gross earnings from its transportation or transmission business originating and terminating within the state, but shall not include earnings derived from "business of an interstate character." Where it appeared that a domestic railway company's assessment under the section included receipts from express business beginning in the state and transferred within the state for delivery in another state, or shipped outside the state for delivery within the state, such business was interstate commerce, and not taxable. People v. Miller, 88 N. Y. Supp. 373, 375, 94 App. Div. 587.

BUSINESS TENDERED.

The expression "the business tendered such railroads," in Laws 1903, p. 93, c. 68, § 1, declaring that all railroads in Texas shall be required to build sidings and spur tracks sufficient to handle the business tendered such railroads, when ordered to do so by the railroad commission, refers to freight and passengers which come to the railroad from the public for transportation as a public highway; and the Legislature's intention was to require all railroad companies to provide all necessary means for accommodating such business. Railroad Commission of Texas v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas (Tex.) 80 S. W. 1141.

BY THE ACT.

See "Constituted by the Act."

BY CHANCE.

Where prizes were offered to those sending bands of certain makes of cigars for the closest estimates of the number of cigars on which $3 tax per thousand would be paid in a certain month, the number on which the tax was paid in each month for three years being published in connection with the offer, the distribution of prizes was not "by chance," within Pen. Code, § 323, defining lotteries as a distribution of money by chance. People v. Lavin, 87 N. Y. Supp. 776, 778, 93 App. Div. 292.

BY DESCENT.

See "Indians by Descent."

BY HER OWN LABOR.

In Hill's Ann. Laws Or. 1892, § 2993, providing that the property acquired by a married woman during coverture by her own labor shall not be liable for the debts of her husband, the words "by her own labor" are used as meaning "by her own efforts." Elliot v. Hawley, 76 Pac. 93, 95, 34 Wash. 585.

BY RIGHT OF REPRESENTATION.

The expression "by right of representation" means in the right of the ancestor through whom the heir takes. Hemenway v. Draper, 97 N. W. 874, 875, 91 Minn. 235.

BY-LAW.

By-laws are rules and ordinances made by a corporation for its own government. While the terms "ordinance" and "by-laws" are sometimes used interchangeably, it cannot be contended that a resolution of a city council granting privileges to a street car company is a by-law. Holst v. Savannah Electric Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 931, 940.

CABOOSE CAR.

A caboose car is a car attached to the rear of a freight train, fitted up for the accommodation of the conductor, brakeman, and chance passengers. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 78 S. W. 167, 168.

A caboose car is intended solely for the accommodation of the men connected with the train, contains their bunks and mattresses, in which they sleep, and in which is there deposited the lamps of the cars and the tools used by the men. It is not adapted for passengers, although passengers are sometimes allowed to ride on it. Shoemaker v. Kingsbury, 79 U. S. (12 Wall.) 369, 375, 20 L. Ed. 432.

CANARY SEED.

As grass seed, see "Grass Seed."

CAPABLE.

See "Incapable."

CAPACITY.

See "Fiduciary Capacity"; "Professional Capacity."

CAPACITY TO EARN MONEY.

The phrase "capacity to earn money," as used in Pub. St. 1901, c. 191, § 12, declaring that, in assessing damages for the death of a person, the jury shall consider his probable duration of life and capacity to earn money, must be understood to mean capacity to earn money for the estate of the person killed; and hence an instruction should be given, in an action for negligence causing the death of the child, that deceased would have been incapable of earning money for his estate during his minority. Carney v. Concord St. Ry., 57 Atl. 218, 224, 72 N. H. 364.

CAPITAL.

In subjecting all classes of bankers to taxation upon their capital, the statute does not discriminate in favor of any class, and the term "capital" should be read as meaning the same thing in respect to a corporation that it does in respect to an individual banker. In other words, whatever comprises capital in the business of an individual banker likewise comprises capital in the business of a banking corporation, for the purposes of the statute. Leather Mfrs' Nat. Bank v. Treat (U. S.) 128 Fed. 262, 264, 62 C. C. A. 644.

The word "capital," as used in Revision 1888, § 3836, as amended by Pub. Acts 1889, p. 36, c. 63, providing that shares of capital stock shall be set in the list returned by the owner for assessment at their market value, but so much of the capital as shall be invested in real estate shall be deducted, describes the surplus over the company's liabilities, representing the fund in which the shareholder is equitably interested, and to which he would look for his final dividend, were the company to be wound up. In re Bulkeley, 58 Atl. 8, 77 Conn. 45.

"'Capital stock' and 'capital' are practically the equivalent of each other, when considered as the basis of a franchise tax." People v. Morgan, 70 N. E. 967, 969, 178 N. Y. 433.

CAPITAL EMPLOYED.

Where a foreign corporation was organized with a paid-in capital stock, invested in improved real estate previously owned by the several stockholders in common, dividends being derived from rentals of such property, the capital so invested was "the capital employed within the state," within Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 856, c. 908, §§ 181, 182; and hence the corporation was properly taxable thereunder. People v. Miller, 90 N. Y. Supp. 755, 98 App. Div. 584.

CAPITAL STOCK.

Capital synonymous, see "Capital."

"Capital stock," as that term is used in the tax law, does not mean share stock. It is limited to the actual money or property paid in and possessed by the corporation as such. People v. Feitner, 87 N. Y. Supp. 304, 306, 92 App. Div. 518.

The term "capital stock," when applied to the capital stock of a corporation, embraces the franchise of the corporation, as well as its physical property. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright (U. S.) 132 Fed. 912, 919.

The words "capital stock," as used in Corporation Tax Law, Laws 1896, c. 908, § 182, providing that every corporation organized under the law of the state shall pay an annual tax, computed on the basis of the amount of its capital stock employed within the state, does not mean the share stock held by individuals, but the capital stock which it represents, so employed; and, so construing the term "capital stock," United States bonds should, in the absence of proof that they were bought by the corporation with its surplus, be treated as capital, and as part of the basis on which the franchise tax is to be computed. People v. Morgan, 70 N. E. 967, 969, 178 N. Y. 433.

CAPTAIN.

Under a statute making the captain or owner of a steamer liable to a penalty for making a voyage without a licensed first or principal engineer in charge of the engines, it is held that one who was in command when the law was violated, though but for a single voyage, was liable to the penalty, even though another was regularly employed as captain. Leonard v. Board of Engineers, 10 Ala. 52, 55.

CAR.

See "Caboose Car"; "Electric Car"; "Street Car."

A push car, used for transporting ballast for the repair of a track, is a "car," within the meaning of a statute providing that a railway company shall be liable for injuries to a servant in operating a car through the negligence of any other servant. Seery v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (Tex.) 77 S. W. 950, 951.

Under a statute making railroad companies liable for injuries to servants caused by negligence of fellow servants in the operation of cars, a section crew, placing a hand car on the track, is engaged in the operation of a "car," within the statute. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Jennings (Tex.) 81 S. W. 822, 823.

In Gen. St. 1901, § 2098, subjecting to punishment any person who shall lawfully injure any locomotive, car, or the machinery on any railroad, or any woodhouse, car, or water station erected for the accommodation and use of any railroad, the word "car" was evidently intended to refer to passenger and freight cars used on railroads, where locomotives, woodhouses, and water stations are essential to their operation. State v. Cain (Kan.) 76 Pac. 443, 444.

CARE.

See "Due Care"; "High Care"; "Ordinary Care"; "Reasonable Care"; "Utmost Care and Skill."

"Care means more than mere mechanical skill. It includes circumspection and foresight with regard to reasonably probable contingencies." The rule as to the degree of care in the use of electricity is the same as in the use of steam and other agencies. The care must be proportionate to the danger. In determining the danger, it is the duty of those in control to have in view all the surroundings, including the contingency of other wires and their liability to fall and come in contact with the dangerously charged wire. Youmans v. Moore, 48 S. E. 283, 285, 69 S. C. 350 (quoting Anderson v. Jersey City Electric Light Co., 43 Atl. 654, 655, 63 N. J. Law, 387).

CARELESSNESS.

Negligence and carelessness are generally esteemed as not only not willfulness, but rather the opposite. Schooler v. Arrington, 81 S. W. 468, 469, 106 Mo. App. 607 (following Gibeline v. Smith, 80 S. W. 961, 106 Mo. App. 545).

CARRIAGE.

See "Contract of Carriage."

Wagon synonymous, see "Wagon."

The word "carriages," as used in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 72, § 1, imposing on towns the duty of keeping highways in repair, "so that the same may be safe and convenient for travelers with their teams, carts, and carriages," does not include a bicycle; and hence a bicycle rider is not entitled to recover for injuries sustained by reason of a defect in the street, where the defect would not have caused injury to an ordinary traveler. Fox v. Clarke, 57 Atl. 303, 25 R. L. 515, 65 L. R. A. 234.

CARRIER.

See "Common Carrier."

CARRY.

"Coming into possession of a pistol while at a public gathering is not carrying a pistol to a public gathering." A conviction cannot be had under an accusation charging accused with carrying a pistol about his person to a place of public worship, the same being a designated church where a congregation was then assembled for public worship, on proof that accused came into possession of the pistol at a spring from which the congregation was using water, and which was so near the church as to be in legal contemplation a church. Culbertson v. State, 47 S. E. 175, 176, 119 Ga. 805 (quoting Modesette v. State, 41 S. E. 992, 115 Ga. 582).

CARRYING ON BUSINESS.

See, also, "Doing Business"; "Transacting Business."

Exercising corporate franchises synonymous, see "Exercising Corporate Franchises."

The doing by a foreign corporation of a single act of business in the Indian Territory, without appointing a resident agent on whom summons may be served, is not a violation of an act of Congress providing that, before any foreign corporation shall begin to carry on business in the Indian Territory, it shall designate an agent on whom summons or other process may be served, etc. Ammons v. Brunswick-Balke-Collendar Co. (Ind. T.) 82 S. W. 937, 940.

The expression "carrying on business," as used in Code, art. 75, § 132, rendering one liable to be sued in a county in which his business is carried on, relates to a fixed occupation, connected with some of the branches of trade, industry, or commerce, or the continuous pursuit of some calling or profession such as is ordinarily engaged in as a means of livelihood, or for the purpose of gain or profit. It does not consist in the mere transaction of one's own private affairs. Nor does the making of a single transaction with another person in the line of a particular business constitute a carrying on of that business. A nonresident of a county owned property there, which he managed and received the rents from, and also collected rent from property which he owned as co-tenant with another, receiving a commission from his co-tenant for collecting the latter's share. He was not engaged in regular business, within the meaning of the section. State v. Shipley (Md.) 57 Atl. 12, 13.

CARRYING A PISTOL.

See "Unlawfully Carrying a Pistol."

CASE.

See "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

A commission from the department of justice to an attorney, appointing him a special assistant to a district attorney, is not to be construed with technical nicety; and such a commission, appointing an attorney as special assistant to a district attorney to assist in the preparation and trial of "cases" in the United States against the officers of an insolvent national bank, against some of whom indictments had previously been returned, is to be construed as having been given under Rev. St. § 363 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 208], and to authorize the person so commissioned to assist in the performance of any duties of the district attorney, including appearance before the grand jury to present evidence for new indictments. United States v. Twining, 132 Fed. 129, 132.

The words "the case," as used in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, 26 Stat. 137 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1933], requiring the board of general appraisers to "examine and try the case" submitted to it by a collector of customs, literally require the board, first of all, to determine its own jurisdiction, so far, at least, as to ascertain whether there is a protest, or whether the protest is apparently valid. This involves the question whether it was made in time, because, if not made in time, it is not a protest. United States v. Brown, Durrell & Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 793, 797, 62 O. C. A. 473.

CASH MARKET VALUE.

In condemnation proceedings, the only way to arrive at the cash market value of the land sought to be condemned is to estimate the specific identical land taken, by placing a value upon it; and this can only be done by a statement of facts, and by opinions and estimates of parties acquainted with the land. Upon such facts, opinions, and estimates of the land must the valuation be based. Wray v. Knoxville, L. F. & J. R. Co. (Tenn.) 82 S. W. 471, 473.

CASH VALUE.

The cash value of an article is the amount of cash for which it will exchange in fact. That amount depends on the opinion of the public, of possible buyers, or of that part of it which will pay the most. Ankeny v. Blakley, 74 Pac. 485, 489, 44 Or. 78 (citing National Bank of Commerce v. New Bedford, 155 Mass. 313, 29 N. E. 532).

CASTS OF SCULPTURE.

Plaster casts of clay models, though painted and gilded and produced in unlimited quantities, are "casts of sculpture," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 649, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 1626, 1637], and hence are entitled to free entry, where specially imported in good faith for the use and by the order of any society incorporated or established solely for religious, philosophical, scientific, educational, or literary purposes. Benziger v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 189, 196, 192 U. S. 38, 48 L. Ed. 331.

CASUALTY.

A casualty is an unforeseen incident; a misfortune. Gill v. Fugate (Ky.) 78 S. W. 188, 191.

CAUSA MORTIS.

See "Gift Causa Mortis."

CAUSE.

See "Common-Law Cause"; "Efficient Cause"; "Probable Cause"; "Proximate Cause"; "Remote Cause."
Other cause, see "Other."

"Cause" and "consequence" are correlative terms. One implies the other. When an event is followed in natural sequence by a result it is adapted to produce or aid in producing, that result is a consequence of the event, and the event is the result of the cause. Monroe v. Hartford St. Ry. Co., 56 Atl. 498, 501, 76 Conn. 201.

Code Civ. Proc. § 46, forbidding a judge to sit or take part in the decision of a "cause or matter" in which he has been an attorney or counsel, refers only to actions or special proceedings in which a judge might take part; the word "cause" meaning a cause of action, and the word "matter" referring to some judicial proceeding which, under the Code, is included in special proceedings for the enforcement of civil rights. Keeffe v.

Third Nat. Bank of Syracuse, 69 N. E. 593, 594, 177 N. Y. 305.

CAUSE OF ACTION.

See "Joint Cause of Action"; "New Cause of Action"; "No Cause of Action."

Cause of action arising, see "Arise—Arising."

Subject of action distinguished, see "Subject of Action."

"The cause of action is the statement of facts, upon the happening or nonhappening of which the plaintiff bases his action." Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. (N. C.) 48 S. E. 642, 643.

An erroneous ruling by the trial court cannot be held to furnish a "cause of action," as that phrase is commonly understood. Act Cong. July 20, 1892, c. 209, 27 Stat. 252 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 706], providing that any citizens entitled to commence any action or suit in any court of the United States may commence and prosecute to conclusion any such suit or action, refers to a legal demand by one against another, and not to the rulings of any trial court. Bristol v. United States (U. S.) 129 Fed. 87, 89, 63 C. C. A. 529.

CAUSE SHOWN.

See "Good Cause Shown."

CAVEAT EMPTOR.

The rule of caveat emptor applies with full force and vigor to purchasers of property from trustees, executors, and other persons acting in any fiduciary capacities. Neary v. Neary (Neb.) 97 N. W. 302, 304.

CENTRALLY.

The word "centrally" does not necessarily mean in the exact center. Bredin v. Solmson (U. S.) 132 Fed. 161, 162.

CERTAIN.

Apparent synonymous, see "Apparent."

CERTAIN ASCERTAINED MEMBERSHIP.

The meaning of a finding that a society has had at all said times "a certain ascertained membership" is that an organization exists sufficiently formed to take; i. e., the number at any time could be determined, not necessarily the same persons, but as "having at all times a certain ascertained membership." In re Merchant's Estate, 77 Pac. 475, 476, 143 Cal. 537.

CERTAINTY.

See "Moral Certainty."

CERTIFICATE.

See "Registration Certificate."

CERTIORARI.

"Certiorari, except as it has been enlarged and extended by statute, is a common-law writ. In its office it is confined to reviewing proceedings of inferior courts, officers, boards, and tribunals, where there is no other remedy provided by statute. The writ in terms directs inferior courts, officers, boards, or tribunals to certify to the superior court the record of their proceedings for inspection and review, and the writ can run only to persons or tribunals that have acted judicially in making the determination sought to be reviewed." People v. Priest, 88 N. Y. Supp. 11, 95 App. Div. 44.

CHAIR.

A dentist's chair is not exempt from levy and sale as a "chair sufficient for the use of the family," under an exemption statute. Burt v. Stocks Coal Co., 46 S. E. 828, 829, 119 Ga. 629, 100 Am. St. Rep. 203.

CHAMOTTE.

The term "Chamotte," as used in the arts, has a broader meaning technically than ordinary fire brick crushed, or fire clay, and means, when used to describe an element in a patented combination, a clay which has been burned to an extent which deprives it of further shrinkage on being again subjected to heat. Panzl v. Battle Island Paper & Pulp Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 607, 609.

CHAMPERTY.

Champerty, "which is a species of maintenance, has been defined to be the unlawful maintenance of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have a part of the thing in dispute or some profit out of it; a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant campum partire to divide the land or other thing sued for between them if they prevail at law; the champertor agreeing to carry on the suit at his own expense." Where defendant in an injunction suit assigns to his attorneys, who have succeeded in securing a dissolution of a temporary injunction, his claim for damages on the injunction bond, consisting merely in his attorney's fees, the transaction is not objectionable as champertous. Lacey v. Davis (Iowa) 98 N. W. 366, 367 (quoting 6 Cyc. 850).

A contract is "champertous" where it is for attorneys' services, for which the attorneys agree to look solely to a certain percentage of the recovery for their compensation, without any right to recover for services rendered, either before or after the recovery against the client. Gargano v. Pope, 69 N. E. 343, 184 Mass. 571, 100 Am. St. Rep. 575.

An agreement by an attorney for a contingent fee of 50 per cent. of the recovery, the attorney to advance all the court costs, is "champertous," within Code Civ. Proc. § 74, providing that an attorney shall not promise or give a valuable consideration to any person as an inducement to placing in his hands a demand of any kind for the purpose of bringing an action thereon. Taylor v. Enthoven, 88 N. Y. Supp. 138.

CHANCE.

See "By Chance"; "Game of Chance."

CHANGE.

Any change in grade, see "Any."

A vote at a school election "to move the schoolhouse onto the southeast corner" of a certain place is in effect a vote to change the schoolhouse site. Livesay v. Whitney (Mc.) 81 S. W. 640, 641.

CHANGE OF DOMICILE.

To effect a change of domicile, there must be a residence in the new locality and intention to remain there. Eisele v. Oddie (U. S.) 128 Fed. 941, 945.

To effect a change of domicile, there must be an actual abandonment of the first domicile, coupled with an intention not to return to it, and there must be a new domicile, acquired by actual residence within another jurisdiction, coupled with the intention of making the last acquired residence a permanent home. People v. Molr, 69 N. E. 905, 907, 207 Ill. 180, 99 Am. St. Rep. 205 (citing Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 312).

CHANGE OF INTEREST.

Where the condition in a fire policy is against any change in the title, there is no breach unless there is a change in the legal title. This doctrine cannot be applied "to a condition against any change of interest." The terms are not synonymous. The word "interest" is broader than the word "title," and includes ordinary legal and equitable rights. Hence, under a policy providing that it shall be void if any change takes place in the interest, title, or position of the subject of insurance, any material change in the interest of the insured in the subject of the insurance will avoid the policy. Excelsior Foundry Co. v. Western Assur. Co. (Mich.) 98 N. W. 9, 11.

A bankruptcy adjudication against insured, and a note by the referee in bankruptcy in his record of the name of the person whom he had selected as receiver to take charge of his property pending the appointment of a trustee, and an order appointing the receiver, and his qualification two days after the destruction of the property covered by the policy, did not constitute such a "change of interest" as to invalidate the policy, under a provision that it should be void if any change, other than by the death of the insured, should take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, etc., during the life of the policy. Fuller v. Jameson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 456, 457.

CHANGE OF TITLE.

Change of interest distinguished, see "Change of Interest."

CHANGE OF VENUE.

The phrase "change of venue" has been used throughout the legislative history of the state to denote the removal of causes from one county to another county, and never removals from one court to another in the same county. Dudley v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 38 South. 700, 702, 139 Ala. 453.

CHANNEL.

See "Main Channel."

CHARGE.

See "Have Charge of"; "Take Entire Charge."

Abstract charge, see "Abstract."

CHARGED.

See "Act Charged."

The word "charged," as used in a holding that after a jury has been sworn and charged with the fate of the prisoner, it is too late to challenge any of its members, means when the prisoner has been placed in the hands of the jury for trial, which occurs when the jury is sworn and before indictment read or testimony heard, and not necessarily after the testimony in the case is heard or the law charged. When the jury has once been impaneled and charged with the trial of the prisoner, the discharge of the jury, unless by the consent of the prisoner, or in a case of legal necessity, will operate as an acquittal, and prevent his being again put on trial. Where, in a criminal case, after a jury was impaneled and sworn, the defendant arraigned, and the state and defendant announced ready for trial, the court, after asking them some questions, discharged two jurors over defendant's objection, one because of relationship to the defendant and the other because he had not been a resident of the county a sufficient time, the defendant was entitled to discharge on the ground of former jeopardy. Tomasson v. State (Tenn.) 79 S. W. 802, 803 (quoting Ward v. State, 20 Tenn. [1 Humph.] 253; State v. Connor, 45 Tenn. [5 Cold.] 815).

CHARITABLE INSTITUTION.

A society having for its object the collection and preservation of historical and current accounts of events, persons, and inventions, etc., and all other materials of a similar character, connected with the interests of a certain town, is not a "charitable institution"; its object not possessing an educational character, and the collections of the society not necessarily being devoted to public use. In re Vineland Historical & Antiquarian Soc. (N. J.) 56 Atl. 1039, 1040.

CHARITABLE PURPOSE.

A donation to the poor of a certain locality is a gift for a "charitable purpose." Brookville Borough v. Startzell, 56 Atl. 938, 940, 207 Pa. 347.

The establishment of a mission for the preaching of the gospel is a "charitable purpose," within Acts 1885-86, p. 142, c. 1233, § 1, providing that churches and all property of seminaries, asylums, hospitals, infirmaries, and colleges, and all other funds devoted to charitable purposes, shall be exempt from taxation. City of Louisville v. Werne (Ky.) 80 S. W. 224, 225.

CHARITY.

"Charity" is defined by Lord Camden as a "gift to a general public use, which extends to the poor as well as to the rich." Kronshage v. Varrell (Wis.) 97 N. W. 928, 930 (citing Jones v. Williams, Amb. 651; Perin v. Carey, 65 U. S. [24 How.] 465, 16 L. Ed. 701).

A "charity" contemplates a public benefit, or the well-being of a community or a class, as contrasted with the beneficial use for private purposes, or for a private individual. To constitute a charity, the use must be public in its nature. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Soc., 90 N. Y. Supp. 168, 174, 44 Misc. Rep. 594.

"It is well settled that a Christian church lawfully existing is a 'charity,' in the sense of St. 43 Eliz. c. 6." Gifts to charitable institutions may lapse, as well as gifts to natural persons. A bequest to a church for deaf mutes, of which the testatrix had been a member, and in the prosperity of which she had been greatly interested, does not show such a general charitable intention as to entitle a new church corporation, formed by consolidation of the legatee with another church, to take under the will, though the new corporation carried on the identical work which had been conducted by the legatee. Gladding v. St. Matthew's Church, 57 Atl. 860, 863, 25 R. L. 628, 65 L. R. A. 225.

CHARTER.

The charter of a corporation formed under a general law consists of its articles of incorporation, taken in connection with the law under which the organization takes place. The provisions of the law enter into and form a part of its charter. Traer v. Lucas Prospecting Co. (Iowa) 99 N. W. 290, 292.

CHATTEL.

A chattel is defined to be every species of property, movable or immovable, which is less than a freehold. A ring, though an article of personal adornment, is property which may be the subject of a chattel mortgage. Salabes v. J. Castberg & Sons (Md.) 57 Atl. 20, 21, 64 L. R. A. 800 (quoting Bouvier, Law Dict.).

A horse is a chattel. McVeigh v. Ripley, 58 Atl. 701, 702, 77 Conn. 136.

CHECK.

See "Pay-Check."

"A check is a mere order for so much money to the credit of the drawer in the bank or drawee, which it is bound to honor when made in form and properly presented." Where an indictment charged the larceny of money, proof of the taking of a check on which the money was obtained was not a variance; and where defendant married a woman in pursuance of a scheme to procure certain money which she had on deposit in bank, and later procured a check for the money on representations that he would use the money in making an investment for her, he was guilty of larceny. Hunt v. State (Ark.) 79 S. W. 769, 772, 65 L. R. A. 71.

CHEMICAL COMPOUNDS.

Gadual, an alcoholic abstract of cod liver oil, unsuited in its imported state to be used as a medicine, but intended for use after a preparation in the form of an emulsion by the manufacturer, is dutiable under paragraph 3 of the tariff act of July 24, 1897, relating to "chemical compounds." Merck & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 438.

A dry, antiseptic preservative, consisting of an intimate mechanical mixture of boracic acid and borax, the former being the more valuable component, is an article not enumerated in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, § 1, c.

11, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1626], either as "boracic acid," under paragraph 1, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1626], as "chemical compounds," under paragraph 3, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1627], or as "borax" or "borate material," under paragraph 11, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 152 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1627], and is subject to an assessment at the same rate of duty as boracic acid under said paragraph 1, by virtue of section 7, 30 Stat. 205 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1693], which prescribes that on articles not enumerated, manufactured of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable, if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value. Berth Levi & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 420.

CHIEF OF POLICE.

As state officer, see "State Officer."

CHILD—CHILDREN.

See "Our Children"; "Surviving Children."

The word "child," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 81, declaring that any person who shall administer to any woman pregnant with a child any medicine, etc., with intent to destroy such child, shall be punished, etc., means an unborn child, so far developed as to be ordinarily quick, so far developed as to move or stir in the mother's womb. Sullivan v. State (Ga.) 48 S. E. 949, 950; Barrow v. State (Ga.) 48 S. E. 950, 951.

The statute making the assault of a "child" an aggravated assault, as applied to a male, means one not above the age of 14 years. Thompson v. State (Tex.) 80 S. W. 623, 624.

The word "children" has sometimes been held to include grandchildren, as where it can fairly be seen from the context that such was the intention of the testator as exhibited in his will. Lawrence v. Phillips, 71 N. E. 541, 542, 186 Mass. 320.

"It is a matter of common knowledge that in ordinary conversation and affairs of life the word 'child' is commonly used to designate a son or daughter, a male or female descendant of the first degree. It is safe to say that, standing alone, it is never understood to mean grandchildren." A testator bequeathed money to designated grandchildren, and then declared that the residue of his estate should go "to such of the children of my own blood begotten as shall survive me." The word "children," as used in the residuary clause, did not include grandchildren. Brown v. Brown (Neb.) 98 N. W. 718, 722.

Unless it is necessary to effectuate the manifest intention of a testator, the word "children" is a word of purchase. Jabine v. Sawyer (Ky.) 78 S. W. 140, 141.

The word "children" is a word of purchase, and not of limitation, and describes the persons who take. Where a testator devised real estate to his son and to his children, with a direction that the son should pay certain legacies, the son acquired only a life estate, and the children of the son living at the testator's death took the estate in remainder. Crawford v. Forest Oil Co., 57 Atl. 47, 53, 208 Pa. 5.

The word "children," as used in a will whereby a testator gave all his estate to his wife for life, and at her death the proceeds to his sons and daughters during their lives, and after the death of either of them he gave "to their child or children, should they leave any children at their death, the share held by my sons and daughters at the time of his or her death, but, should neither of my sons or daughters leave no heirs, then their share is to be divided between all of my grandchildren, share and share alike," meant "heirs of the body," and the testator's children took an estate in fee tail, which was enlarged by the statute into a fee simple. In re Vilsack's Estate, 57 Atl. 32, 33, 207 Pa. 611.

The word "children," in the statute of Kansas relating to descent (Gen. St. 1889, c. 33, §§ 20, 21, 29), which by Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1887, c. 119, § 5, 24 Stat. 389, are made to govern the descent of lands allotted in severalty to the members of certain tribes in the Indian Territory, and providing that children of the half blood shall inherit equally with the children of the whole blood, should be construed as meaning kindred. Finley v. Abner (U. S.) 129 Fed. 734, 735.

A deed of property in trust for the wife of the grantor for life, with remainder to her "children," inures to the benefit of children of the grantee by a subsequent marriage to another person after divorce from the grantor. Pettit v. Norman (Ky.) 82 S. W. 622, 623.

CHILD'S PART.

A "child's part," which a widow by statute is entitled to take in lieu of dower or the provisions made for her by will, is a full share to which a child would be entitled, subject to the debts of the estate and the cost of administration up to and including the point of actual distribution. Where a widow elects to take a child's part, and there is but one child and heir of the deceased husband, the widow is counted as a child, and she will be entitled to one-half of the estate after the payment of costs of administration. Benedict v. Wilmarth (Fla.) 35 South. 84, 87.

CHOSE IN ACTION.

As property, see "Property."

A life policy is a chose in action. It may be assigned or otherwise disposed of as other choses, subject to the condition that the assignee must have an insurable interest in the life of the insured, must be related by blood or marriage, and be so situated that the assignee or beneficiary has a pecuniary interest in the prolongation of the life of the insured, rather than in its early termination. Lockett v. Lockett (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1152, 1153.

Stock in a corporation is a "chose in action," and the certificates are the evidence of its existence and of its amount. Allen-West Commission Co. v. Grumbles (U. S.) 129 Fed. 287, 290, 63 O. C. A. 401.

CHURCH.

A church is "a religious congregation, comprising all those who worship together in one church." The more general definition is "the district in which such worshipers live." A deed to trustees, to be held in trust for "Trinity Parish, in the town of Moundsville, in the county of Marshall, in the state of West Virginia," does not create a valid trust, as the trust attempted to be created is void for uncertainty, as well to the beneficiaries as to the purpose of the trust, for there is nothing to indicate that the words "Trinity Parish" mean a church. Weaver v. Spurr (W. Va.) 48 S. E. 852, 856.

CIRCUMSTANCES.

Other circumstances, see "Other."

The word "circumstances," as used in an instruction in an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger, to the effect that if the jury found that plaintiff was injured, that the accident could not have happened under ordinary circumstances, had defendant exercised the utmost care, a presumption of negligence was raised, and that the burden was on defendant to rebut it, and to that end defendant must prove that, as to the matters which the circumstances indicated were the cause of the accident, defendant and its employes exercised that high degree of care which the law required of them, merely had reference to the claim made by plaintiff as to the manner in which the accident happened, and the instruction was not erroneous on the theory that it was left uncertain as to what circumstances the jury might consider. Fitch v. Mason City & C. L. Traction Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 618, 620.

CITATION.

"Notice" and "citation" are not synonymous. A citation is a writ of the court, adressed to an officer of the court, and commands him to do certain things. Service by publication is a citation, and therefore may be resorted to by a justice of the peace. Inasmuch as the powers of the justice of the peace in this respect are derived from the statute, and as by no provision of the statute is that court expressly authorized to acquire jurisdiction over a defendant by issuance and service of notice as provided by statute for district and county courts, we must hold the power wanting, unless "notice" and "citation" are synonymous terms. Carpenter v. Anderson (Tex.) 77 S. W. 291, 293.

CITIZEN.

A corporation is not a "citizen," within the meaning of that clause of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Brigham, 48 S. E. 348, 349, 120 Ga. 925; Humphreys v. State, 70 N. E. 957, 962, 70 Ohio St. 67, 65 L. R. A. 776 (quoting 10 Cyc. 150; Ducat v. City of Chicago, 48 Ill. 172, 95 Am. Dec. 529; Tatem v. Wright, 23 N. J. Law [3 Zab.] 429; Ducat v. Chicago, 77 U. S. [10 Wall.] 410, 19 L. Ed. 972).

A state is not a "citizen," within the meaning of the Constitution or the acts of Congress; hence the federal Circuit Court cannot take cognizance of a case instituted by a state against a corporation of another state as one presenting a controversy between citizens of different states. Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 598, 601, 194 U. S. 48, 48 L. Ed. 870 (citing Postal Tel. Co. v. Alabama, 155 U. S. 482, 487, 15 Sup. Ct. 192, 39 L. Ed. 231).

CITIZENSHIP.

"Citizenship" and "residence" are not synonymous terms. A person may reside in one state and be a citizen in another. An allegation, in a petition for removal of a suit pending in the state court to the federal court, that defendant is a citizen of a state other than that in which the suit is pending, is not equivalent to an allegation that he is a nonresident of that state, and does not show his right to a removal. Irving v. Smith (U. S.) 132 Fed. 207.

A distinction is to be observed between citizenship and residence for the purpose of suit. The question of suability and jurisdiction is not so much one of citizenship as of finding. If a citizen of one state is found, for the purpose of the lawful service of judicial process, in another, he may ordinarily be sued there. A partnership may be sued in any county in which one of the partners has such a residence as will confer upon the courts of that county jurisdiction over his person, regardless of the place of his citizenship. J. B. Pyron & Son v. Ruoha, 48 S. E. 434, 436, 120 Ga. 1060 (quoting Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 10, 28 L. Ed. 643; Williams v. East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co., 90 Ga. 519, 522, 16 S. E. 303).

As town, see "Town."

CITY GOVERNMENT.

"City government" usually means the mayor, board of aldermen, and common council of a city. Grace v. Board of Health of City of Newton, 135 Mass. 490, 494.

CITY LIMITS.

See "Within the City Limits."

CITY OFFICER.

A member of a municipal assembly is a city officer. State v. Kelly, 77 S. W. 996, 997, 103 Mo. App. 711.

CIVIL ACTION—CASE—SUIT—ETC.

"Every action for the enforcement or protection of private rights or the redress or prevention of private wrongs is a civil action." Harrigan v. Gilbert, 99 N. W. 909, 951, 121 Wis. 127.

Proceeding on appeal.

A proceeding on appeal from an order of a village board granting or refusing a license to sell intoxicating liquors is not a "civil case," within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 24, and a final order in such a proceeding is not reviewable on appeal. Halverstadt v. Berger (Neb.) 100 N. W. 934.

The phrase "process in civil actions" in Gen. St. 1902, § 566, providing that process in civil actions brought to the superior court must be made returnable to the next return day, or to the next but one, to which it can be made returnable, includes an appeal from the probate court to the superior court. Appeal of Campbell, 58 Atl. 554, 555, 76 Conn. 284.

Attachment proceeding.

An action which has for its purpose the subjection of property to the payment of a debt, and is commenced by attachment for that purpose, is a civil action, and must be brought "in the county where the defendant resides or may be found." First Nat. Bank v. Hesser (Okla.) 77 Pac. 36, 40.

Bastardy proceeding.

A proceeding in bastardy to compel the father or mother of a bastard child to give bond to indemnify the county from the subsequent maintenance of such child is a civil proceeding, and not a criminal prosecution. State v. Liles, 47 S. E. 750, 751, 184 N. C. 735.

Claim for damages for flowage.

A claim for damages for flowage of land by a milldam, under the mill acts, is not a "civil suit," within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 20, declaring that in civil suits and in controversies concerning property the party shall have a right to a trial by jury, except in cases where it has heretofore been otherwise practiced. Ingram v. Maine Water Co., 57 Atl. 893, 894, 98 Me. 566.

Divorce proceeding.

"Because marriage is declared to be a civil contract, it does not follow that a suit for divorce should be considered in the light of a civil action merely. It is a civil action, in so far as the divorce act in itself fails to prescribe rules of procedure. If the divorce act is to be made effective, resort must be had to the Civil Code, but in so far only as recourse must be had to the rules of civil procedure is it a civil action. As the marriage relation is a public concern, so divorce is a public concern." On the trial of an action for divorce, where defendant does not appear, the trial judge has the right, and it is his duty as representing the state, to elicit facts as to matrimonial offenses committed by plaintiff, and grant or withhold the decree accordingly. Elkenbury v. Burns (Ind.) 70 N. E. 837, 838.

Election contest.

An election contest is not a "civil case," within City Court Act, Laws 1901, p. 136, § 1, giving city courts concurrent jurisdiction with circuit courts in all civil cases. Brueggemann v. Young, 70 N. E. 292, 293, 208 Ill. 181.

Habeas corpus proceeding.

A proceeding in habeas corpus is in its nature civil. In re Jewett (Kan.) 77 Pac. 567, 569.

Prosecution for violation of ordinance.

The great weight of authority in the United States is to the effect that all prosecutions for the violation of ordinances are civil suits. A prosecution for being drunk and disorderly, in violation of an ordinance of an incorporated town, is a civil proceeding. Fortune v. Town of Wilburton (Ind. T.) 82 S. W. 738.

Proceeding to recover penalty.

Where a statute or ordinance imposes a penalty, unless special modes are prescribed, the sums must be collected by an action at law. Such action is a civil action. People v. Sloan, 90 N. Y. Supp. 762, 764.

CIVIL NATURE.

See "Suit of a Civil Nature."

CIVIL RIGHT.

"A civil right is a right accorded to every member of a district, community, or nation." Winnett v. Adams (Neb.) 99 N. W. 681, 684 (quoting Anderson, Law Dict.).

See "Adverse Claim."

Demand distinguished, see "Demand."

"The words 'to claim' are sometimes incorrectly used as synonymous with 'to think,' or 'to insist.' Their proper meaning is 'to challenge as a right,' or 'to demand as due.'" Hill v. Henry (N. J.) 57 Atl. 554, 555.

The word "claim," used either colloquially or definitely, means the assertion of a right, and, where the court stated that it was about to give instructions based on this claim of the defendant that he acted in self-defense, it refers to the assertion by the defendant that the killing was excusable, because committed by him in the exercise of the right of self defense. People v. Glover, 74 Pac. 745, 747, 141 Cal. 233.

An instruction that unless the jury believed that plaintiff, or his vendors, under whom he claims, owned or held the land in controversy in actual adverse possession, continuously, to a well-defined, marked boundary line, for 15 years prior to the alleged trespass, they should find for the defendants, is not fatally defective, because it does not state that plaintiff must have claimed, as well as held, such possession, although it is usual to use the word "claimed" in an instruction of such character. Vincent v. Willis (Ky.) 82 S. W. 583, 584.

"The word 'claim,' as used in the statute governing appeals from actions of county boards, is used in the sense of an assertion or a pretension." Sheldon v. Gage County Society of Agriculture (Neb.) 98 N. W. 1045.

The word "claims," within the statute requiring all claims against the county to be filed with the county clerk, referred only to those claims originating in contract, express or implied, between the claimant and the county, and not to claims for damages for torts committed. Gregg v. Board of Com'rs of Lake County (Colo.) 76 Pac. 376, 378.

A claim against a city by a property owner for damages to his premises resulting from the overflowing of a sewer is now within the charter of second-class cities (Laws 1896, p. 438, c. 182), known as the "White Charter," requiring all claims against the city for damages to property alleged to have been caused by negligence of the city or its officers to be presented to the common council. Ahrens v. City of Rochester, 90 N. Y. Supp. 744, 97 App. Div. 480.

Prior to the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition the bankrupt made an assignment of his claim on insurance policies constituting his sole assets, and the assignee rendered valuable services in attempting to collect the claims. On a trustee in bankruptcy being appointed, the assignee turned over to him the policies, with all proofs and claims, subject to a lien for allowances for the expenses incurred, and the trustee in bankruptcy subsequently settled the claims with the insurance companies. The claim of the assignee for expenses and services was an equitable claim, allowable by way of deduction from the fund realized for the benefit of creditors, to the extent of beneficial expenditure and service, and was not a claim against the bankrupt, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57, 30 Stat. 560, 561 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 3443, 3444]. In re Levitt, 126 Fed. 889, 891.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2718, authorizing reference of certain claims against a decedent's estate, is limited to claims which existed against the intestate, and does not authorize a reference of claims for funeral expenses. Genet v. Willock, 87 N. Y. Supp. 938, 93 App. Div. 588.

Judgment distinguished.

The word "claim," as used in the Code, relating to the liability of stockholders of a corporation, cannot be intended to be synonymous with the word "judgment"; hence a creditor whose claim has not been reduced to judgment may maintain an action against an insolvent corporation on behalf of himself and other creditors to enforce stockholders' liabilities, as defined by Rev. Codes 1899, § 2902, §§ 5767-5770, authorizing such an action. Marshall Wells Hardware Co. v. New Era Coal Co. (N. D.) 100 N. W. 1084, 1086.

CLAIM UPON LAND.

Tax liens held by the state are not interests in and claims upon the land on which they are a lien, within the meaning of Laws 1903, c. 234, § 6, p. 341, relating to the registration of land titles. National Bond & Security Co. v. Daskam, 97 N. W. 458, 91 Minn. 81.

CLASS.

A gift to a class is a gift of an aggregate sum to a body of persons uncertain in number at the time of the gift, to be ascertained at a future time, who are all to take in equal or in some other definite proportions; the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number. Herzog

v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 69 N. E. 283, 286, 177 N. Y. 86.

A devise to two persons, naming them, "with whom I live, and whom I regard and treat as my adopted daughters," is not a devise to a class, entitling one to the entire devise on the death of the other before the death of the testator. In re Hittell's Estate (Cal.) 75 Pac. 53, 54.

Where a testator, having sisters and children of deceased sisters, gave the balance of his estate to his lawful heirs, to be divided equally among them, the term "lawful heirs" constituted a single class, so that the distribution must be per capita, and not per stirpes. In re Griswold, 86 N. Y. Supp. 250, 252, 42 Misc. Rep. 230.

CLASS LEGISLATION.

In the exercise of the police power in establishing a day of rest, a large discretion must be allowed to the Legislature in determining what kind of labor or business should be prohibited, and what are and what are not works of necessity or charity; and unless the classification is manifestly purely arbitrary, and not founded on any substantial distinction or natural reason, the courts have no right to interfere with the exercise of legislative discretion, and the courts cannot hold such legislation unconstitutional, as being class legislation. Laws 1903, c. 362, prohibiting the keeping open of butcher shops for the sale of meats on Sunday, etc., is not "class legislation," within Const. art. 4, §§ 33, 34, prohibiting class legislation. State v. Justus, 98 N. W. 325, 326, 91 Minn. 447, 64 L. R. A. 510 (citing State v. Petit, 74 Minn. 376, 77 N. W. 225).

CLAUSE.

See "Residuary Clause."

CLEAN.

The term "clean" may be applied to a variety of merchandise, and its scope and meaning are within the comprehension of any one. Clean busheling scrap, like clean oats, or clean flour, or clean seed grain, needs no expert to define it. The term does not relate to the particular grade, but to the quality of the bunch sold, considered in its entirety. Lichtenstein v. Rabollasky, 90 N. Y. Supp. 247, 250, 98 App. Div. 516.

CLERK OF COURT.

As ministerial officer, see "Ministerial Officer."

COAL.

See "Available Coal."

Vein of coal synonymous with coal bed and coal seam, see "Vein."

COCOA BUTTER.

"Cocoa butter" is produced from the beans of the cacao or chocolate tree; the word "cocoa," used in this connection, being a corruption of the word "cacao." United States v. Oriental American Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 249.

COCOA BUTTERINE.

"Cocoa butterine," as provided for in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 282, 30 Stat. 172 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1652], consists of products made in imitation of cocoa butter, and adapted for use as a substitute therefor. United States v. Oriental American Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 249.

COLLATERAL

"Collateral" means on the side, or at one side, of a subject, and in this sense a bequest to any person not in the direct line of relationship would be properly termed a "collateral bequest," although the person was not akin to the testator. In re Campbell's Estate, 77 Pac. 674, 676, 143 Cal. 623.

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A collateral attack on a judgment is an attempt to avoid its binding force in a proceeding not instituted for one of the purposes aforesaid, as where, in an action of debt on the judgment, defendant attempts to deny the fact of indebtedness, or where, in a suit to try the title to property, a judgment is offered as a link in the chain of title, and the adverse party attempts to avoid its effect. Scudder v. Cox (Tex.) 80 S. W. 872, 873 (citing Crawford v. McDonald, 88 Tex. 630, 33 S. W. 327).

A collateral attack on a judgment is, in its general sense, any proceeding which is not instituted for the express purpose of annulling, correcting, or modifying such decree. The fact that the parties are the same, and that the defendants seek to attack the decree by allegations in their answer, cannot change the rule, or make the attack any the less a collateral one. It is well settled that judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction are not subject to collateral attack, unless they are void, and by "void" is meant that they are an absolute nullity. People v. McKelvey (Colo.) 74 Pac. 533, 534 (citing Cochrane v. Parker, 12 Colo. App. 169, 54 Pac. 1027).

Collateral attack is a proceeding aside from or outside of the regular proceeding in the case. A motion to set aside a default judgment on the ground of want of jurisdiction is a collateral attack. People v. Norris (Cal.) 77 Pac. 998, 999.

COLLECT.

Levy distinguished, see "Levy."

COLLECTED.

See "Amount Collected"; "Sums Collected."

The word "collected," as used in Laws 1896, p. 859, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 118, § 1, imposing an annual state tax on domestic insurance companies, and providing that the term "gross premiums" shall include such premiums as are "collected" from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance, applies to the latter subject with the same force as to the former. The act does not refer to what is paid out, for it permits no deduction, even for expenses, for what is paid in. The premium paid for reinsurance is an expense of the business, but a premium collected from reinsurance is part of the gross receipts from the corporate business, which is what the statute aims at. People v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 11, 177 N. Y. 515.

COLLUSION.

"Collusion," as that term is used in matrimonial actions, is an agreement between a husband and wife to procure a judgment dissolving the marriage contract, which judgment, if the facts were known, the court would not grant. Doeme v. Doeme, 89 N. Y. Supp. 215, 217, 96 App. Div. 284.

COLOR OF TITLE.

Color of title is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is not title. Color of title exists wherever there is a reasonable doubt regarding the validity of an apparent title, whether such doubt arises from the circumstances in which the land is held, the identity of the land conveyed, or the construction of the instrument under which the party in possession claims his title. Johnson v. Hurst (Idaho) 77 Pac. 784, 791 (citing Cameron v. United States, 148 U. S. 301, 308, 13 Sup. Ct. 595, 37 L. Ed. 459, 462).

COMBINATION IN RESTRAINT OF COMMERCE.

A combination by stockholders in two competing railway companies to form a stockholding corporation, which should acquire, in exchange for its own capital stock, a controlling interest in the capital stock of each of such railway companies, is a combination in restraint of interstate and international commerce, and violates Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 20 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200], declaring illegal every combination in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 452, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679.

COMFORT.

Some of the synonyms of "comfort" are "consolation," "contentment," "ease," "enjoyment," "happiness," "pleasure," and "satisfaction." It is a common English word. A person publishing a magazine under the name "Comfort" has a trade-name in such title, which is infringed by the use of the name "Home Comfort" for a magazine, entitling him to an injunction, without proof of damages. Gannert v. Rupert (U. S.) 127 Fed. 962, 963, 62 C. C. A. 594.

COMMENCED.

An action is "commenced" as to each defendant when the summons is served on him, and it is deemed to be pending from the time of such service until there is a final determination of the action. In case of service on a nonresident by publication, the action is commenced by the first publication. H. L. Spencer Co. v. Koell, 97 N. W. 974, 975, 91 Minn. 226.

COMMENCEMENT OF FORECLOSURE PROCEEDINGS.

By "commencement of foreclosure proceedings," in a fire policy providing that the same shall be void if with the knowledge of the insured foreclosure proceedings be commenced, is meant the institution of judicial proceedings for the enforcement of the mortgage; and waivers of legal delays, and other waivers of a nature to greatly facilitate and expedite the judicial proceedings, if ever begun, do not constitute of themselves the commencement of foreclosure proceedings. "Commencement of foreclosure proceedings" must be held to be synonymous with "filing of suit." Stenzel v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 35 South. 271, 273, 110 La. 1019, 98 Am. St. Rep. 481.

COMMERCE.

See "Combination in Restraint of Commerce"; "Regulate Commerce."

The business of insurance is not commerce in any proper sense, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. The commerce clause in the federal Constitution does not limit the power of the state to impose conditions on which a foreign insurance company may transact business in the state. Fisher v. Traders' Mut. Life Ins. Co. (N. C.) 48 S. E. 667, 669 (citing Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297).

Railroad companies are "instruments of commerce, and their business is commerce itself," and such companies operate "public highways established primarily for the convenience of the people, and therefore are subject to governmental control and regulation." Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 463, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679 (quoting Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n Case, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007, and citing Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co., 135 U. S. 641, 10 Sup. Ct. 965, 34 L. Ed. 295; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 139 U. S. 79, 11 Sup. Ct. 490, 35 L. Ed. 97; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 38 L. Ed. 1047, 4 Interstate Com. Rep. 545; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 43 L. Ed. 702).

COMMON CARRIER.

A telegraph company is in the nature of a common carrier, and, subject to reasonable regulations, is required to receive and promptly transmit and deliver all messages tendered in good faith. Cogdell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 47 S. E. 490, 491, 185 N. O. 431.

A company operating an elevator in its office building for the use of tenants and their visitors is a common carrier of passengers for hire. Goldsmith v. Holland Bldg. Co., 81 S. W. 1112, 1114, 182 Mo. 597.

Street railway companies are common carriers of passengers. As such they are bound to exercise for the safety of their patrons more than ordinary care. They are required to exercise the utmost skill, diligence, and foresight consistent with the business in which they are engaged, and are liable for the slightest negligence. Lincoln Traction Co. v. Heller (Neb.) 100 N. W. 197, 199 (citing Lincoln St. Ry. Co. v. McClellan, 54 Neb. 672, 74 N. W. 1074, 69 Am. St. Rep. 736).

COMMON LAW.

There is no "common law of the United States." When a common-law right is asserted, we look to the state in which the controversy originated. Judicial decisions of the state must determine how far the common law has been introduced in each state. Kennedy v. Delaware Cotton Co. (Del.) 58 Atl. 825, 828.

There is no common law of the United States. Rev. St. § 4965 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3414], imposing a penalty for infringement of the copyright of any map, picture, work of sculpture, etc., unlike section 4964, relating to books, does not give the proprietor a right to maintain a civil action at law to recover damages for the infringement, and, the exclusive right of property in such artistic productions being purely statutory, the remedy for infringement is limited to that prescribed by the statute; there being no common law of the United States which can be invoked to supplement such remedy. Walker v. Globe Newspaper Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 593, 596.

The phrase "common law of England," as used in section 2695 of the Wyoming Revised Statutes of 1899, was not intended to and does not include the judicial decisions of England upon the subject rendered subsequently to the independence of America. But, notwithstanding such decisions are not a part of the common law adopted by the state of Wyoming, and are not, therefore, binding upon the courts of that state, yet, as evidence of what the common law, as so adopted, is, they are entitled to respect, and in particular cases may properly be regarded as conclusive.—Johnson v. Union Pac. Coal Co. (Utah) 76 Pac. 1089, 1093.

COMMON-LAW CAUSE.

The phrase "common-law causes," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 916 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 684], providing that the party recovering a judgment in any common-law cause in any Circuit or District Court shall be entitled to similar remedies on the same by execution or otherwise to reach the property of the judgment debtor as are provided in like causes by the laws of the state in which such court is held, does not apply to judgments in criminal cases. Allen v. Clark, 128 Fed. 738, 740, 62 C. C. A. 58.

COMMON-LAW JURISDICTION.

Courts having "common-law jurisdiction," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 2165 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1329], relating to naturalization, are those which have the power to punish offenses, enforce rights, or redress wrongs recognized by the common law, or courts which are governed by the principles and rules of the common law. The term is used to distinguish courts which have some common-law jurisdiction from those which have no jurisdiction save in equity, in admiralty, or in matters not involving offenses or rights under the common law. Levin v. United States (U. S.) 128 F. 826, 832, 63 C. C. A. 476.

COMMON-LAW LIEN.

"Common-law liens arise by implication of law, and not by express contract." Where a corporation advanced money to a bankrupt with which to purchase tobacco to be shipped to the corporation for sale, under an agreement that the corporation was to have a lien on the tobacco so purchased, and that the debt for advanced commissions, insurance, etc., was to be "paid out of the proceeds of the sales when made," the lien of the corporation was not a common-law lien, personal to the corporation, but was an equitable lien, which attached to the claim and passed to the corporation's successor, which purchased its assets on its insolvency. Cincinnati Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Leslie & Whitaker's Trustee (Ky.) 78 S. W. 413, 415, 64 L. R. A. 219.

COMMON TOOLS OF TRADE

The phrase "common tools of trade," as used in an exemption statute, has uniformly been construed to refer, not to tools in common use by the debtor, regardless of their value, but to those simple and inexpensive appliances used in his trade. A dentist's chair is not exempt from levy and sale as a common tool of trade. Burt v. Stocks Coal Co., 46 S. E. 828, 829, 119 Ga. 629, 100 Am. St. Rep. 203.

COMMUNICATION.

See "Confidential Communication"; "Privileged Communication."

"Transactions and communications," within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting evidence of personal transactions and communications between interested persons and a decedent, embrace every variety of affairs which can form the subject of negotiation, interviews, or actions between persons, and include every method by which one person can derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition, or language of another. Holland v. Holland, 90 N. Y. Supp. 208, 211 (citing Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316).

COMMUNITY.

As partnership, see "Partnership."

COMMUNITY HOUSE.

See "Apartment House."

COMMUNITY OF INTEREST.

"Community of interest, in a common title or security, implies a mutual obligation not to impair it. It creates such a relation of trust and confidence that it is inequitable to permit one of the parties in interest to do anything to the prejudice of others, and when one of them obtains superior titles or liens he holds them in trust for the benefit of all who share in the common title or security, and who within a reasonable time after notice of his purchase contribute their share of his necessary expenditure." Booker v. Crocker (U. S.) 132 Fed. 7, 8.

COMMUNITY OF PROFITS.

"Community of profits," in reference to a partnership, means a proprietorship in them, distinguished from a personal claim upon the other associate; in other words, a property right in them from the start in one associate, as much as in another. Stipulating for a compensation in proportion to the profits or payable out of them will not confer the privileges or import the liabilities incident to a partnership, unless it confers a jus in re, as distinguished from a demand or chose in action. Altgelt v. Alamo Nat. Bank (Tex.) 79 S. W. 582, 586.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

The damages resulting from a personal injury to the wife are a part of the community property. Paine v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 77 Pac. 659, 660, 143 Cal. 654; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Campbell (Tex.) 81 S. W. 580, 581.

COMMUTATION.

Commutation is a passing from one state to another; an alteration; a change; the act of substituting one thing for another; a substitution of one sort of payment for another, or of a money payment in lieu of a performance of a compulsory duty or labor, or of a single payment in lieu of a number of successive payments, usually at a reduced rate. The judicial sale of property under a decree of foreclosure for what it will bring, although it be less than the amount of the taxes assessed and delinquent against it, cannot be said to be a commutation of taxes, within the meaning of Const. art. 9, § 6, prohibiting the commutation of taxes. Woodrough v. Douglas County (Neb.) 98 N. W. 1092, 1095.

COMPETITION.

See "Unfair Competition."

COMPLAINT.

See "Sworn Complaint."

COMPLETE DETERMINATION.

The phrase "complete determination of the controversy," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 452, providing that the court may determine the controversy as between the parties before it, where it can do so without prejudice to the rights of others, but, where a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must direct them to be brought in, means that when there are persons not parties, whose rights must be ascertained and settled before the rights of the parties to the suit can be determined, such other persons must be made parties. Shanks v. National Casket Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 839, 841, 95 App. Div. 187.

COMPLETE RECORD.

A clause in a fire policy, requiring the insured to keep a set of books which shall present "a complete record of business transacted, including all purchases, sales, and shipments, both for cash and credit," is not complied with where it appears that the only record of cash sales kept is a cash book, which only shows the amount of cash taken in at the end of each day, giving no indication of the source from which the cash is derived, whether from such sales, from the payment of past-due bills, or what not. Everett-Ridley-Ragan Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co. of Chicago, Ill. (Ga.) 48 S. E. 918.

COMPOSITION METAL.

So called "flitters," made from sheets of copper and zinc, and reduced to a fine condition for use in the same manner as bronze powder, is "composition metal," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 533, 30 Stat. 197 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1682], admitting free of duty all composition metal of which copper is a component material of chief value. Geo. Meier & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 128 Fed. 472.

COMPOUND.

See "Alcoholic Compounds"; "Chemical Compounds"; "Compromise."

COMPROMISE.

The words "or to compromise or compound any debt or claim" owing by the estate of their testator or intestate, in Laws 1893, p. 200, c. 100, amending Laws 1888, p. 928, c. 571, by which the surrogate was granted power to authorize executors and administrators to compromise or compound any debt or claim, indicate an intent of the Legislature to confer power on the surrogate to permit a settlement or compromise of the claim, either made for or against the estate. In re Gilman's Estate, 87 N. Y. S. 128, 129, 92 App. Div. 462.

CONCEALMENT.

See "Artful Concealment"; "Fraudulent Concealment."

CONCERN.

See "Local Concern."

CONCUBINAGE.

A statute punishing the taking away of any female under the age of 18 years from her father, etc., either for the purpose of prostitution or concubinage, is leveled at both "prostitution" and "concubinage," which are entirely separate and distinct offenses. "Concubinage" is defined by Webster to be "the cohabiting of a man and a woman who are not legally married; the state of being a concubine; a woman who cohabits with a man without being married"; and by the law dictionaries as a "species of loose, informal marriage, which took place among the ancients, and which is yet in use in some countries." State v. Adams, 78 S. W. 588, 590, 179 Mo. 334.

CONCURRENT HEREWITH.

The words "concurrent herewith," as used in a fire policy for $4,500, which provided that it should be void if the insured should procure other insurance, unless otherwise provided by agreement added to the policy, and which contained the clause, "$3,500 total insurance permitted concurrent herewith on buildings," etc. "Other insurance permitted concurrent herewith on stock" relates to the term "total insurance," and means that the total insurance must all concur with the insurance effected by the policy, and the policy limits the insurance, the limitation taking into account the amount written in the policy; and the policy did not authorize $3,500 additional insurance, and it was forfeited by the insured taking a policy for additional insurance on the same property from another company. Senor v. Western Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 79 S. W. 687, 689, 181 Mo. 104.

CONCURRENT JURISDICTION.

Concurrent jurisdiction, properly so called, on rivers, means the jurisdiction of two powers over one and the same place. It is in this sense that the words are used in Virginia Compact 1789, § 11, declaring that the jurisdiction of the proposed state of Kentucky on the Ohio river should be concurrent only with the states which may possess the opposite shores of the river. Hence jurisdiction is acquired by an Indiana court by service of process on the Ohio river on the Kentucky side of the low-water mark on the Indiana shore. Wedding v. Meyler, 24 Sup. Ct. 322, 324, 192 U. S. 573, 48 L. Ed. 570.

CONDEMNATION MONEY.

The term "condemnation money," mentioned in the conditions of a bond given under Code Civ. Proc. § 677, relating to appeal bonds in an action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, means the damages which the party failing in the action is adjudged or condemned to pay; and when the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the lower court, it found the condemnation mon ey against defendant, though the appeal in the Supreme Court was a trial de novo. Maloney v. Johnson-McLean Co. (Neb.) 100 N. W. 423, 424.

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDING.

Condemnation proceedings are special proceedings provided by statute. State v. District Court of Fifth Judicial District (Mont.) 74 Pac. 200.

The distinction between a condemnation suit and a proceeding to contest an election is plain. The one is to recover a judgment for the amount of the compensation and damages which the owner of private property has sustained by reason of the taking of his property for a public use, and may be said to be a case and falling within the language of the statute giving said courts concurrent jurisdiction with circuit courts in all civil cases, while the contest of an election is a proceeding instituted for the purpose of determining which of the contestants has received the greater number of votes of a particular office. Brueggemann v. Young, 70 N. E. 292, 294, 208 Ill. 181.

A proceeding to condemn is, in substance, a proceeding to compel a sale by the owner to the petitioner, and is justified only when the purpose for which the land is to be used is a public one. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Southern Ry. Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 657, 666.

CONDITION.

See "Good Condition"; "Terms and Conditions, Rights, and Privileges."

CONDITION OF PEONAGE.

The phrase "condition of peonage" means the actual status, physical and moral, with the inevitable incidents, to which the employé, servant, or debtor was reduced under that system, when held to involuntary performance or liquidation of his obligation. A condition of peonage, within the denunciation of Act March 2, 1867, c. 187, § 1, 14 Stat. 546 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 1266, 1267], is the illegal holding of a person to involuntary servitude to work out a debt or contract claimed to be due by the person so held to the person so holding. United States v. McClellan (U. S.) 127 Fed. 971, 975 (quoting Peonage Cases [U. S.] 123 Fed. 679).

CONDITION PRECEDENT.

A condition precedent is one that must happen or be performed before the estate dependent on it can arise or be enlarged. Frank v. Stratford-Hancock (Wyo.) 77 Pac. 134, 138.

CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

A condition subsequent defeats the estate in case it does not happen or is not performed. Frank v. Stratford-Hancock (Wyo.) 77 Pac. 134, 138.

A deed for a consideration alleged to have been nominal, conveying land to a city to be used as a burying ground, and forever kept, used, and inclosed in a decent and substantial manner, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever, in which the grantors made no record of any intention that the land should ever, under any circumstances, revert to them or their representatives, was not made on a "condition subsequent." Thornton v. City of Natchez (U. S.) 129 Fed. 84, 86, 63 O. C. A. 526.

CONDITIONAL.

The word "conditional," as used in a lease for a term of years, reciting that it is subject to the conditional limitations herein stated, and stipulating in the following paragraph that the occupation of the premises by the tenant and his family as a strictly private dwelling apartment is a specific consideration for the granting of the lease, has reference to a situation, state, or external circumstances. Schworer v. Connolly, 88 N. Y. Supp. 818, 820, 44 Misc. Rep. 222.

Statements in letters, concerning a note given by the writer, that he would pay when he was able, that he expected a raise of salary, and that he had other indebtedness to which he felt he must give preference, do not render the promise to pay conditional, so as to prevent it from removing the bar of limitations. Walker v. Freeman, 70 N. E. 595, 598, 209 Ill. 17.

CONDITIONALLY PRIVILEGED.

A defamatory publication which is "conditionally privileged" occupies a middle ground; that is, the publication is privileged, provided it was actuated by a sense of duty growing out of the action, and provided it was not malicious. When the court finds that the publication is conditionally privileged, the effect of the holding is to cast upon the plaintiff the burden of proving that malice prompted the act; not merely malice which arises by implication of law, but malice in fact, otherwise denominated "actual malice." Cranfill v. Hayden (Tex.) 80 S. W. 609, 613.

CONDONATION.

If, after an offense has been committed, and the offended party has become possessed of knowledge of the offense and of the means of proving it, the offended party elects to forego a remedy which the law affords, he or she is said to have "condoned the offense." Rogers v. Rogers (N. J.) 68 Atl. 822, 824.

CONDUCT.

See "Estoppel by Conduct"; "Unprofessional Conduct."

CONDUCTOR.

A conductor of a train is the superior in authority and grade in every train crew, and has charge of the train and its operations. All the other members of the crew are under his control and subject to his orders, which they must obey. He is the representative of the company, is vested with all its authority over the train and its crew, and charged with all the duties and responsibilities which the company owes to its employes. He is vice principal of the company, and it is liable for his negligence when acting in his official capacity. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Baldwin (Tenn.) 82 S. W. 487, 488.

CONFER TITLE OF NOBILITY.

To confer a title of nobility is to nominate to an order of persons to whom privileges are granted at the expense of the rest of the people. It is not necessarily hereditary and the objection to it arises more from the privileges supposed to be attached than to the otherwise empty title or order. Horst v. Moses, 48 Ala. 129, 142.

CONFESSION.

See "Judgment by Confession."
Admission distinguished, see "Admission."

A confession is a person's admission or declaration of his agency or participation in a crime, and is restricted to admissions of guilt. The term "confession" is restricted to acknowledgment of guilt, and is not a mere equivalent of words or statements. A statement which admits the commission of an act, but which also gives legal excuse or justification, is not a confession. Owens v. State, 48 S. E. 21, 22, 23, 120 Ga. 296 (citing People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632, 637; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 170; Davis v. State, 114 Ga. 104, 39 S. E. 906; Simmons v. State, 116 Ga. 583, 42 S. E. 779).

A confession is a voluntary acknowledgment of a person charged with a commission of crime that he is guilty of the offense. It is a voluntary declaration by a person charged with a crime of his agency or participation in the crime. It is not equivalent to statements, declarations, or admissions of facts criminating in their nature or tending to prove guilt. It is limited in its meaning to the criminal act, and is an acknowledgment or admission of participation in it. Offers by a person arrested for forging a check to settle the matter by paying the amount of the check, or a greater sum, were not confessions, so as to authorize an instruction on the subject of confessions, in a prosecution for the crime. Michaels v. People, 70 N. E. 747, 748, 208 Ill. 603 (citing 8 Cyc. 562; 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law [2d Ed.] 520; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 170; Johnson v. People, 197 Ill. 48, 64 N. E. 826).

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATION.

"Confidential communication," as used in Code, § 4608, providing that no practicing physician shall be allowed to disclose any confidential communication intrusted to him in his professional capacity and necessary and proper to enable him to discharge the functions of his office, is not to be restricted to the mere verbal statements made by the patient, but must be construed to include all knowledge or information acquired by the physician through his own observation or examination. In an action for injuries, an objection to a question put to the physician who had attended plaintiff as to whether he found plaintiff conscious or unconscious at the time he attended him, and whether plaintiff talked to persons in an intelligent way, was properly sustained. Battis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 543, 545.

CONFIRMATION.

See "Final Confirmation."

CONFUSION OF GOODS.

"The doctrine relating to confusion of goods has no application to cattle and horses and things of a similar nature that may be readily identified." McKnight v. United States (U. S.) 130 Féd. 659, 666 (citing The Idaho, 93 U. S. 575, 23 L. Ed. 978; Clafin v. Beaver [U. S.] 55 Fed. 576; Carlton v. Davis, 90 Mass. [8 Allen] 94; Moore v. Bowman, 47 N. H. 494; Capron v. Porter, 43 Conn. 383; Brown v. Bacon, 63 Tex. 595; Drake on Attachment [7th Ed.] § 199).

CONGRESS.

There is no such office as "Congress" known to the law. In ordinary parlance, where a candidate is elected as representative of the people of a district of a state to Congress, he is known and designated as "congressman," or a candidate for Congress while running; but in law there is no such office as Congress, nor can an election be held to elect a candidate for the office of Congress. Allison v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 1065.

CONNECTED WITH.

Appurtenant to synonymous, see "Appurtenant To."

In an action against an agent to recover moneys alleged to have been collected by him from a customer named, a counterclaim for commissions earned on sales made to such customer and alleged to have been withheld, under a custom between the parties by which the agent was authorized to pay his own commissions, is a proper subject of counterclaim, under Code Civ. Proc. § 501, subd. 1, as "connected with the subject of the action." Benton v. Moore, 87 N. Y. Supp. 717, 42 Misc. Rep. 660.

CONSENT.

"Consent" supposes a physical power to act, a moral power of acting, and a serious determination and a free use of powers. It is an act of reason accompanied with deliberation (Bouvier, Law Dict.). Though work on a highway done by the commissioner of highways is necessary, a town cannot be made liable therefor by confirmation or approval after the work is done, as that does not amount to consent, within Laws 1899, p. 108, c. 84, § 10, providing, if a highway shall be damaged or become unsafe, the commissioner of highways of the town may cause it to be immediately repaired, if consented to by the town board. People ex rel. Graham v. Studwell, 88 N. Y. Supp. 967, 969, 91 App. Div. 469.

Consent to the risk implies knowledge of the danger of the act to be performed and the performance of the act understandingly and without constraint. The essence of the matter is that the employé must thoroughly comprehend the risk, if it exceeds that ordinarily connected with such a task and freely accepted, instead of facing it reluctantly and under protest. He may be aware of the risk he encounters without assenting to it, because some coercive influence, such as fear of losing employment, controls him, and if he remains after complaining of the danger the risk is not assumed. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works (Mo.) 80 S. W. 292, 296.

CONSEQUENCE.

Cause distinguished, see "Cause."

CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES.

Consequential damages are those which are not the direct and necessary consequences of the wrongful conduct of the defendant, but merely the natural results thereof. Swain v. Tennessee Copper Co., 78 S. W. 93, 95, 111 Tenn. (3 Cates) 430; Cole v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & Iron Co., Id.

CONSIDERATION.

See "Adequate Consideration"; "Fair Consideration"; "Present Fair Consideration."

A consideration may be something beneficial to the promisor or disadvantageous to the promisee. A release of a legal right by the promisee is a sufficient consideration to support a contract. Wm. Deering & Co. v. Veal (Ky.) 78 S. W. 886, 887 (quoting Bish. Contracts, §§ 61-63).

CONSIGN.

"To consign" means to deliver into the care and control of another; to intrust or commit. A man cannot consign a thing to another by merely saying that he consigns it, any more than he can deliver it by mere words. Ryttenberg v. Schefer (U. S.) 131 Fed. 313, 321.

CONSOLIDATION.

"The natural meaning and inherent force of the word 'consolidation' are perfectly plain, although it is known that in some of the authorities the word is used loosely. It has its place in proceedings in equity or in admiralty, where several libels or petitions are by authority of the court combined in one, so that at the close only one decree is rendered." An order of the court directing that nine indictments against a defendant, charging the fraudulent use of the mails, shall be tried together and at the same time, is not a consolidation in the proper sense of the word. Betts v. United States (U. S.) 132 Fed. 228, 234.

Actions consolidated under Code Civ. Proc. § 1894, merged into one suit, and only a single judgment should be rendered settling the entire controversy. The consolidation of actions under this statute must be distinguished from what has been known for many years as the "consolidation rule," which was first devised and established by Lord Mansfield. Under that rule, where many cases were pending between the same parties in which the same issues were involved, one case was tried, and all proceedings in the other cases were stayed until after such trial. It must also be distinguished from the old practice in equity of consolidating equity cases. Under such practice, each case was decided upon its own pleadings and evidence. The consolidation in equity cases under this practice was practically consolidating them for the purpose of trial alone. Handley v. Sprinkle (Mont.) 77 Pac. 296-298.

CONSORTIUM.

See "Loss of Consortium."

CONSPICUOUS.

"Conspicuous" means "open to the view; catching the eye; easy to be seen; manifest; obvious to the sight; seen at a distance; exposed to the view; clearly visible; prominent and distinct." The word "conspicuous," as used in 2 Gen. St. N. J. p. 2672, § 138, authorizing railroad companies, by giving notice, to limit their responsibilities as carriers of baggage to $100 for every 100 pounds of baggage, and declaring that a general notice of the limitation of such responsibility, placed in a conspicuous place at or in the receiving office of such companies, where baggage is usually received by them for transportation, required a railroad company to post the notice in the baggage room, so that naturally, under the general surrounding circumstances, it would be open to the view, obvious to the sight, and catch the eye of the passenger of ordinary care and observation, and be seen by him in the course of checking his luggage. Williams v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 88 N. Y. Supp. 434, 436, 93 App. Div. 582 (quoting Century Dict. Worcester, Dict.).

CONSPIRACY.

A conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish an unlawful purpose. It is unlawful to deprive a mechanic or workman of work by force, threats, or intimidation of any kind. Erdman v. Mitchell, 56 Atl. 327, 331, 207 Pa. 79, 63 L. R. A. 534, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783.

A conspiracy is a combination between two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish an unlawful purpose, or to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means. Standard Oil Co. v. Doyle (Ky.) 82 S. W. 271, 275.

A combination of two or more to do the same thing by the same means is a conspiracy. Erdman v. Mitchell, 56 Atl. 327, 331, 207 Pa. 79, 63 L. R. A. 534, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783.

A conspiracy to violate Rev. St. § 5209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], by causing false entries to be made in the books of a national bank by an officer or agent thereof, for the purpose of defrauding the bank or others or deceiving an agent appointed to examine the affairs of the bank, is one to commit an offense against the United States, within the meaning of section 5440 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3676]. Scott v. United States (U. S.) 130 Fed. 429, 432.

CONSTITUTED BY THE ACT.

In Code Cr. Proc. § 444, providing that, on a trial for murder or manslaughter, if the act complained of is not proven to be the cause of death, the defendant may be convicted of assault in any degree constituted by the act and warranted by the evidence, "constituted by the act" means that the assault must form a component part of the act, of the wound indisputably fatal. People v. Schiavi, 89 N. Y. Supp. 564, 568, 96 App. Div. 479.

CONSTITUTION.

A constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges, as a fundamental law. Atkinson v. Woodmansee (Kan.) 74 Pac. 640, 644, 64 L. R. A. 325.

CONSTRUCTION.

See "Contemporaneous Construction."

CONSTRUCTIVE CONTRACT.

"A constructive contract is where duty defines it, instead of the contract defining the duty to be performed. Constructive contracts are fictions of law adopted to enforce the legal duties by actions of contract where no proper contract exists, express or implied." Plaintiff, defendant, and another were the sole owners of corporate stock. Certain negotiations conducted by defendant, who was acting for the other two owners of the stock, as well as for himself, resulted in a sale of the whole stock of the corporation, to be paid for in the stock of another corporation. In this negotiation defendant simply stipulated for a cash payment of a large sum of money to himself as a part of the consideration for his own stock, and paid no part thereof to his associates. He was liable to his associates severally under the doctrine of constructive contract. Graham v. Cummings, 57 Atl. 943, 949, 208 Pa. 516 (citing Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. [5 Casey] 465).

CONSTRUCTIVE DELIVERY.

To establish a constructive delivery by a ship of goods deposited on the wharf, it is necessary for the carrier to show that he separated the goods from the general bulk of the cargo, designated them, and gave due notice to the consignees of the time and place of their deposit and a reasonable time for their removal. The Titania (U. S.) 131 Fed. 229.

CONSTRUCTIVE MALICE.

See "Implied Malice."

CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

A corporation should be held to have constructive notice of only such facts as have been brought to the actual notice or attention of some one of its officers or agents, or of such facts only as have been constructively brought to the notice or attention of some one of its officers or agents by the actual notice of such other facts as would naturally put the officer or agent upon inquiry. Iowa Nat. Bank v. Sherman & Bratager (S. D.) 97 N. W. 12, 15.

CONSTRUCTIVE PRESENCE.

A constructive presence at the commission of an offense, so as to make one an accessory, is such as would enable him to take part in aiding the escape of the perpetrator, or giving him information of approaching danger, if necessary. Able v. Commonwealth, 68 Ky. (5 Bush) 698, 703.

CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.

Constructive trusts have no element of fraud in them, but the court merely uses the machinery of a trust for the purpose of affording redress in cases of fraud and in working out the equity of the complainant. The party guilty of the fraud is said in such cases to be a trustee ex maleficio, and will be decreed to hold the legal title for the use and benefit of the injured party, and to convey the same, when necessary for his protection, as when one has acquired the legal title to his property by unfair means. Avery v. Stewart (N. C.) 48 S. E. 775, 778.

CONSTRUE.

See "Strictly Construed."

CONTEMPORANEOUS CONSTRUCTION.

Contemporaneous construction is a rule of interpretation, but is not an absolute one. It does not preclude an inquiry by the court as to the original correctness of such construction. A custom of a department of the government, however long continued by successive officers, must yield to the positive language of the statute. If there be any ambiguity or doubt, then such a practice, begun early and continued long, would be in the highest degree persuasive, if not absolutely controlling, in its effect. Houghton v. Payne, 24 Sup. Ct. 590, 593, 194 U. S. 88, 48 L. Ed. 888 (citing Graham Case, 110 U. S. 219, 3 Sup. Ct. 582, 28 L. Ed. 126; Edwards v. Darby, 25 U. S. [12 Wheat.] 206, 6 L. Ed. 303; United States v. Temple, 105 U. S. 97, 26 L. Ed. 967; Swift & C. B. Co. v. United States, 105 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 1108; Rugles v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 526, 2 Sup. Ct. 832, 27 L. Ed. 812).

CONTEMPT.

See "Judicial Contempt."

The power to punish for contempt is essentially a judicial power, except in the limited degree in which it inheres in legislative body. It can be exercised only by a tribunal possessing judicial functions. State ex rel. Haughey v. Ryan, 81 S. W. 435, 436, 182 Mo. 849.

Words written or spoken at a place other than where the court is held, and not so near thereto as to interfere with the proceeding of the court, do not render the author liable. Any loud noise or other disturbance in the presence of the court, or in the street or other place so near thereto as to interfere with the orderly proceedings of the court, would undoubtedly tend to obstruct the administration of justice, and under such circumstances the court is empowered to summarily punish for contempt. Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 95, 98; In re Daniels, Id.

The willful violation of an injunction by a party to the cause is a contempt of court, constituting a specific criminal offense. Bullock Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 105, 106, 63 C. A. 607.

CONTEMPT PROCEEDING.

As criminal proceeding, see "Criminal Proceeding."

A contempt proceeding is sui generis. It is criminal in its nature, in that the party is charged with doing something forbidden, and, if found guilty, is punished. Yet it may be resorted to in civil, as well as criminal, actions, and also independently of any civil or criminal action. Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 665, 666, 194 U. S. 324, 48 L. Ed. 997.

CONTEST.

See "Election Contest."

CONTINGENT ESTATE.

A future estate is contingent, while the person to whom or the event on which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. In re Ryder, 89 N. Y. Supp. 460, 462, 43 Misc. Rep. 476.

The rule for determining whether an estate bestowed by a will is vested or contingent is that, where the time of division or payment is of the substance of the gift, the legacy is contingent; when time is mentioned only as a qualifying clause of the payment or division, then the legacy is vested; or, in other words, legacies payable after the death of the testator are either vested or contingent, and when the testator annexes time to the payment only the legacy will be vested, but if of the gift itself it will be contingent. Johnson v. Terry, 36 South. 775, 776, 139 Ala. 614.

CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

See, also, "Vested Remainder."

"A contingent remainder is one limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person or upon a dubious or uncertain event." Where testator's will provided that the widow should have the sole use of all the property during her life, save in case of her remarriage, when the estate was to be divided between her and her children, or the survivors of them, their heirs, or legal representatives, and on her death unmarried it was to be divided between the children or the survivors of them, the remainders were contingent. Thompson v. Adams (Ill.) 69 N. E. 1, 3, 205 Ill. 552 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. 168).

CONTINGENTLY.

The word "contingently," in Code Civ. Proc. § 2662, providing that a person entitled absolutely or contingently to administration may present to the surrogate court a petition praying for letters to himself, means a person to whom at the time the petition is filed letters would issue, if persons entitled thereto with priority did not take. In re Ferrigan, 87 N. Y. Supp. 16, 17, 92 App. Div. 376.

CONTINUANCE IN OFFICE.

Const. art. 6, § 25, declaring that the compensation of judges of the superior and circuit courts in Cook county shall not be changed during their continuance in office, refers to the term of office, and not to the individual, so that Laws 1901, p. 207, providing that judges of the circuit and superior courts of Cook county hereafter to be elected shall receive $10,000 per year, instead of $7,000, does not entitle a judge, elected after the passage of the act to complete the unexpired term of a judge elected before the passage of the act, to receive a salary of $10,000. Foreman v. People, 71 N. E. 35, 37, 209 Ill. 567.

CONTINUED DESERTION.

A continued desertion for the space of three years, within the divorce law, is a desertion for three years consecutively. Distinct and separate intervals cannot be combined together to make out the period. Gallard v. Gallard, 23 Miss. 152, 153.

CONTINUING COVENANT.

A covenant to build within a given time is not a continuing covenant. A covenant to pay rent by installments, to keep the premises in repair, to keep them insured, to pay the taxes, to properly cultivate the land, and many others that indicate or necessarily imply the doing of the stipulated acts successively, or as often as occasion may require, are continuing covenants; but the covenant to repair or insure on or before a time certain or forthwith, to pay a gross sum as rent for the term, or not to assign the lease, and others of a like character, are not continuing covenants. McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384, 395.

CONTINUING GUARANTY.

A continuing guaranty is defined to be a guaranty relating to a future liability of the principal, under successive transactions, which either continue his liability or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied. White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Courtney, 75 Pac. 296, 297, 141 Cal. 674.

CONTRABAND.

The right of property in market quotations is not "contraband," because it is susceptible of bad uses, as well as good; hence the right of property in market quotations, based on the transactions of an exchange, and the right to be protected in such property, are not affected by the fact that such quotations may be used for unlawful, as well as lawful, purposes. Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. L. A. Kinsey Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 507, 513.

CONTRACT.

See "Constructive Contract"; "Entire Contract"; "Founded Upon a Contract"; "Gaming Contract"; "Liberty of Contract"; "Maritime Contract"; "Vicinity Contract."

See "Shall be Contracted."

A contract is a voluntary agreement between two parties; the coming together of two minds by a common intent. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co., 47 S. E. 765, 767, 135 N. C. 682.

"A writing is not a contract, when it fails to express that on which the minds of the parties met, and courts freely exercise the power to correct mistakes when the proof leaves no doubt that the real contract was something else." Wolfgram v. Town of Schoepke (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1054, 1056.

An ordinary passenger ticket is not necessarily a "contract," within the scope of the rule excluding oral evidence of the contents of a written instrument. Coine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 99 N. W. 134, 135, 123 Iowa, 458.

The word "contracts," as used in the law of Illinois relating to the Chicago City Railways, and providing that all deeds of transfer of rights, privileges, or franchises between railway corporations, or any two of them, and all contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings made, entered into, or given, and as made or amended by and between the common council of the city and any one or more of the railway corporations respecting the location, use, or exclusion of railways in or upon the streets, or any of them, of the city, etc., refers to the stipulated arrangements between the railway companies and the city as to the manner of occupancy of the streets. Govin v. City of Chicago (U. S.) 132 Fed. 848, 857.

The term "contract or other obligation," in Const. art. 13, § 4, providing that a mortgage, deed of trust, or other obligation by which a deed is secured shall for the purpose of taxation be treated as an interest in property, were inserted to cover any and all possible contracts of lien upon realty which the ingenuity of lawyers might attempt to devise to evade the constitutional requirement. Bank of Woodland v. Pierce (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1012, 1013.

CONTRACT IN WRITING.

See "Unconditional Contract in Writing"; "Written Contract."

CONTRACT OF CARRIAGE.

"A contract of carriage" is, in effect, that the carrier, in consideration of the payment of the rate demanded, will use all possible care and diligence in delivering the passenger safely and promptly at the place of destination. The utmost care is contracted for, and, while the carrier is not an insurer of the safety of the passenger, he does guaranty that the passenger shall receive the utmost care, and any failure to provide the same is a breach of his statutory duty, and of the duty imposed by the contract of carriage, and negligence, for which he is liable. Tailon v. Mears, 74 Pac. 421, 423, 29 Mont. 161.

CONTRACT OF INSURANCE.

All contracts of insurance, see "All."

CONTRACT OF SALE.

By statute, to the completion of a contract of sale four things are essential: (1) Parties legally capable of contracting; (2) their consent legally given; (3) a thing; and (4) a price. Werner Sawmill Co. v. O'Shee, 35 South. 919, 920, 111 La. 817.

A contract of sale involves an offer to buy or to sell, and an acceptance of that offer. An offer may be withdrawn before acceptance, and a bare offer is ordinarily held to be withdrawn, unless accepted immediately. The offer may be accompanied by a promise not to withdraw it within a specified time. In that case it may be accepted within the time specified before an actual withdrawal. The promise not to withdraw is without consideration and cannot be enforced. The power to withdraw an offer or retract a promise to keep such offer open is a valuable advantage, which may itself be the subject of sale, and an option contract is the sale and purchase of this advantage or right belonging to the owner of the property. Patterson v. Farmington St. Ry. Co., 57 Atl. 853, 858, 76 Conn. 628.

An agreement to sell realty, "cash on delivery of deed, or one-half on time, if terms can be agreed on," is a mere option, and not a contract for a sale. Wallace v. Figone (Mo.) 81 S. W. 492, 493.

An agreement between two persons that one shall purchase land on joint account is not a "contract for sale of lands," within the statute of frauds. Evans v. Green, 23 Miss. 294, 295.

The term "contract," in Gen. St. 1902, § 4864, providing that all conditional contracts for the sale of personal property shall be in writing, describing the property, was not used as meaning the particular form of instrument by which a conditional sale might be made. An order given for the purchase of a cash register, signed and acknowledged by the buyer, stating the names of the parties to the transaction, the price, etc., and that the title was to remain in the seller until paid for, when acknowledged and recorded, constituted a sufficient contract within such section. National Cash Register Co. v. Leeko, 58 Atl. 967, 77 Conn. 276.

CONTRACTOR.

See "Independent Contractor."

Although in a general sense every person who enters into a contract may be called a "contractor," yet that word, for want of a better one, has come to be used with special reference to a person who, in the pursuit of an independent business, undertakes to do a specific piece of work for other persons, using his own means and methods, without submitting himself to their control in respect to all its details. The true test of a contractor would seem to be that he renders service in the course of an independent occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as the means by which it is accomplished. Jahn's Adm'r v. Wm. H. McKnight & Co. (Ky.) 78 S. W. 862, 863 (quoting Shear. & R. Neg. § 164).

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See "Free from Contributory Negligence"; "Plea of Contributory Negligence."

Assumption of risk distinguished, see "Assumption of Risk."

Contributory negligence is the want of ordinary care upon the part of a person injured by the actionable negligence of another, combining and concurring with that negligence, and contributing to the injury as a proximate cause thereof, without which the injury would not have occurred. Hone v. Mammoth Min. Co., 75 Pac. 381, 383, 27 Utah, 168 (citing 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 371).

Negligence of the plaintiff, to constitute contributory negligence, must be such negligence as directly and proximately contributes to the infliction of the injury. Brister & Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Miss.) 36 South. 142, 144.

An employé is guilty of contributory negligence, which will defeat his right to recover for injuries sustained in the course of his employment, where such injuries substantially resulted from dangers so obvious and threatening that a reasonably prudent man under similar circumstances would have avoided them, if in his power to do so. Neeley v. Southwestern Cotton Seed Oil Co., 75 Pac. 537, 541, 13 Okl. 356, 64 L. R. A. 145 (citing Kane v. Northern Cent. Ry. Co., 128 U. S. 91, 95, 9 Sup. Ct. 16, 17, 32 L. Ed. 339).

An instruction which, while purporting to give a legal definition of contributory negligence, demands that such negligence shall be found the sole and direct cause of the accident, is incorrect. Hanheide v. St. Louis Transit Co., 78 S. W. 820, 822, 104 Mo. App. 323.

CONTROL

The charter of a city, authorizing the council to "direct and control" the location of railroad tracks, does not include the power to authorize the construction of railroads and the exercise of the right of eminent domain. It merely vests in the council as part of the police power, to be exercised in providing for the public safety and convenience in the use of streets and alleys, a supervision over the location of railroad tracks, where the authority to construct the railroad already exists. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527, 529, 46 N. W. 75.

The words "control and direction," in Laws 1859, p. 359, c. 143, as amended by Laws 1889, p. 7, c. 7, providing that the free bridge over the Mohawk river between certain towns shall be under the control and direction of the commissioners of highways of the towns, were of no broader significance, with reference to the duties and powers of the commissioners of highways of the two towns in question, than the words "care and superintendence" in the highway law, with reference to the duties and powers of commissioners of highways in the towns of the state. Town of Palatine v. Canajoharie Water Supply Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 412, 414, 90 App. Div. 548.

The words "limit and control," as used in Acts 1902, p. 420, c. 300, entitled "An act to limit and control the expenditure of money upon public highways" by a designated county, are sufficiently broad to cover a provision in the body of the act prohibiting the county commissioners from levying taxes on the assessable property of the county for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and repairing any highway bridge or public road not in whole or in part within the county; and hence the act is not in conflict with Const. art. 3, § 29, providing that every law shall express but one subject, which shall be described in its title. Queen Anne's County Com'rs v. Talbot County Com'rs (Md.) 57 Atl. 1, 3.

CONTROVERSY.

See "Amount in Controversy."

An appeal lies to the federal Supreme Court, under Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 6, 26 Stat. 828 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 549], from a judgment of a Circuit Court of Appeals, entered on an appeal from a judgment of a court of bankruptcy, sustaining a title to property in the possession of a trustee in bankruptcy, asserted by intervention, raising a distinct and separable issue, since the controversy may be regarded as one of those "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings," over which the Circuit Court of Appeals could, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24a, 30 Stat. 553 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3431], exercise appellate jurisdiction as in other cases. Hewitt v. Berlin Mach. Works, 24 Sup. Ct. 690, 691, 194 U. S. 296, 48 L. Ed. 986.

A claim for damage for the flowage of land by a milldam under the mill acts is not a "controversy concerning property," within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 20, declaring that in civil suits and in controversies concerning property the party shall have a right to a trial by jury, except in cases where it has heretofore been otherwise practiced. Ingram v. Maine Water Co., 57 Atl. 893, 894, 98 Me. 568.

CONVENTION.

"A convention, within the meaning of the statute relating to nominations [for public office], is an organized assembly of delegates or electors representing a political party or principle. Such a convention may name candidates for public offices to be filled by any public election within this state. All nominations made by such conventions are required to be certified in the prescribed manner." A county central committee of a political party called a convention for a certain time and place, and a majority of the committee thereafter selected a building for holding it, of which all had notice. A minority of the committee selected another building. At the first place a convention was had, which was called to order by the chairman of the committee, and, being organized in the usual manner, proceeded to make the nominations provided for in the call. At the second place certain delegates, who did not attend the other convention, met, were called to order by a member of the committee, organized, and made nominations for the same offices. The first convention was the regular convention, and its nominees were entitled to have their names placed on the ballot as the nominees of the party. State v. Metcalf (S. D.) 100 N. W. 923, 925.

CONVERSION.

See "Equitable Conversion."

Conversion may be shown by the exercise of control over the property inconsistent with the right of the owner, and by excluding him from the possession, or depriving him of it. McGonigle v. Victor H. J. Belle Isle Co., 71 N. E. 569, 571, 186 Mass. 310.

The word "conversion" means "detaining goods, so as to deprive the person entitled to the possession of them of his dominion over them." Where, in an action for conversion of certain stock, defendant's answer expressly denied plaintiff's title, and alleged defendant's possession of the stock and dividends, and its refusal to surrender them to plaintiff, and the court found that the defendant had converted such stock and dividends to its own use, the finding was a sufficient finding that defendant was in possession of the stock and dividends, and that it denied and acted in defiance of plaintiff's title. Eureka County Bank v. Clarke (U. S.) 130 Fed. 325, 328 (quoting Burroughs v. Bayne, 5 Hurl. & N. 296).

The word "conversion," as used in an indictment of an officer of a national bank, under Rev. St. § 5209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], for misapplication of the funds or property of the bank, means the officer's misapplication of the funds or property of the bank by unlawfully and fraudulently converting the same to his own use. United States v. Eastman (U. S.) 132 Fed. 551, 553.

Delay.

Mere delay in the delivery of goods by a carrier does not constitute a conversion. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Tyler Coffin Co. (Tex.) 81 S. W. 826, 827.

Delay on the part of a carrier does not constitute a conversion of the goods, no matter how long continued, so as to make him liable for their value.—Ryland & Rankin v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 923, 924.

Trespass distinguished.

"The distinction between trespass and conversion is this: That trespass is an unlawful taking, as, for example, the unlawful removal of the property, while conversion is an unlawful taking or keeping, in the exercise, legally considered, of the right of ownership. A mere seizure or unlawful handling may amount to trespass, while conversion is usually characterized by a usurpation of ownership." Montgomery Water Power Co. v. William A. Chapman & Co., 126 Fed. 68, 72, 61 C. C. A. 124 (citing Fouldes v. Willoughby, 8 Mees. & W. 540; Bigelow on Torts [7th Ed.] 510).

CONVEY.

See "Sell and Convey."

As used in a constitutional provision that the real and personal property of a married woman shall remain her sole and separate estate, shall not be liable for any debts of her husband, and may be devised and bequeathed, and, with the written consent of her husband, conveyed by her, as if she were unmarried, the word "convey" includes gift, and a married woman may dispose of her property by gift without the consent of her husband, except in those cases where a written instrument or conveyance is required to make a valid gift. Vann v. Edwards, 47 S. E. 784, 787, 135 N. C. 661.

By statute the words "grant or convey" in a deed carry with them an implied warranty that the estate conveyed is at the time of the execution of the deed free from incumbrances, unless restrained by express terms contained therein. Rotan v. Hays (Tex.) 77 S. W. 654, 655.

CONVEY AND WARRANT.

The words of a grant, "convey and warrant," convey the fee, unless they are limited to a lesser estate by words found in the granting clause or in the habendum of the deed, if it contain an habendum. They may be used, however, in conveying a life estate or an estate for years, and words limiting the estate conveyed to an estate of the character of either of the two last mentioned are not inconsistent with such words of grant; and where there is language, either in the granting clause or in the habendum of the deed, limiting the estate conveyed by such granting words to one less in extent than a fee, such words of limitation will be given effect. Walker v. Shepard, 71 N. E. 422, 428, 210 Ill. 100.

CONVEYANCE.

The terms "conveyed" and "conveyance" are used in several senses. In the strict legal sense, the latter term imports a transfer of legal title to land; but it is also habitually used by lawyers to denote any transfer of title, legal or equitable, and the last is also the popular sense of the term. Adams v. Hopkins, 77 Pac. 712, 719, 144 Cal. 19.

An instrument which does not purport to convey any present interest in an existing patent, or one for which an application is pending, is not a "conveyance" within Rev. St. U. S. § 4898 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3387]. National Cash Register Co. v. New Columbus Watch Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 114, 116, 63 C. C. A. 616.

CONVICT.

A person confined in state's prison under a sentence of death is a "convict" within Laws 1889, p. 511, c. 382, § 40, authorizing the superintendent of state prisons to make regulations for record of photographs and other means of identifying each convict. Molineux v. Collins, 69 N. E. 727, 728, 177 N. Y. 395, 18 N. Y. Cr. R. 201, 65 L. R. A. 104.

COPY.

A correct photographic copy of an application for life insurance, reduced in size, but legible, attached to the policy, constituted a compliance with the Pennsylvania laws (Act May 11, 1881, P. L. p. 20), requiring insurance companies to attach a "copy" of the application to policies, where such application is referred to and made a part of the policy. Arter v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 768, 769.

CORPORATE FRANCHISE.

Whenever a corporation is legally formed, the right to be and exist as such, and, as a corporation, to do the business specified in its articles, whether it be a banking business, grocery business, or the operation of a railroad, or any other business in which individuals may engage without grant from the state, is a grant by the sovereign power—a valuable right, which is generally known as the "corporate franchise." Bank of California v. City & County of San Francisco, 75 Pac. 832, 834, 142 Cal. 276, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130.

CORPORATE PURPOSE.

The construction and maintenance of a bridge outside of the territorial boundaries of a city, the purpose of which is not to serve the convenience of its inhabitants, but the convenience of the inhabitants of an outlying district, and to promote the business and commercial interests of the city by increasing the trade of its business men, is not such a "corporate purpose" as will sustain the exercise of the power of taxation. Manning v. City of Devils Lake (N. D.) 99 N. W. 51, 53, 95 L. R. A. 187 (quoting 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] § 736).

CORPORATION.

See "Manufacturing Corporation"; "Mechanical Corporation"; "Moneyed Corporation"; "Municipal Corporation"; "Private Corporation"; "Public Corporation"; "Quasi Corporation"; "Railroad Corporation."

As citizen, see "Citizen."

As person, see "Person."

A "corporation" is the creature of the state, and every corporation owes its existence and its right to incorporate to express legislative enactment. Felner v. Reiss, 90 N. Y. Supp. 568, 571.

A "corporation" is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. In State v. Topeka Water Co., 61 Kan. 547, 558, 60 Pac. 337, 341, it is said: "A corporation exists by the will of a sovereign power. To this superior authority it owes an allegiance which it cannot abjure." Williams v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. (Kan.) 74 Pac. 600, 602, 64 L. R. A. 794.

"A corporation is an entirety, irrespective of the persons who own all of its stock, and the fact that one person owns all the stock does not make him and the corporation one and the same person." Control of the property of a corporation is not in its stockholders. A majority of the stockholders control the election of its officers and agents, but the control of the company's property is in the corporation itself, and its officers and agents, who are intrusted with such control by virtue of the by-laws. Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co., 57 Atl. 1001, 1007, 98 Me. 579, 66 L. R. A. 387 (citing Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 115 U. S. 587, 6 Sup. Ct. 194, 29 L. Ed. 499; Exchange Bank v. Macon Construction Co., 97 Ga. 1, 25 S. E. 326, 33 L. R. A. 800; Button v. Hoffman, 61 Wis. 20, 20 N. W. 687, 50 Am. Rep. 131; Mor. Priv. Corp. § 227).

"A corporation is a creature of law. It has no powers except those expressly granted or necessarily implied, and none can be implied except such as are necessary to the exercise and enjoyment of those expressly granted. Powers which are not thus granted or implied are defined." Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Evansville (U. S.) 127 Fed. 187, 191 (quoting Tippencanoe County Com'rs v. Lafayette, M. & B. Ry. Co., 50 Ind. 85).

The courts hold that the general word "corporation" must be restricted to mean private or ordinary business corporations, and not extended to embrace municipal corporations and bodies politic and corporate. Emes v. Fowler, 89 N. Y. Supp. 685, 688, 43 Misc. Rep. 603 (citing Wallace v. Lawyer, 54 Ind. 501, 23 Am. Rep. 661).

Road district.

A road district is not a corporation. Custer County Bank v. Custer County (S. D.) 100 N. W. 424, 426.

CORPUS DELICTI.

The phrase "corpus delicti," as used in criminal law, means the substance of the crime. State v. Knapp, 71 N. E. 705, 707, 70 Ohio St. 380.

COST.

See "Actual Cost."

COSTS.

All costs herein expended, see "All."

The word "costs," as used in Highway Law, § 92, Laws 1890, p. 1195, c. 568, providing that, in all cases of assessment of damages by commissioners appointed by the court, the costs thereof shall be paid by the town, has a well-defined significance, and is not used as synonymous with "expense," but must be taken to mean costs which are recoverable under the statute requiring the amount to be paid by the unsuccessful party to the successful party. In re Peterson, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1014, 1015, 94 App. Div. 143.

Costs are part of the judgment, as interest is to the principal, and the costs are to be paid by the party cast to the judgment creditor, who has paid them, without reference to any right which the clerk may originally have had, and without being subject to the plea of prescription which may be pleaded against the clerk. State v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co., 36 South. 205, 206, 112 La. 1.

Attorney's fees.

Attorney's fees cannot be taxed as "costs" under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5604, authorizing taxation of costs in partition suits, including fees of referee and other disbursements. Legg v. Legg, 75 Pac. 130, 132, 34 Wash. 132.

COSTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

The term "costs and disbursements" has a settled and technical meaning, and signifies the statutory costs and the disbursements taxable in favor of the prevailing party in a civil action. Brown v. Fitcher, 97 N. W. 416, 417, 91 Minn. 41.

COUNT.

A "count" in a civil procedure in common law is sometimes synonymous with the "declaration," its original signification; but it is now generally considered as a part of a declaration wherein the plaintiff sets forth a distinct cause of action. Ryan v. Riddle (Mo.) 82 S. W. 1117, 1118.

"All of the Codes require that the different causes of action should be separately stated; in other words, each must be set forth in a separate and distinct division of the complaint or petition in such a manner that each of these divisions might, if taken alone, be the substance of an independent action. In fact, the whole proceeding is the combining of several actions into one. At common law these separate divisions of the declaration were termed 'counts,' and that word is still used by text-writers and judges, although, with one or two exceptions, it is not authorized by the Codes; and it tends to produce confusion and misapprehension, since the common-law 'count' was substantially a very different thing from the 'cause of action' of the new procedure." First Nat. Bank v. D. S. B. Johnson Land Mortg. Co. (S. D.) 97 N. W. 743, 749 (quoting Pom. Rem. & Rem. § 442).

COUNTERCLAIM.

As answer, see "Answer."

The word "counterclaim," as used in Court Rules, div. 5, § 3 (26 Atl. viii), which provides that the withdrawal of an action after a cross-complaint or counterclaim has been filed therein shall not impair defendant's right to prosecute such counterclaim as fully as if the action had not been withdrawn, includes defenses pleaded by way of set-off, and defendant is entitled to a trial thereof notwithstanding plaintiff's withdrawal of his cause of action. Boothe v. Armstrong, 57 Atl. 173, 174, 76 Conn. 530.

A counterclaim, when established, must in some way qualify or defeat the judgment to which a plaintiff is otherwise entitled. In a foreclosure suit a defendant who is personally liable for the debt, or whose land is bound by the lien, may probably introduce an offset to reduce or extinguish the claim. But where his personal liability is not in question, and where he disclaims all interest in the mortgaged premises, he cannot demand a judgment against the plaintiff on a note, bond, or covenant. Meyer v. Quiggle, 74 Pac. 40, 41, 140 Cal. 495 (citing National Fire Ins. Co. v. McKay, 21 N. Y. 191).

Code Civ. Proc. § 101, defines a counterclaim as one arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. In an action to recover a sum subscribed by defendant to aid plaintiff in holding a street fair in a city, defendant answered, and alleged that he paid to plaintiff a certain sum for the privilege of operating his usual place of business in the city, and for the purpose of feet frontage, which plaintiff unlawfully forced him to pay, under threats of prosecution; that, when defendant paid said amount to plaintiff, plaintiff expressly agreed that no further saloons or other places for the sale of intoxicating liquors, other than those established, would be allowed to do business in such neighborhood; that the midway of said street fair was situated near the place of business of defendant, which fact was held out as an inducement for him to pay said amount to the plaintiff, as plaintiff then told him no intoxicating liquors would be sold therein; that plaintiff breached his agreement, thereby damaging defendant in a specified sum, for which amount he asked judgment. The contract or transaction set forth in the answer was wholly different from that set forth in the petition, and was in no way connected therewith, and hence not a counterclaim. Mullins v. South Omaha Street Fair Ass'n (Neb.) 99 N. W. 521, 522.

COUNTY.

As person, see "Person."

As quasi corporation, see "Quasi Corporation."

The county is a municipal body, and as such is an arm or instrument of the state to carry out purposes of government; but it is not so highly organized as the municipal corporation proper (town or city), which is also an arm of the state government. Grain-ger County v. State (Tenn.) 80 S. W. 750, 754.

"A county is one of the territorial divisions of a state, created for public political purposes connected with the administration of the state government, and, being in its nature and objects a municipal corporation, the Legislature may exercise control over the county agencies, and require such public duties and functions to be performed by them as fall within the general scope and objects of the municipal organizations." A county may be required to contribute towards the repair of a bridge abutting in such county, although it is located mainly within the statutory jurisdiction of the adjoining county. Dodge County v. Saunders County (Neb.) 100 N. W. 934.

A county organization is created almost exclusively with a view to the policy of the state at large, for the purposes of political organization and civil administration, in matters of finance, of education, of provision for the poor, of military organization, of the means of travel and transport, and especially for the general administration of justice. With scarcely an exception, all the powers and functions of the county organization have a direct and exclusive reference to the general policy of the state, and are, in fact, but a branch of the general administration of that policy. People v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 172, 31 Colo. 369 (citing 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 23).

COUNTY BUSINESS.

The building of a county courthouse is "county business," within the meaning of Const. art. 4, § 22, forbidding the passage of local or special laws regulating county business. Newton County Com'rs v. State, 69 N. E. 442, 443, 161 Ind. 618.

COUNTY PHYSICIAN.

Neither the person appointed to care for the hospital and poorhouse, nor a graduate of medicine appointed to attend to the indigent sick, is by the law designated as a "county physician," and the term could certainly have no proper application to the superintendent of the hospital and poorhouse. People v. Shearer, 76 Pac. 813, 814, 143 Cal. 66.

COUNTY ROAD.

See "Legal County Road."

COUNTY SEAT.

The term "county seat," as used in a constitutional provision prohibiting the creation of a new county, so that its boundaries will approach nearer than 12 miles to the county seat of the county from which such new county may be taken, has reference to the legal county seat, and not a mere de facto one, resorted to as such by common consent and usage. Presidio County v. Jeff Davis County (Tex.) 77 S. W. 278, 279.

COURT.

In Tenement House Act, Laws 1901, c. 334, § 2, providing that a court is an open, unoccupied space, other than a yard, on the same lot with a tenement house, the word "court" refers to open, unoccupied spaces which are wholly or partially inclosed at the end, rather than to spaces which are open to free access from both the street and yard of the premises, and which, if regarded as courts within the meaning of the law, are to be considered as in reality two or double courts. Gutting v. Brennan, 89 N. Y. Supp. 574, 575, 97 App. Div. 23.

COURT (Of Justice).

See "Inferior Court of Record"; "Officer of the Court"; "Open Court"; "Order of Court."

The word "court," as used in a statute authorizing an appellate court, upon reversal, to render such judgment as the court below should have rendered, means the body organized to administer justice, and includes judge and jury. Henne & Meyer v. Moultrie (Tex.) 77 S. W. 607, 608.

The commission provided for by Acts 1893, p. 386, c. 231, § 13, providing that if a municipal corporation, after deciding to establish a municipal lighting plant, refuses to purchase a private plant operated by a corporation incorporated by the General Assembly, it may be compelled to do so; and a commission appointed by the superior court to adjudicate whether the plant should be purchased, and what the price and conditions of sale should be, is not a court, nor its members judges, within the meaning of the constitutional provision prescribing the mode by which judges are to be appointed. The functions of the commission are but quasi judicial. Norwich Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Norwich, 57 Atl. 746, 749, 76 Conn. 565 (citing State v. New Haven & Northampton Co., 43 Conn. 351; New Milford Water Co. v. Watson, 75 Conn. 237, 52 Atl. 947, 53 Atl. 57).

COVENANT.

See "Continuing Covenant."

CREATE.

Amend distinguished, see "Amend."
Designate distinguished, see "Designate."

CREDIBLE.

"The word 'credible,' as used in a statute in reference to the attesting witness to a will, means competent; that is to say, the requirement of the statute is that the attesting witnesses to a will must be such persons as are not disqualified by mental imbecility, interest, or crime from giving testimony in a court of justice." Savage v. Bulger (Ky.) 77 S. W. 717 (quoting Fuller v. Fuller, 83 Ky. 345).

In an instruction that if the jury believe that any witness has sworn falsely, or that the testimony of any witness is inconsistent with other testimony which they believe to be true, or consistent with the circumstances proven on the trial, then the testimony of one credible witness would be of more value than the evidence of such other witnesses, the term "credible" could mean nothing more than such witnesses as the jury gave credit for telling the truth, and is used in the abstract, without reference to any particular witness, who testified in the case. Territory v. Garcia (N. M.) 75 Pac. 34, 35.

CREDIT.

See "Full Faith and Credit."
As property, see "Property."

The word "credit," as used in Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, providing that the taxpayer may deduct from the credits due him all just debts by him owing at the time of such return, means "net credit." State v. Fleming (Neb.) 97 N. W. 1063, 1067.

A policy of insurance issued by a fraternal benefit society is, after the death of the insured, and before proofs thereof are made to the society, a "credit," within the meaning of 3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 (2d Ed.) pp. 3398-3406, cl. 1, § 1, requiring all credits to be assessed and taxed, and Revenue Act 1898, cl. 6, § 292 (3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 [2d Ed.] p. 3520), defining "credits" to be every claim or demand for money due or to become due, and not including money on deposit, though the policy makes the furnishing of proofs of death a condition precedent to liability of the society thereon, and provides that the amount thereof shall not be due until 60 days after proof of death is filed. Cooper v. Board of Review of Montgomery County, 69 N. E. 878, 879, 207 Ill. 472, 64 L. R. A. 72.

CREDITOR.

The word "creditor," as used in a statute declaring unrecorded chattel mortgages to be void as against creditors and bona fide purchasers for value, means creditors having some sort of lien fixed by law or legal proceedings upon the particular property, and does not include a mere general creditor. Eason v. Garrison (Tex.) 82 S. W. 800, 801.

A surety on a note is a "creditor" of the maker, within Code 1896, § 2158, making a conveyance of substantially all of a debtor's property to one or more creditors equivalent to a general assignment. Smith v. McCadden & McElwee, 36 South. 376, 377, 138 Ala. 284.

The term "creditor" is defined by Civ. Code, § 2686, as follows: "Whenever one person by contract or by law is liable and bound to pay to another an amount of money certain or uncertain, the relation of debtor and creditor exists between them." This definition is much broader than is generally supposed, and would seem to include a liability for a wrongful conversion of property, for which trover would lie. "In a multitude of cases it has been repeatedly adjudicated that a party bound by a contract upon which he may become liable for the payment of money, although his liability be contingent, is a debtor, within the meaning of a statute avoiding all grants made to hinder or delay creditors. A surety is a creditor from the time the application is entered into or the bond signed, and the person whose claim arises from a tort, such as libel or slander, is a creditor." A plaintiff in a trover case is a creditor within the protection of a statute against fraudulent conveyances, even before judgment, and a surety on the defendant's bail bond in a trover case, who pays the judgment recovered by plaintiff, is also a creditor. Banks v. McCandless, 47 S. E. 332, 335, 119 Ga. 793.

A petitioner for condemnation is not in any sense a purchaser or creditor within the purview of the registration statutes. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Southern R. Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 657, 666.

The holder of a claim under a bond, to which a testator was a party, which arose during his lifetime, is a "creditor" within the meaning of Gen. Laws. c. 215, § 2, providing that claims of creditors against estates of deceased persons must be presented to the executor within the period of six months from the date of the first advertisement of the notice of the executor's qualification. Municipal Court v. Whaley (B. L.) 57 Atl. 1061.

CREDITORS OF THE MORTGAGOR.

"Creditors of the mortgagor" does not mean any more than is expressed. It does not mean creditors of a third party to whom the mortgagor afterwards conveys the property, even if the third party assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage debt. The words of the statute are not to be extended by implication to other classes of persons than those named. Talcott v. Hurlbert, 76 Pac. 647, 649, 143 Cal. 4.

CRIME.

"A crime consists in something more than the commission of an act; there must be a union of act and intention." Hence a statement which admits the commission of an act, but which also gives legal excuse or justification, is not a confession of the commission of a crime; for one may admit that he took a horse from a stable of another, and at the same time explain that he purchased the horse from a person named, claiming to own the horse, and that there was no criminal intent on his part. Owens v. State, 48 S. E. 21, 23, 120 Ga. 296.

One who knowingly purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine which has not been branded or stamped according to law is not guilty of a "crime" under Act Aug. 2, 1866, 24 Stat. 209, c. 840 [U. S. Comp.

St. 1901, p. 2228], prescribing a penalty for such an act. Schick v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 827, 195 U. S. 65, 49 L. Ed. —.

Fraud is in its essential elements a crime. Prahar v. Tousey, 87 N. Y. Supp. 845, 847, 93 App. Div. 507.

Sunday baseball.

The playing of baseball on Sunday is not in itself a "crime," but is only such when it interrupts the repose and religious liberty of the community. People ex rel. Poole v. Hesterberg, 89 N. Y. Supp. 498, 499, 43 Misc. Rep. 510.

CRIMINAL.

A prisoner under sentence of death is a "criminal" in the eye of the law so long as the sentence remains in force, because he has been adjudged guilty of crime. Molineux v. Collins, 69 N. E. 727, 728, 177 N. Y. 395, 18 N. Y. Cr. R. 201, 65 L. R. A. 104.

CRIMINAL ORDINANCE.

An ordinance relating to juvenile vagrants, and authorizing the commitment of such persons to the House of Good Shepherd, is not a criminal ordinance. It is a mere administrative police regulation, designed as a preventative against wrongdoing, and not as a punishment therefor. State v. Marmouget, 35 South. 529, 533, 111 La. 225.

CRIMINAL PROCEEDING

A proceeding under an ordinance relating to juvenile vagrants, and authorizing the commitment of such persons to the House of Good Shepherd, is not a criminal proceeding. State v. Marmouget, 35 South. 529, 533, 111 La. 225.

The proceeding to punish for a contempt is in its nature a criminal proceeding, whether the result be partially remediable or not, and the same rules prevail which govern in the trial of indictments, the defendant being entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt. Bullock Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 105, 106, 63 C. C. A. 607.

Proceedings under an act providing for the condemnation and summary destruction of liquor illegally kept for sale are civil in their nature, and not criminal. Kirkland v. State (Ark.) 78 S. W. 770, 773, 65 L. R. A. 76.

"A proceeding under our law to expel or exclude aliens is not a criminal prosecution or proceeding." Where, in proceedings for the exclusion of Chinese aliens, the only evidence of citizenship offered was unsatisfactory testimony of one witness that he was an uncle of defendants and that they were both born in San Francisco, and defendants refused to be sworn in their own behalf, a finding against the aliens' right to remain was not erroneous. United States v. Moy You (U. S.) 126 Fed. 226 (citing, in support of definition, Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 730, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905; United States v. Lee Huen [U. S.] 118 Fed. 456).

CROSS-BILL

The office of a cross-bill is to obtain affirmative relief upon the case stated in the bill, not to obtain relief with regard to other matters. A cross-bill is a defense to the original bill, or a proceeding necessary to a complete determination of a matter already in litigation. A bill by a testamentary trustee and beneficiary against his co-trustees and cestuis que trust sought to have certain portions of the trust estate divided from the residue and held separately for certain cestuis que trust, claiming that it would be for the benefit of the parties interested. The answer, besides joining issue on the propositions of law and fact, assumed the character of a cross-bill, and, alleging misbehavior and incapacity of complainant, prayed that he be removed. In so far as the answer sought affirmative relief it should be stricken out, because it introduced an issue not affecting nor depending on the question whether complainant was entitled to relief, and only tended to complication and delay. Paine v. Sackett, 57 Atl. 376, 377, 25 R. I. 561 (quoting Story, Eq. Pl. § 399; 5 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 641).

CROSSING.

Any road crossing, see "Any."

"What is the crossing of a railway right of way? Not alone, we think, the boards or other appliances which must be laid between the rails and adjacent to them on the outside, and cattle guards and wing fences to keep cattle from straying on the right of way beyond the crossing; but such structures, too, as will enable a wagon or team to go safely and conveniently on the track. This is said to be the legal definition of the word 'crossing' in an authoritative treatise on railroad law, and respectable authorities are cited in support of the text. 3 Elliott, Railways, § 1097. In contemplation of law, a crossing is not only that portion of the earth's surface immediately by or between the rails of a track, but the approaches on both sides of the track; and it is incumbent on a railroad company to construct approaches needed to make a crossing usable, and so courts of authority have decided." Birlew v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 79 S. W. 490, 491, 104 Mo. App. 561.

Code, § 2063, provides that a railway company desiring to cross another at grade may be compelled by the other to interlock the crossing; section 2065 provides for the modification of any decree relating to the expense of interlocking crossings; and section 2064 provides that, on proceedings under section 2063, not less than one-third of the cost shall be apportioned to either road. The word "crossing," as used in the statute, is not the actual crossing, but includes the interlocking. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Gowrie & N. W. R. Co., 99 N. W. 181, 182, 123 Iowa, 543.

A finding that plaintiff, when struck by a team, was "crossing the junction" of two streets, as alleged in the complaint, is authorized, although he was on the edge of the sidewalk, and for two or three seconds had stopped to look across. Drew v. Farnsworth, 71 N. E. 783, 784, 186 Mass. 365.

CRUEL AND INHUMAN TREATMENT.

Threats evidently intended to be executed, and so understood by the injured party to the marriage contract, inducing in the mind of the latter a reasonable apprehension of danger to life or health, rendering it extremely difficult to discharge the duties of the domestic relation, constitute such "cruel and inhuman treatment" as to justify a decree of divorce in a suit instituted for that purpose. Benfield v. Benfield, 74 Pac. 495, 44 Or. 94.

Where a husband had repeatedly falsely charged that his wife was unchaste, and that he was not the father of their youngest child, which charges had so injured the wife's health as to imperil her life, they constituted such cruel and inhuman treatment as to entitle her to a divorce. Turner v. Turner, 97 N. W. 997, 122 Iowa, 113.

The habitual refusal of a wife to accede to her husband's request for sexual intercourse is not "cruel treatment" of such a nature as to render their living together insupportable, within the meaning of the divorce statute, where the husband is old, his virility diminished, and amorous desires feeble. Varner v. Varner (Tex.) 80 S. W. 388.

CRUEL PUNISHMENT.

Assessing a penalty at 30 years' confinement in a penitentiary for burglary of a private residence at night is not cruel or excessive punishment, where the Legislature has provided that punishment for burglary at night shall not be less than 5 years. Handy v. State (Tex.) 80 S. W. 528.

CRUELTY.

"What merely wounds the mental feelings is in few cases to be admitted, where they are not accompanied by bodily injury, either actual or menaced. Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion (if they do not threaten bodily harm), do not amount to legal cruelty." Levin v. Levin, 46 S. E. 945, 946, 68 S. C. 123 (quoting Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Const. 39).

CUMBERSOME PACKAGE.

A cage $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet high and 2 feet square is a "cumbersome package," within a rule of a street car company prohibiting passengers from carrying cumbersome packages into the cars. Ray v. United Traction Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 49, 51, 96 App. Div. 48.

CURE.

See "Gall Cure."

CURRENT MONEY.

See "Lawful Current Money."

CURRENT MONEY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The expression "current money of the United States" covers any kind of currency of the United States which is guaranteed by the government and passes as money. Butler v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 743, 744.

CURTESY.

Minor's Institutes, vol. 2, p. 103, thus defines "curtesy": When a man takes a wife seised during the coverture of an estate of inheritance, legal or equitable, such as that the issue of the marriage may by possibility inherit it as heir to the wife, has issue born alive, and the wife dies, the husband surviving has an estate in the land for his life, which is called an estate by the curtesy, and the requisites of an estate by the curtesy are marriage, seisin of the wife, birth of issue alive, and death of the wife. Dozier v. Tolson, 79 S. W. 420, 421, 180 Mo. 546.

To curtesy there were four requisites: (1) Marriage; (2) seisin of wife during coverture; (3) birth of a child; (4) death of the wife. Decedent left, him surviving, his wife and four children. The latter conveyed to the widow a life estate in the real estate belonging to their deceased father. One of such children died prior to the widow, leaving a husband and children. On the widow's death the husband was entitled to an estate by the curtesy in two-thirds of the interest of the property in which his wife had seisin at the time of the death of her father. Valentine v. Hutchinson, 88 N. Y. Supp. 862, 963, 43 Misc. Rep. 314.

CUSTODY.

"Custody" means a keeping, guarding, care, watch, inspection, preservation, or security of a thing, and carries with it the idea of the thing being within the immediate personal care and control of the person to whose custody it is subjected. State v. Coffin (Idaho) 74 Pac. 962, 968.

A person in prison under a conviction by a state court on an indictment charging him with being accessory to a murder, and pending an appeal from such conviction, is not "in custody" in violation of the Constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States. Ex parte Powers (U. S.) 129 Fed. 985, 986.

DAMAGE—DAMAGES.

See "Actual Damages"; "Consequential Damages"; "General Damages"; "Gross Damages"; "Nominal Damages"; "Nonpecuniary Damages"; "Pecuniary Damages"; "Punitive Damages"; "Special Damages."

All damages, see "All."

The word "damage," as used in Const. art. 1, § 17, providing that no person's property shall be taken, damaged, or destroyed for or applied to public use without adequate compensation being made, means every loss or diminution of what is a man's own, occasioned by the fault of another, whether this result directly to the thing owned, or be but an interference with the right which the owner has to the legal and proper use of his own. If by the construction of a railway or other public work an injury peculiar to a given property be inflicted upon it, or its owner be deprived of its legal and proper use, or of any right therein or thereto—that is, if an injury not suffered by that particular property or right only in common with other property or rights in the same community or section, by reason of the general fact that the public work exists, be inflicted—then such property may be said to be damaged. A property owner is entitled to recover from a railroad which constructs its yards so near plaintiff's residence as that the noise, smoke, cinders, and gas from the operation by defendant of its locomotives injuriously affects the plaintiff's property. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Calkins (Tex.) 79 S. W. 852, 853.

The words "or damaged," as used in a constitutional provision that property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, do not entitle a property owner to an injunction to prevent the improvement of a street until mere consequential damages to his property are ascertained and paid. Clemens v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. (Mo.) 82 S. W. 1, 3.

"While in some cases the profits to be accounted for are spoken of as damages, yet in no case that has been presented is it held that damages, as distinct from or additional to profits, can be decreed in equity in a copyright case, as in patent causes. While the word 'damages' is used in decrees, it is used synonymously with 'profits.' Confusion can be avoided by omitting the word 'damages,' since the word 'profits' is more accurate, and sufficient." Social Register Ass'n v. Murphy (U. S.) 129 Fed. 148.

The damages which are described in Rev. Code 1899, § 4978, declaring that for the breach of an obligation arising from contract the measure of damages, except when otherwise expressly provided by the code, is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment approximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom, are the damages which are the natural consequences of a breach of contract, and the statute authorizes compensation for all detriment which follows as a natural and proximate consequence of the breach, and prohibits a recovery for damages which are not natural and proximate consequences. In an action for damages for the breach of a contract to thresh grain, the loss of grain by exposure to storms is a remote, and not a proximate, consequence of the breach, and will not sustain a recovery, in the absence of any special or exceptional circumstances. Hayes v. Cooley (N. D.) 100 N. W. 250, 251.

DANGER.

See "Seeming Danger."

DANGEROUS MACHINERY.

Machinery, or parts of machinery, is or are dangerous if in the ordinary course of human affairs danger may be reasonably anticipated from the use of them without protection. It cannot be said as a matter of law that a conveyor, consisting of an endless chain with metallic pan-shaped shelves about every 13 feet, moving about a foot a second, used for carrying tools from one floor to another of a factory, is not a "dangerous machine," within Laws 1897, p. 480, c. 475, § 81, providing that children under 16 years of age shall not be permitted to assist in operating dangerous machines of any kind. Gallenkamp v. Garvin Mach. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 378, 380, 91 App. Div. 141.

DAY.

The term "three days," in Const. art. 4, § 12, providing that if any bill presented to the Governor is not returned to the house in which it originated within three days, Sundays excepted, it shall become a law, was not employed to denote in all cases three calendar days. It denotes a period which cannot end except upon a day when the house to which the provision refers is or has been in session. State v. Town of South Norwalk, 58 Atl. 759, 760, 77 Conn. 257.

DE BENE ESSE.

See "Appearance De Bene Esse."

The right of an examination de bene esse should not be extended beyond the cases of a single witness, the age of 70, and dangerous illness to a prisoner charged with a capital felony. Anonymous, 19 Ves. 320. See, also, Abraham v. Newton, 8 Bing. 274; Brown v. Southworth (N. Y.) 9 Paige, 351; Hall v. Stout, 4 Del. Ch. 269, 273.

The commission to take the testimony of a nonresident witness cannot issue at the instance of the defendant in a criminal case. State v. Fulford, 33 La. Ann. 679, 684; State v. Fahey, 35 La. Ann. 9, 11; Ex parte Harkins, 6 Ala. 63, 64, 41 Am. Dec. 38.

A deposition de bene esse relating to a criminal charge under an order of the General Sessions previous to any indictment found in that court or sent there for trial is extrajudicial and void. People v. Restell (N. Y.) 3 Hill, 289, 294.

The jurisdiction which courts of equity exercise to perpetuate testimony is open to great objections: First, it leads to a trial on written depositions, which is much less favorable to the cause of truth than the viva voce examination of witnesses. But what is still more important, inasmuch as those written depositions can never be used until after the death of the witnesses, and are not indeed published till after the death of the witnesses, it follows, whatever perjury may have been committed in those depositions, it must necessarily go unpunished. And this testimony has therefore this infirmity: that it is not given under the sanction of the penalties which the general policy of the law imposes upon the crime of perjury. It is for these reasons that courts of equity do not entertain bills to perpetuate testimony, generally, for the purpose of being used upon future occasion, unless where it is absolutely necessary to prevent a failure of justice. If it be possible that the matter in question can, by the party who files the bill, be made the subject of immediate judicial investigation, no such suit is entertained; but if the party who files the bill can by no means bring the matter in question into present judicial investigation (which may happen when his title is in remainder, or when he is himself in possession), these courts of equity will entertain such a suit, for otherwise the only testimony which could support the plaintiff's title might be lost by the deaths of his witnesses. Where he is himself in possession, the adverse party might purposely delay his claim with a view to that event. It is therefore ground of demurrer to a bill to perpetuate testimony, generally, that it is not alleged by the plaintiff that the matter in question cannot be made by him the subject of present judicial investigation; but courts of equity do not merely entertain jurisdiction to take or preserve testimony, generally, to be used on a future occasion, where no present action can be brought, but also to take and preserve testimony, in special cases, in aid of a trial at law, where the subject admits of present investigation. At law, no commission to examine witnesses, who are abroad, for the purpose of being used at the trial, can go without the consent of the adverse party. Courts of equity will, upon a bill filed, grant such commission without the consent of the adverse party. So courts of equity will entertain a bill to preserve the testimony of aged and infirm witnesses, to be used at the trial at law, if they are likely to die before the time of trial can arrive; and will even entertain such a bill to preserve the testimony of a witness who is neither aged nor infirm, if he happen to be the single witness to support the case. Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & S. 83, 89.

To entitle a party to maintain a bill to take testimony de bene esse, plaintiff must aver: First, that there is a suit pending in which the testimony of the witnesses named will be material; second, that the suit is in such condition that the depositions cannot be taken in the ordinary methods prescribed by law, and that the aid of the court of equity is necessary to perpetuate the testimony; third, the facts which the plaintiff expects to prove by the testimony of the witnesses sought to be examined, that the court may see that they are material to the controversy; fourth, the necessity for taking the testimony, and the danger that it may be lost by delay. Richter v. Jerome (U. S.) 25 Fed. 679, 680.

DE FACTO.

An "officer de facto" is "one who acts under color of title, which color can only be given by a power having authority to fill the office." Village Law, Laws 1897, p. 386, c. 414, § 68, provides that the board of water commissioners shall be appointed by the board of trustees, and section 43 provides that certain offices, not including water commissioners, shall be elective and the rest appointive, except that the offices of clerk and street commissioner may be made elective by adoption of a proposition to that effect. A village adopted a proposition to make the office of water commissioner elective, and elected a water commissioner, who assumed to act as such. Such commissioner did not hold office under color of title, so as to make him an officer de facto. Village of Canaseraga v. Green, 88 N. Y. Supp. 539, 542 (quoting People v. Albertson [N. Y.] 8 How. Prac. 363).

DE FACTO DISSOLUTION.

A "de facto dissolution" of a corporation means that dissolution which takes place in substance and in fact, in the case of corporations organized for pecuniary gain, when the corporation, by reason of insolvency, or for other reason, suspends all its operations and goes into liquidation. Yoree v. Home Town Mut. Ins. Co. of Warrensburg (Mo.) 79 S. W. 175, 176, 178.

DEADLY WEAPON.

A knife having a blade $2\frac{5}{8}$ inches long is a deadly weapon. Baker v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 1215, 1216.

A penknife may or may not be a deadly weapon. If the weapon is such that from the manner of its use it is likely to produce death, it is of course a deadly weapon. State v. Roan, 97 N. W. 997, 998, 122 Iowa, 136.

A heavy wooden stick is not ex vi termini a deadly weapon or a deadly instrument, within Pen. Code, § 245, subjecting to punishment every person committing an assault with a deadly weapon. People v. Perales, 75 Pac. 170, 171, 141 Cal. 581.

A pistol is a deadly weapon with which an aggravated assault may be committed. Pace v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 531, 533.

An instruction defining a "deadly weapon" to be a gun within carrying distance is erroneous when applied to a state of facts which show that defendant's gun was loaded with squirrel shot, and that at the time of the shooting the parties were from 125 to 200 yards apart, it not being possible that a serious injury could have been inflicted by the discharge of the defendant's gun at such a distance from the party alleged to have been assaulted. Scott v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 952, 953.

DEATH.

Accidental death, see "Accident—Accidental."

DEATH RESULTING FROM THE WOUND.

Disease brought about as the result of a wound, even though not the necessary or probable result, yet if it is the natural result of the wound, and not of an independent cause, is properly attributed to the wound; and death resulting from the disease is a "death resulting from the wound," even though the wound was not in its nature mortal or even dangerous. Even though the wound results in disease and death through the negligence of the injured persons in failing to take ordinary and reasonable precautions to avoid the possible consequence, the death is the result of the wound. Delaney v.

Modern Acc. Club, 97 N. W. 91, 93, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L. R. A. 603.

DEBT.

In a broad and general sense, a debt is whatever one owes. In a purely technical sense, it is that for which an action of debt will lie—a sum of money due by certain and express agreement. A debt is not a contract, but it may be the result of a contract. Hornbeck v. State (Ind.) 71 N. E. 916, 917.

The term "debt," in Rev. Codes 1899, § 5352, subd. 6, provides that the plaintiff may have the property of the defendant attached when the debt upon which the action is commenced was incurred for property obtained under false pretenses, means a debt which has been assented to by the defendant, and an attachment cannot be had in an action to recover damages for tort. Sonnesyn v. Akin, 97 N. W. 557, 12 N. D. 227.

The word "debt," in Laws 1893, p. 200, c. 100, authorizing executors and administrators to compromise or compound any debt or claim owing by the estate of their testator or intestate, includes every claim and demand on which a judgment for a sum of money, or directing the payment of a sum of money, could be recovered in an action. In re Gilman's Estate, 87 N. Y. Supp. 128, 129, 92 App. Div. 462.

The word "debt," in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 260, § 1, allowing a citation to any person imprisoned for debt, is limited in its scope by section 10, which provides that no person who shall be committed on execution in any action of trover or detinue, or for any malicious injury to the person, health, or reputation of the plaintiff in such suit, shall be deemed to be within section 1. Taylor v. Bliss (R. I.) 57 Atl. 939.

The term "debt" is defined in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3419], to include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy. Prior to the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition the bankrupt made an assignment of his claim on insurance policies, constituting his sole assets, and the assignee rendered valuable services in attempting to collect the claims. On a trustee in bankruptcy being appointed, the assignee turned over to him the policies, with all proofs and claims, subject to a lien for allowances for the expenses incurred, and the trustee in bankruptcy subsequently settled the claims with the insurance companies. The claim of the assignee for expenses and services was not a debt. In re Levitt (U. S.) 126 Fed. 889, 891.

"Debt" is defined as a sum of money due by certain and express agreement, as by bond for a determinate sum, a bill or note, a special bargain, or a rent reserved on a lease, where the amount is fixed and specific, and does not depend on any subsequent valuation to settle it. 3 Bl. Com. 154. Since the separate property of a married woman residing in Florida, under the laws of that state, is liable in equity for her business obligations, where she is engaged in business on her own account, though not a free trader, such obligations constitute "debts" within Bankr. Law, § 1 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3419]), declaring the term "debt" to include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy, and section 63 (30 Stat. 562 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447]), declaring that debts of a bankrupt may be proved and allowed against his estate which are founded on an open account, or on a contract, express or implied. MacDonald v. Tefft-Weller Co. (U. S.) 128 Fed. 381, 385, 63 C. C. A. 123, 65 L. R. A. 106.

The words "debt or debts," as used in a provision in a contract between a life insurance society and an agent to the effect that the society may offset against any claims for commissions under the contract any debt or debts due at any time by the agent to the society, apply only to such debts as arise out of the relation created by the contract, and do not entitle the society to offset against renewal premiums due thereunder advances made to the agent after the relation had ceased and the agent's rights under the contract had been assigned to a third person, of which the society had notice. Campbell v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 786, 787.

DEBT, DEFAULT, OR MISCARRIAGE OF ANOTHER.

An oral agreement whereby one of the parties agrees with the other to pay his debt to a third person is not invalid as a promise to answer for the "debt, default, or miscarriage of another." Fosha v. Prosser (Wis.) 97 N. W. 924, 926.

DEBT DUE IN THE SAME RIGHT.

A debt is considered as "due in the same right" as one sued on when the plaintiff can sue, and the defendant be sued, in their own names, without specifying any representative character, and the party to the suit has a lien upon, or a legal right to the application or distribution of, the fund when collected. McGehee v. Harrison, 51 Ala. 522, 524.

DEBT DUE OR TO BECOME DUE.

The "debts due or to become due," under Rev. St. 1898, § 2768, relate to such as the garnishee owes absolutely, and have been construed to cover debts which are an absolute liability, though payable at some future date. Mundt v. Shabow (Wis.) 97 N. W. 897 (citing Smith v. Davis, 1 Wis. 447, 60 Am. Dec. 390; Bishop v. Young, 17 Wis. 46, 47; Foster v. Singer, 69 Wis. 392, 34 N. W. 395, 2 Am. St. Rep. 745; Vollmer v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 86 Wis. 305, 56 N. W. 919; Evans v. Rector, 107 Wis. 286, 83 N. W. 292).

DEBT DUE TO THE PUBLIC.

Where a county treasurer deposited county funds in an unincorporated bank, the debts are, upon the death of the banker and the insolvency of his estate, debts due the public, within the meaning of a statute providing that such debts shall be paid in full before other debts. Lockwood v. Lockwood (S. C.) 47 S. E. 441.

DEBT INCURRED FOR AN IMPROVEMENT OF THE HOMESTEAD.

Where a building association, in loaning money to an individual, advanced part of the loan for a purpose other than for the improvement of the debtor's homestead, and held the balance until a building erected by the debtor was practically completed, when for its own protection it required releases of mechanics' liens and distributed the money to the contractor and subcontractor, the debt so created was not one incurred for an improvement of the homestead, within the meaning of the law making such debts first liens on property. Steger v. Traveling Men's Building & Loan Ass'n, 70 N. E. 236, 240, 208 Ill. 236, 100 Am. St. Rep. 225.

DEBTOR.

See "Solvent Debtor."

DECEASED PERSON.

See "Estate of Deceased Person."

DECEIT.

"Deceit," in the law, has a broad significance. Any device or false representation by which one man misleads another to his injury, and fraudulent misrepresentations by which one man deceives another to the injury of the latter, are deceit. Where a person is induced to change her status from that of an unmarried to that of a married woman, with all of the duties and obligations pertaining to the changed relationship, if this result is accomplished by deceit, she has, within the law, been deceived; she has been induced to do that which, but for the false practice, she would not have done, and has been led to change her position in most vital respects—respects which may affect her financially, as certainly as they affect her social and domestic status. People v. Chadwick, 76 Pac. 884, 886, 143 Cal. 116 (citing Anderson, Law Dict.).

DECISION.

See "Final Decision."

The term "decision," in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 568, authorizing a new trial to be granted on the ground that the verdict or "decision" is not sustained by a sufficient evidence, necessarily embraces a general finding when the case is tried by the court and includes a special finding. Wolverton v. Wolverton (Ind.) 71 N. E. 123, 125.

DECISION AGAINST LAW.

The expression "decision against law," in Code Civ. Proc. § 657, providing that a new trial may be granted on certain grounds, among others, that the verdict is against the law, includes a case where the decision is based on findings which do not determine all the material issues of fact raised by the pleading. Hamilton v. Murray, 74 Pac. 75, 76, 29 Mont. 80 (citing Knight v. Roche, 56 Cal. 15).

DECISION AND DECREE ALLOWING A FINAL ACCOUNT.

A decree in a probate proceeding, reading, "It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said final account of said administrator be, and the same is, settled, allowed, and affirmed," is a "decision and decree allowing a final account" of an administrator, within Comp. Laws 1900, § 3041, which authorizes an appeal from such a decision and decree. Bowman v. Bowman (Nev.) 76 Pac. 634, 636.

DEDICATION.

Land is held to be dedicated when it is set apart by the owner for a public use. A dedication may be either express or implied. It is express when there is an express manifestation on the part of the owner of his purpose to devote the land to the particular public use, as in the case of a grant evidenced by writing. It is implied when the acts and conduct of the owner clearly manifest an intention on his part to devote the land to the public use. Culmer v. Salt Lake City, 75 Pac. 620, 621, 27 Utah, 252; Utah Stove & Hardware Co. v. Same, Id. (citing Schettler v. Lynch, 23 Utah, 305, 313, 64 Pac. 955).

It is a well-settled doctrine that where the owner of land, which has been laid off, mapped, and platted into blocks, lots, and streets as an addition to a city by a map placed on the public records, sells and conveys the lots or blocks by deeds referring to the map in the description thereof, it constitutes dedication to the public of such streets, and the rights in such streets become thereby vested in such purchasers and in the public. City of Corsicana v. Anderson (Tex.) 78 S. W. 261, 263.

"Dedication is the deliberate act by which the owner of real property, without remuneration, devotes the fee or an easement therein to the use of the public." Where a city, with power to purchase and hold real estate for the use of the city, purchases land for a valuable consideration, it takes an absolute title, though the deed recites that it is understood that the premises are deeded to the city for city hall purposes only. City of Huron v. Wilcox (S. D.) 98 N. W. 88, 89.

A sale of lots by reference to a plat constitutes a good dedication, even if the dedication by the plat itself has been incomplete. Kansas City & N. Connecting R. Co. v. Baker, 82 S. W. 85, 88, 183 Mo. 312.

A dedication of an easement to a public use may be by parol. Halley v. Scott County Fiscal Court (Ky.) 78 S. W. 149, 150.

DEED.

See "Good and Effectual Deed."

A deed of conveyance is a contract of conveyance, and the grantor will not be permitted to say that it is not. Wishart v. Gerhart, 78 S. W. 1094, 105 Mo. App. 112.

A deed of conveyance is not merely evidence of a gift or other grant. It is the gift or grant itself, and ipso facto operates to transfer or convey the title of the property described to the grantee. Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 77 Pac. 657, 658, 143 Cal. 646.

An instrument cannot be given the effect of a conveyance unless it contains words of grant. The use of the word "deed" by witnesses is a mere conclusion of the witnesses, and it cannot be presumed that a written instrument was a deed of conveyance, at least without proof that it contained sufficient words of grant. Capell v. Fagan (Mont.) 77 Pac. 55, 58.

Comp. St. 1903, c. 73, § 46, defines the term "deed" to embrace every instrument in writing by which any real estate or interest therein is created, aliened, mortgaged, or assigned, or by which the title to any real estate may be affected in law or equity, except last wills, and leases for one year or less. Section 12 provides that every officer who shall take the acknowledgment of any deed shall indorse a certificate thereof, signed by himself, on the deed. Section 4 provides that the homestead of a married person cannot be conveyed or incumbered unless the instrument by which it is conveyed is executed and acknowledged by both husband and wife. The acknowledgment by both husband and wife of an instrument whereby it is sought to convey or incumber a homestead is an essential step in the due execution of such instrument, which acknowledgment should appear from the instrument itself, in the form of a certificate of the officer before whom the acknowledgment was taken. Solt v. Anderson (Neb.) 99 N. W. 678, 679.

DEED OF RELEASE.

The words "deed of release," as used in Civ. Code, § 3845, providing that an entry of satisfaction of a mortgage in the margin of a record shall have such effect, means simply the release of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage. Swain v. McMillan (Mont.) 76 Pac. 943, 945.

DEED OF TRUST.

The use of the phrase "deed of trust" in Const. art. 13, § 4, providing that a deed of trust by which a debt is secured shall, for the purpose of taxation, be treated as an interest in property, had reference to those deeds of trust in common use which answer the purpose, and have many of the attributes, of a strict mortgage on realty. Bank of Woodland v. Pierce (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1012, 1013.

DEFAULT.

See "Debt, Default, or Miscarriage of Another"; "Willful Default."

"Default" means anything wrongful—some omission to do that which ought to have been done by one of the parties; and a mere allegation that "because of the default of the defendant said premises were not conveyed" does not state the necessary facts to show to the court that the defendant did omit to do anything that she was called upon to do. Davis v. Silverman, 90 N. Y. Supp. 589, 590.

DEFEATED.

A portion of the heirs at law of a decedent employed an attorney to render services in a contest against the probate of an alleged will of the decedent, by which the heirs agreed to pay the attorney a stipulated fee "in case the will is defeated." The will was defeated, within the meaning of the contract, where a decree was entered by the probate court in accordance with a stipulation between all the parties in interest, secured with the aid of the efforts of the attorney, and of his advice, fixing the basis of distribution of the property of the decedent in kind, which, with the exception of some inconsequential bequests, was wholly at variance with the provisions of the will, and under which the clients of the obligors in the contract received a larger part of the estate than their share as heirs at law. Ingersoll v. Coram (U. S.) 127 Fed. 418, 431.

A plea that plaintiffs "were defeated" in another action between the parties involving the same controversy is insufficient as a plea of res adjudicata, as not showing that they were defeated on the merits. Goff v. Wilburn (Ky.) 79 S. W. 232, 233.

DEFECT OF PARTIES.

"A nonjoinder, or, as expressed in the Code, 'a defect, of parties plaintiff or defendant,' means sufficient parties, and has no application to a case of too many parties, or the joining of a person having no interest in the litigation." Mader v. Plano Mfg. Co. (S. D.) 97 N. W. 843, 845.

DEFECTIVE.

A writ is defective when it lacks something which the law requires it to contain; and the defect, as in other cases where amendments are allowed, must appear on its face. McArthur v. Boynton (Colo.) 74 Pac. 540, 542.

A pulley with a small piece broken out of its rim is defective, and, in an instruction in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by such defect, it is proper to refer to the break as a defect, the jury being instructed at the same time that plaintiff could not recover unless the break or defect caused the injuries sued for. Eagle & Phenix Mills v. Herron, 46 S. E. 405, 408, 119 Ga. 389.

DEFEND.

The word "defend," as used in a policy of employer's liability insurance providing that the insurer, if suit was brought against the insured to enforce a claim for damages on account of an accident covered by the policy, on notice thereof, would take charge of the litigation, and on behalf of the insured defend against such proceedings, means, necessarily, that all the proceedings in the suit founded on the claim for damages against the insured must be taken care of by the insurer; and, after taking control of the proceedings, the insurer cannot thereafter be discharged except by payment of the indemnity to the assured, or securing his discharge. Sanders v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 57 Atl. 655, 658, 72 N. H. 485.

DEFENSE.

See "Equitable Defense"; "F frivolous Defense"; "Pretermitted Defense"; "Self-Defense."

Any defense, see "Any."

DEFINED TERRITORY.

By the terms of a contract plaintiff was appointed by defendant an agent for the sale of machinery at De Pere, such agent to have the privilege of making sales in the vicinity of De Pere. On the back of the printed form of contract was the following indorsement: "The design of a vicinity contract is to pay an agent the stipulated commission on whatever machinery he may sell under the provisions of the contract, not in the territory of another agent who had the exclusive right to sell in a defined territory." The agent's territory is not a "defined territory" within the meaning of the indorsement on the contract. The business of these agents is not to sit still at some place and sell machinery to those who come to the agent and want to buy it, but to canvass or work their territory; and these "vicinity contracts" are made, rather than those of a definite territory, on purpose to meet cases of this kind, where a locality may be more closely connected in a business way with any one village than one near by, and to avoid conflict between different agents from border territory. McGeehan v. Gaar, Scott & Co. (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1072, 1074.

DEFINITE.

The word "definite," as used in Acts June 4, 1901 (P. L. 450), providing that from any definite judgment, order, or decree entered by the court of common pleas an appeal may be taken by the party aggrieved to the Supreme Court or superior court, is not used in the sense of "clear" or "unambiguous," but it is used in the same sense as "definitive" is used when prefaced to a decree, order, or judgment; that is, opposed to "interlocutory." Where a subcontractor agrees that no lien shall be filed by him, and that, if any is filed, any attorney may appear and strike it off, and a receiver for the owner of the building takes a rule to show cause why an attorney should not enter an appearance for the lien claimant and discontinue a lien proceeding begun by him, an order discharging the rule is interlocutory and not appealable, and not a "definite" order within the meaning of the word as used in the statute. Kurrie v. Cottingham, 57 Atl. 1106, 1107, 209 Pa. 12.

DEFRAUD.

As defined by lexicographers, the word "defraud" means to deprive of right, either by procuring something by deception or artifice, or by appropriating something wrongfully; to defeat or frustrate wrongfully. The meaning of the word "defraud," when used in the common law or in a statute, is largely influenced by the sense in which it is used and the subject to which it relates. The term "defraud," as used in Rev. St. 5440 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3673], prohibiting, and providing for the punishment of, conspiracies to defraud the United States, should not be construed as limited only to frauds respecting personal rights, but to include the deprivation of a right by deception or artivice. Defendant H., desiring to procure appointment as a letter carrier, a position in the classified civil service of the United States, unlawfully agreed with defendant C. that the latter should falsely impersonate H. at a civil service examination, and do all the acts required by the examiners, and sign H.'s name to the examination papers to be delivered to C. for examination while he should impersonate H. C., in pursuance of such conspiracy, gained entrance to the examination, and falsely signed H.'s name to a declaration sheet which was required to be in the handwriting and on the honor of the applicant. Such facts constituted a conspiracy to defraud the United States within the meaning of the statute. Curley v. United States (U. S.) 130 Fed. 1, 7, 12.

DEGREE.

See "Material Degree."

DELAY.

As conversion, see "Conversion."

DELIBERATE—DELIBERATION.

The word "deliberate," in the statute making it murder in the first degree for any person purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice to kill another, means the mental state or condition of the mind in considering, weighing, and deliberating on the motive which prompts or induces a certain act or line of action. State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440.

One of the ingredients of the crime of murder is that it must be deliberate. To deliberate is to reflect, with a view to make a choice. If a person reflects, though but for a moment, before he acts, it is unquestionably a sufficient "deliberation." State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289.

"Deliberation" and "premeditated" are synonymous. Cook v. State (Fla.) 35 South. 665, 676.

DELIRIUM TREMENS.

"Delirium tremens" is defined as a violent delirium induced by the excessive and prolonged use of intoxicating liquors. A person suffering under or afflicted with delirium tremens for the time being may be as absolutely insane as an idiot or a maniac. Parrish v. State, 36 South. 1012, 1022, 139 Ala. 16 (citing Webster).

DELIVER—DELIVERY.

See "Constructive Delivery"; "Immediate Delivery."

"The acts that will constitute a delivery will vary with the different classes of cases, and will depend very much upon the character and quantity of the property sold, as well as the circumstances of each particular case." Rapple v. Hughes (Idaho) 77 Pac. 722, 725 (citing Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 545).

As used in an ordinance providing that any person who shall sell, give away, furnish, or cause to be furnished or delivered any intoxicating liquors on Sunday shall be fined, the word "delivered" implies other and more general meaning than the specific or particular words "sell" or "give away"; and one who, at the request of a saloonkeeper, procures liquor from the saloon, which they use together, cannot be fined, since the word "delivered" must be held to extend only to a disposition ejusdem generis with a sale or gift. Norris v. Oakman, 35 South. 450, 451, 138 Ala. 411.

"Delivery," within Civ. Code, § 1147, making a delivery essential to the validity of a gift, must be according to the nature of the thing. It must be an actual delivery, so far as the subject is capable of delivery. It must be secundum subjectam materiam, and be the true and effectual way of obtaining the command and dominion of the subject. Driscoll v. Driscoll, 77 Pac. 471, 473, 143 Cal. 528.

The manual deposit of a deed with a third person, to receive and hold for the grantee, with intent thereby to give such paper effect as a deed, and to place the same beyond the custody and control of the grantor, will give such deed validity and efficacy as against the grantor, although some condition is imposed precedent to final delivery to the grantee which may serve to prevent vesting of actual title in him meanwhile. There must be physical tradition of the deed out of the grantor's possession, and there must be the intent to place it out of his control for the benefit of the grantee, in order to constitute delivery. Kittos v. Willey (Wis.) 99 N. W. 337.

"Retention by the grantor of power of control over the papers in the possession of a depositary deprives the manual tradition of effect as a delivery. The papers are still held by the latter merely as agent for the former, and therefore, in legal effect, by him." Ward v. Russell, 93 N. W. 939, 940, 121 Wis. 77.

Where the owner of a mercantile business decided to incorporate the same, and, on doing so, one-third of the stock was issued to an employé who had formerly been given one-fourth of the profits of the business in lieu of a salary, the owner taking the employé's notes for the stock and retaining the stock as security, but subsequently speaking of the employé's valuable services, and declaring his intention to give him the stock, and delivering the certificate to him and tearing up the notes, there is a sufficient delivery of the subject-matter to constitute a gift inter vivos. Denunzio's Receiver v. Scholtz (Ky.) 77 S. W. 715, 716.

DELIVERY IN ESCROW.

A delivery in escrow presupposes a valid contract pursuant to which the deposit is made. And if the condition of the escrow is performed, but the deed is not delivered during the lifetime of the grantor, the delivery is nevertheless sustained. Bosea v. Lent, 90 N. Y. Supp. 41, 44 Misc. Rep. 437.

DELUSION.

See "Insane Delusion."

DEMAND.

The words "demand" and "claim" are often interchangeable, and are taken as synonymous. But "demand" is not used in its broadest sense as equivalent with "claim" in Greater New York Charter, § 101, Laws 1901, p. 426, c. 466, providing that interest shall cease to run on sums awarded as damages six months after the date of the confirmation of the report, unless within that time demand therefor be made on the comp-troller. It refers to a request made by the payee for money which has theretofore been legally determined as then payable to him, and which is specifically held for payment to him by the city. In re City of New York, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1035, 1038, 91 App. Div. 532.

A statute requiring "demands" against a city to be presented to the city council for rejection or allowance does not apply to, nor require presentation of, claims for damages for personal injuries. Gallamore v. City of Olympia, 75 Pac. 978, 979, 34 Wash. 379 (citing Sutton v. City of Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 39 Pac. 273, 43 Am. St. Rep. 847).

DEMENTIA.

"Dementia" is but another word for "crazy"; and when an expert witness said in effect that if he was required to give a name to the disease under which a man over 80 years of age, "practically crazy on the subject of marriage," was laboring, he would call it "senile dementia," he only substituted a technical name for a common one. Hamon v. Hamon, 79 S. W. 422, 426, 180 Mo. 685.

DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY.

A demonstrative legacy is a bequest of a certain sum of money, stock, or the like, payable out of a particular fund or security. In re Fisher, 87 N. Y. Supp. 567, 568, 93 App. Div. 186 (citing Crawford v. McCarthy, 159 N. Y. 514, 54 N. E. 277).

Where it appears that a legacy of bonds or securities is intended merely as the primary source for the payment of a legacy in money which is to be paid at all events, the legacy is demonstrative, and, on failure of the primary source of payment, the legacy, as one of money, is payable from the general estate. Blair v. Scribner, 57 Atl. 318, 326, 63 N. J. Eq. 498.

DEMURRAGE.

Demurrage is an allowance made to the master of a ship by the freighters for staying longer in a place than the time first appointed for his departure. It generally depends on positive contract, and is inserted in the charter party; but it may also arise from the customs and usages of particular countries. Duff v. Lawrence (N. Y.) 3 Johns. Cas. 162, 168.

Railroad cars.

A railroad may impose reasonable demurrage charges for delay in unloading cars. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. George, 35 So. 193, 196, 82 Miss. 710.

It is competent for a common carrier whose customers, at their option, have the privilege of unloading for themselves the vehicles in which their freights are shipped, to adopt and enforce a reasonable regulation as to the time within which the vehicles may be unloaded free from any expense for storage, and to fix a reasonable rate per day at which storage will thereafter be charged for the use of such vehicles so long as they remain unloaded. A railroad may demand reasonable charges for demurrage, although there is no stipulation therefor in the bill of lading. Miller v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 88 Ga. 563, 573, 15 S. E. 316, 18 L. R. A. 323, 30 Am. St. Rep. 170.

A railroad company may make a reasonable charge for delay in unloading cars after notice of arrival to the consignee, and such charge is not for transportation, storage, or delivery of freight, within Code, §§ 1202, 1203, which declare that no charge other than that provided by law shall be made. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Adams, 90 Va. 393, 18 S. E. 673, 22 L. R. A. 530, 44 Am. St. Rep. 916.

"The right to demurrage, if it exists as a legal right, is confined to the maritime law, and only exists as to carriers by seagoing vessels. But it is believed to exist alone by force of contract. All such contracts of affreightment contain an agreement for demurrage in case of delay beyond the period allowed by the agreement, or the custom of the port allowed the consignee to receive and remove the goods. But the mode of doing business by the two kinds of carriers is essentially different. Railroad companies have warehouses in which to store freights; owners of vessels have none. Railroads discharge cargoes carried by them; carriers by ship do not, but it is done by the consignee. The masters of vessels provide in the contract for demurrage, while railroads do not, and it is seen these essential differences are, under the rules of the maritime law, wholly inapplicable to railroad carriers." Chicago & Northwestern Ry. Co. v. Jenkins, 103 Ill. 588, 599 (cited in Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Chicago Lumber Co., 15 Neb. 390, 393, 19 N. W. 451).

DEMURRER.

See "Parol Demurrer."

DEMURRER TO THE EVIDENCE.

The purpose of a demurrer to the evidence is not to bring before the court an investigation of facts in dispute, nor the weight of evidence, but to refer to the court questions of law arising on the facts as ascertained. Where the parol evidence in a cause is indeterminate or circumstantial, the defendant cannot demur to the evidence, and oblige the plaintiff to join in a demurrer without distinctly admitting on the record every fact which plaintiff's evidence conduces to prove. Bass v. Rublee (Vt.) 57 Atl. 965, 966.

DENIAL OF KNOWLEDGE OR INFORMATION.

A "denial of knowledge or information" includes a denial of any knowledge or information. Hence an answer denying knowledge and information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations contained in specified paragraphs of the complaint is in substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 500, providing that the answer must contain a denial of each material allegation of the complaint controverted by the defendant, or of any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief. Hidden v. Godfrey, 85 N. Y. Supp. 197, 198, 88 App. Div. 496.

DEPARTMENT REPORT.

A report made by a court or by its direction, or in obedience to some requirement of the law, is a "department report." The reports enumerated in Const. arts. 4, 6, requiring all officers of executive departments and public institutions to make full and complete reports to the Governor, and requiring the judges of courts inferior to the Supreme Court to report in writing to the judges of the Supreme Court, are "department reports" contemplated by article 5, § 29, relating to the printing and distribution of department reports. Gillette v. Peabody (Colo.) 75 Pac. 18, 20.

DEPARTURE.

A departure in pleading is said to be when a party quits or departs from the case or defense which he has first made, and has recourse to another. It occurs when the replication or rejoinder, etc., contains matter not pursuant to the declaration or plea, etc., which does not support and fortify it. Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 36 South. 707, 710, 139 Ala. 578 (citing McAdem v. Gibson, 5 Ala. 341).

DEPOSIT.

See "Special Deposit."

A deposit of money to one's credit in a bank does not operate to diminish the estate of the depositor; for when he parts with the money he creates at the same time, on the part of the bank, an obligation to pay the amount of the deposit as soon as the depositor may see fit to draw a check against it. It is not a transfer of property as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 201, 192 U. S. 138, 48 L. Ed. 380.

DEPOSITION.

"Depositions are a species of evidence of a secondary character, admissible where the viva voce testimony of the deponent is not attainable." Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4096, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 328, c. 224, providing that, where a corporation is a party, the president, managing agent, or agent, or employé of the corporation may be examined before trial, depositions of mere employés of a defendant corporation, taken before trial, are not admissible, where deponents are present at the trial, subject to be called and examined as witnesses. Hughes v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co. (Wis.) 99 N. W. 897, 902 (quoting Weeks, Depositions, §§ 4-6).

DEPRIVED OF EMPLOYMENT.

Under Greater New York Charter, § 1090 (Laws 1897, p. 394, c. 378, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 472, c. 466), providing that, in case of the discontinuance of any school, teachers who may be thereby deprived of employment shall be preferred in appointments to be made, a teacher employed in both day and night schools, whose night employment was terminated by discontinuance of the school in which he was employed, but whose employment in day school continued, was not "deprived of employment," so as to be entitled to preference in appointment. Cusack v. Board of Education of City of New York, 85 N. Y. Supp. 991, 993, 89 App. Div. 355.

DERAIL SWITCH.

A derail switch is a device which when set will cause a car running loose on the side track to run off its rails to the ground before reaching the main track. Jones v. Kansas

City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 892, 178 Mo. 528.

DERECHO.

"Derecho," in Spanish law, is the impost laid upon goods or provisions, persons or lands, by way of tax or contribution. Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576, 608.

DESCENDANT.

The word "heirs" or "descendants," used in the creation of a separate estate of a married woman, will not, at her death, exclude the marital rights of the husband, except as to the children. Wood v. Reamer (Ky.) 82 S. W. 572, 574.

DESCENT.

See "Indians by Descent."

DESCRIPTION.

Any description, see "Any."

DESERTION.

See "Continued Desertion"; "Willful Desertion."

"Desertion," when applied to the relation of husband and wife, has a well-defined legal meaning, and signifies the act by which a man quits the society of his wife and children, or either of them, and renounces his duties towards them. State v. Baker, 36 South. 703, 704, 112 La. 801 (citing Black).

"Desertion" is the willful separation of one of the married parties from the other, without legal cause. A separation by mutual consent is not desertion on the part of either, unless one of the parties offers to resume cohabitation and the offer is refused. Burnett v. State (Ark.) 81 S. W. 382, 383.

Although a husband, after separating himself from his wife and children without lawful excuse, still provides for their support, his conduct may constitute the matrimonial offense of desertion. Power v. Power (N. J.) 58 Atl. 192, 194.

Where the husband establishes a new home, and requests his wife to follow him to the new domicile, and furnishes her the means with which to travel, and she declines to take up her residence with him, the husband is not thereby guilty of deserting the wife. Roby v. Roby (Idaho) 77 Pac. 213, 214.

DESIGN.

See "Premeditated Design."

"Intent to kill" means just what the ordinary signification of the words suggest.

Whether it be described by the words "actual intent," "design," or "premeditated design" makes no difference. When we leave entirely out of view those subtleties, often indulged in in discoursing on the meaning of "premeditated design," and giving words the meaning ordinarily attributed to them, the person who effects the death of another by design does so intentionally, and the design or intent is understood to necessarily precede the act by which the purpose is accomplished. In other words, the intent is understood to be premeditated or thought of, because without mental action the purpose could not be formed. So when it is said that the slayer intentionally caused the death of his victim, it is at the same time said that he caused it by design or premeditated design. That the word "premeditated," as used in the statutes of the subject of felonious homicide, has no other significance than that the design must precede the homicidal act, is indicated from the evident purpose of the statute makers to give the same meaning to the term "premeditated design," where used inclusively in murder in the first degree, as to "design," where that word alone is used exclusively in murder in the third, and manslaughter in the first, second, and third, degrees. Cupps v. State (Wis.) 98 N. W. 546, 549.

DESIGNATE.

The word "designate," as used in a constitutional provision, directing the Legislature to enact a law whereby any county, justice precinct, town, city, or such subdivision of the county as may be designated by the commissioners' court of the county, may determine from time to time whether the sale of intoxicants shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits, has not the same meaning as the word "create," and the Legislature is not authorized to empower the commissioners' court to combine two or more political subdivisions of a county into a local option district, thus creating a new subdivision. Ex parte Heymen (Tex.) 78 S. W. 349, 352.

DESIRE.

The words "desire" and "request" do not import a trust where testatrix devised certain real estate to her husband, and stated that it was her desire and request that he should convey the same to a lodge, so as to impose on it the duty to properly care for the cemetery lot in which she might be buried. They should be understood in their usual sense, in the absence of anything in the will to indicate that they were used in any other than their ordinary sense. Kauffman v. Gries, 74 Pac. 846, 848, 141 Cal. 295.

"The mere use in a will of the precautionary words 'desire' and 'request' will not be sufficient to create an enforceable trust or a power in the nature of a trust, when the context clearly shows that the testator's intention was contrary." A testator made a devise to an educational institution, and provided that in case the devise should fail for any cause the same should go to the children of his two brothers. In a codicil he authorized, empowered, and requested his daughter, his only lineal descendant, to ratify and confirm the devise to the institution, declaring that in case she complied with the request the gifts over should be revoked. The daughter executed the power by a deed to the institution, and the gift over was thereby revoked. Thomas v. Board of Trustees of Ohio State University, 70 N. E. 896, 899, 70 Ohio St. 92.

The words "I desire" that my real estate shall be sold are the equivalent of the words "I will" that it be sold. In re Pforr's Estate, 77 Pac. 825, 827, 144 Cal. 121; Thornagel v. Pforr, Id.

DEVISE.

See "Executory Devise"; "Specific Devise."

Devise to a class, see "Class."

A devise is a gift of real property by a last will and testament. In re Dailey's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 538, 541, 43 Misc. Rep. 552.

DEVOLVE.

An estate is said to "devolve" upon another when by operation of law, and without any voluntary act of the previous owner, it passes from one person to another; but it does not devolve from one person to another as the result of some positive act or agreement between them. The word is itself of intransitive signification, and does not include the result of an act which is intended to produce a particular effect. It implies a result without the intervention of any voluntary actor. Instances of its appropriate use are found when speaking of the succession of estates upon death, or upon a change of official incumbents; also in proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency, where by the act or operation of law the estate of the bankrupt devolves upon his assignee. A transfer by a debtor of property not accompanied by change of possession is not void as against the assignee for the benefit of the debtor's creditors, under Civ. Code, § 4491, declaring such transfer void as against any one on whom the debtor's estate devolves in trust for the benefit of others, as the estate does not devolve by such assignment, but is granted by it. Babcock v. Maxwell, 74 Pac. 64, 66, 29 Mont. 31.

DIAGRAM.

A diagram is simply an illustrative outline of a tract of land, or something else capable of linear projection, which is not necessarily intended to be perfectly correct and accurate. Shook v. Pate, 50 Ala. 91, 92.

DICTA.

See "Judicial Dicta"; "Obiter Dicta."

DIE.

When a devise or bequest to children is made with a provision over "if either of my children should die," the courts will assume that the testator had in mind something less than merely to provide for the case of the legatee dying at some time, and in such cases the courts will construe the bequest over as intended to take effect in case the death referred to should occur in the testator's lifetime or before some fixed period for the enjoyment of the estate or gift which is in such event to go over. McClellan v. MacKenzie (U. S.) 126 Fed. 701, 704, 61 C. C. A. 619 (citing 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1126; In re Haywood, L. R. 19 Ch. D. 470).

DIE WITHOUT ISSUE.

The words "die without issue" are equivalent to die without leaving heirs of the body, contemplating what is known as an indefinite failure of issue. Gilkie v. Marsh, 71 N. E. 703, 704, 186 Mass. 336.

A testator devised land to his son, with a proviso that "should my son die without issue then the said realty shall revert to my lawful heirs." In the same will he devised real estate to others of his children in language clearly signifying a definite failure of issue. The devise to the son imported an indefinite failure of issue, and he took an estate tail, which, by Act April 27, 1855 (P. L. 368), was enlarged into an estate in fee simple. Graham v. Abbott, 57 Atl. 178, 179, 208 Pa. 68.

DIFFERING IN PHASE.

"Differing in phase," as used in the definition of multiphase system in the transmission of electric power, as consisting of the use of two or more alternating currents of equal period, but differing in phase, means that the two alternations or current waves do not come together, but one after or at a different time from the other. Harrison v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry. (Mich.) 100 N. W. 451, 452.

DIFFICULT.

The words "difficult" and "extraordinary," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 3253, authorizing the court to grant an additional allowance where the action is difficult and extraordinary, must be given their usual and accepted meaning. A general rule specifying the precise limitation that they impose upon the power of courts to grant an additional allowance may be difficult to formulate, but every application to the facts of a particular case when presented is not troublesome. The section does not authorize an additional allowance in an action for personal injuries where the only question for the court is the amount of the damages, and no difficult questions of law are involved. Standard Trust Co. v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 70 N. E. 925, 926, 178 N. Y. 407.

DILIGENCE.

See "Due Diligence."

DIMENSION STONE.

The terms "dimension stone" and "footing stone" are synonymous, but neither is the synonym of "rubblestone." Nugent v. Armour Packing Co. (Mo.) 81 S. W. 506, 507.

DIRECT.

The charter of a city authorizing the council to "direct and control" the location of railroad tracks does not include the power to authorize the construction of railroads and the exercise of the right to eminent domain. It merely vests in the council as part of the police power, to be exercised in providing for the public safety and convenience in the use of streets and alleys, a supervision over the location of railroad tracks, where the authority to construct the railroad already exists. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527, 529, 46 N. W. 75.

The words "control and direction," in Laws 1859, p. 359, c. 143, as amended by Laws 1889, p. 7, c. 7, providing that the free bridge over the Mohawk river between certain towns shall be under the control and direction of the commissioners of highways of the towns, were of no broader significance with reference to the duties and powers of the commissioners of highways of the two towns in question than the words "care and superintendence" in the highway law with reference to the duties and powers of commissioners of highways in the towns of the state. Town of Palatine v. Canajoharie Water Supply Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 412, 414, 90 App. Div. 548.

A provision in a will that "I hereby direct my executors to sell" and dispose of all my real estate gives no discretionary authority, but the direction is imperative, and the executors are absolutely obliged to make the conversion, and its proceeds are thereafter to be held and treated as personal property. Thissell v. Schillinger, 71 N. E. 300, 301, 186 Mass. 180.

DIRECT ATTACK.

A direct attack on a judgment is an attempt to amend, correct, reform, vacate, or enjoin the execution of same in a proceeding instituted for that purpose, such as a motion for a rehearing and appeal, some form of writ of error, a bill of review, or an injunction to restrain its execution. Scudder v. Cox (Tex.) 80 S. W. 872, 873.

DIRECT EVIDENCE.

"Direct evidence" is defined to be that which proves the fact in dispute directly, without an inference or presumption, and which, in itself, if true, conclusively establishes that fact. Lake County v. Neilson, 74 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 14.

DIRECT INTEREST.

If the legal effect of a judgment will be to establish a claim against the witness, he has a "direct interest" in the event of the suit, within Laws 1867, p. 183, removing the disqualification of witnesses on account of their interest in the event, except that a party interested shall not be allowed to testify of his own motion. A judgment against a street railway company for death caused by the alleged negligence of a motorman in an action to which the motorman was not a party would not be evidence against the motorman in a suit by the railway company to recover over against him, and hence such motorman was not interested in the suit against the railway company so as to be an incompetent witness for the defendant therein within such statute. Feitl v. Chicago City R. Co., 71 N. E. 991, 994, 211 Ill. 279.

DIRECT LEGAL INTEREST.

The interest of the president of a bank as a stockholder is a "direct legal interest," within Code Civ. Proc. § 329, which prohibits a person having such an interest from testifying as to a contract or transaction had with a decedent. Dickenson v. Columbus State Bank (Neb.) 98 N. W. 813, 814.

DIRECT LOSS.

The word "direct," as used in a fire policy, insuring a stock of merchandise in a described building against "all direct loss or damage by fire," except as provided therein, means no more and no less than proximate and immediate. Insurance Co. of North America v. Leader (Ga.) 48 S. E. 972, 974.

DIRECT PAYMENT OF MONEY.

The word "direct," as defined by Webster, is immediate, express, absolute; and if it is to be given any meaning as used in the attachment statute referring to actions on contracts for the payment of money it must distinguish a particular class of contracts for the payment of money from all other contracts for the payment of money. In other words, that class of contracts which provide for the direct payment of money must differ somewhat from all other contracts for the payment of money, or the term "direct" has no meaning whatever. An action against sureties on a bond conditioned to be void if the principal performed his contract is not an action on a contract for the "direct payment of money," within Code Civ. Proc. § 890, authorizing an attachment in such an action. Ancient Order of Hibernians v. Sparrow, 74 Pac. 197, 199, 29 Mont. 132, 64 L. R. A. 128.

DISABILITY.

Other disability, see "Other."

The contract of an employé with the relief department of a railroad provided for payment for each day of disability by reason of accident. The regulations of the department provided that the word "disability" should be held to mean physical inability to work. It is held that the decision of the medical examiner that the employé who had suffered amputation of a leg by reason of his injury was "able to work" will not be construed to mean that the employé has recovered from his disability, when it is shown by the evidence that the examiner at the same time declared plaintiff "able to do light work at present, * * * but he is still disabled." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Olson (Neb.) 97 N. W. 831, 833.

DISAGREEMENT.

There is a "disagreement" within the meaning of the term as used in the arbitration clause of an insurance policy, providing that in the event of disagreement as to the amount of loss the same shall be ascertained by two competent and disinterested appraisers, so as to necessitate arbitration, where insured and the insurer have in writing stated their disagreement as to the amount of the loss, and have each selected an arbitrator. Fowble v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 81 S. W. 485, 487, 106 Mo. App. 527.

DISBURSEMENTS.

See "Costs and Disbursements."

DISCHARGE.

"Any form of words which convey to the servant the idea that his services are no longer required are sufficient to constitute a discharge." Johnson v. Crookston Lumber Co. (Minn.) 100 N. W. 225 (citing 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] p. 26).

The words "removal" and "discharge" are used indiscriminately in the statute to designate orders of court which have the effect of simply removing guardians, executors, etc., from office without exonerating them from liability to account. Code Civ. Proc. § 1805, requiring action on a guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from the "discharge or removal" of the guardian, applies to an action after a final order of the court removing or discharging the guardian, and does not include termination of the guardianship by the ward attaining majority. Cook v. Ceas, 77 Pac. 65, 143 Cal. 221.

DISCOUNTED.

A note given to a bank in payment of a debt, including interest for the ensuing year, is not "discounted," within a provision of the bank's charter that notes discounted by it are placed on the same footing as foreign bills of exchange. Bramblette v. Deposit Bank of Carlisle (Ky.) 79 S. W. 193, 194.

A petition alleging that an obligation was during business hours at the plaintiff's regular place of business, and before its maturity, "discounted" at, by, and to plaintiff, is sufficiently explicit, as the term "discounted" has a well-known legal definition, which involved the statement that the note had been bought by the bank and paid for, it deducting and reserving interest. Davis v. Boone County Deposit Bank (Ky.) 80 S. W. 161, 162.

DISCOVERY.

See "Prior Discovery."

DISCRETION.

See "Judicial Discretion."

DISEASE.

The word "disease," as used in an accident policy providing that no recovery should be had in case of death resulting from disease in any form, either as cause or effect, does not apply to a temporary derangement of the stomach, so as to preclude a recovery for insured's death by being thrown from the platform of a railway train whence he had gone for the purpose of vomiting. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co. of New York v. Muir, 128 Fed. 926, 929, 61 C. C. A. 456.

Blood poisoning is a disease, just as many other pathological conditions of the human system resulting from the introduction therein of other specific bacilli are diseases. It is, indeed, wholly immaterial whether the pathological condition which results in death is due to bacilli or not. Delaney v. Modern Acc. Club, 97 N. W. 91, 93, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L. R. A. 603.

DISGUISE.

See "In Disguise."

DISMISSAL.

"In those jurisdictions where the rule indicated by the word 'retraxit' has been recognized, the substance of the matter seems to be that a dismissal by agreement of the parties is equivalent to and is treated as a public renunciation on the part of the complainant of the claim asserted by him in his pleadings against the defendant, and he is thereafter estopped to bring it forward again." Lindsay v. Allen (Tenn.) 82 S. W. 171, 174.

DISMISSAL WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

The effect of a dismissal without prejudice in a decree of dismissal is to prevent such decree from constituting a bar to another bill brought upon the same title; but it by no means compromises the court as a judicial determination in favor of such title. Lang's Heirs v. Waring, 25 Ala. 625, 639, 60 Am. Dec. 533.

DISPUTE.

See "Amount in Dispute"; "Matter in Dispute."

DISQUALIFIED.

Under Rev. St. c. 3, § 18, which provides that administration shall be granted to the husband upon the estate of his wife if he will accept the same and is not "disqualified," a postnuptial contract by which a husband relinquishes all his right and interest in his wife's estate does not justify the county court in refusing him letters of administration on her estate, since his right to administer does not depend on his interest in the estate, but upon the mandatory provision of the statute. Orear v. Crum, 25 N. E. 1097, 1098, 135 Ill. 294.

DISSOLUTION.

See "De Facto Dissolution."

By a dissolution in law is meant a dissolution which may take place either by a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, or by a legislative repeal of a charter of a corporation where the right of repeal has been reserved in the statute granting the charter, or in the Constitution or in the general law, or by the expiration of the period named in the charter as the period of the duration of the life of the corporation. Youree v. Home Town Mut. Ins. Co. of Warrensburg, 79 S. W. 176, 178, 180 Mo. 153 (citing Thomp. Corp.).

A dissolution of a corporation, within the contemplation of the law, is the death of the corporation. It means a disintegration, a separation, a going out of business. Theis v. Spokane Falls Gaslight Co., 74 Pac. 1004, 1006, 34 Wash. 23.

DISTRIBUTE.

The words "heir" and "distributee," as used in Rev. St. 1893, § 2316, relating to actions for wrongful death, and declaring that every such action shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and children of the person whose death shall have been so caused, and, if there be none such, then for the benefit of the heirs at law or distributees of the person whose death shall have been so caused, etc., mean the same thing. Kitchen v. Southern Ry., 48 S. E. 4, 6, 68 S. C. 554.

DISTRICT.

See "School District."

The word "district," as used in Rev. St. § 1014 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 716], providing that, where any offender is committed in any district other than where the offense is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of the district where the offender is imprisoned to issue a warrant for his removal to the district where the trial is to be had, applied, at the time of the original act, to one of the judicial districts into which, by that act, the United States was divided; but by virtue of Act Feb. 21, 1871, c. 62, 16

Stat. 426, declaring that the Constitution and laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the District of Columbia as elsewhere within the United States, the word "district" includes the District of Columbia, and hence section 1014 authorizes the removal of a federal offender to the District of Columbia for trial of an offense committed there. In re Benson (U. S.) 130 Fed. 486, 488.

To give the word "district" its common meaning, it would unquestionably embrace a township as well as many other subdivisions of territory, although in its application it would in many cases include less territory than a township, such as an election district or a school district. The word "district," as used in Act May 8, 1889 (P. L. 136), providing for the incorporation of electric light companies, and section 2, authorizing such corporations to supply light, heat, and power to the public in the borough, town, city, or district where it may be located, includes a township. Brown v. Radnor Tp. Electric Light Co., 57 Atl. 904, 905, 208 Pa. 453.

DITCH.

No technical effect in conveyancing has been attributed to the word "ditch." Plaintiffs declared in ejectment for a strip of land 14 feet wide and about 600 feet long, extending to tidal waters, and designated in their deed as "a certain ditch." At the trial their claim of title rested on a deed containing the following clause: "And also the said party of the second part [the plaintiffs] is to have the exclusive privilege and use of a certain ditch that leads," etc. The grant of this exclusive privilege was not a conveyance of land, for the recovery of the possession of which the action could be maintained. Conover v. Atlantic City Sewerage Co. (N. J.) 57 Atl. 897, 898.

DIVIDE.

See "Equally Divided."

Where the Legislature, after fixing the boundaries of counties, refers to "streams which divide counties," it must be understood as meaning streams in which are situated the boundary lines which divide counties. Dodge County v. Saunders County (Neb.) 97 N. W. 617, 618.

DIVISION.

See "Subdivision."

The circuit court of the city of St. Louis, which is the Eighth Judicial Circuit, is one court, composed of many parts, called "divisions"; each division being, for certain purposes, in itself a complete court, and independent of the other divisions. A suit is not begun in any division. It is begun in the circuit court, and, under rules of the court, is assigned to a division. When a cause is assigned to a division, that division becomes as to that cause a whole court, and has as exclusive jurisdiction of it as a circuit court of an adjoining county has of a cause pending in it. Goddard v. Delaney (Mo.) 80 S. W. 886, 891.

DIVISION FENCE.

The words "division fence" in Civ. Code, § 1301, relating to division fences between coterminous owners, means that the fence is to be one dividing the contiguous property. Hoar v. Hennessy, 74 Pac. 452, 454, 455, 29 Mont. 253.

DIVORCE PROCEEDING.

As civil action, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

DOCK.

See "Dry Dock."

"A dock is an artificial basin in connection with a harbor, used for the reception of vessels in the taking on or discharging of their cargoes, and provided with gates for preventing the rise and fall of the waters occasioned by the tides, and keeping a uniform level within the docks." Perry v. Haines, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 13, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

DOCUMENT.

The indictments against a person are "records or documents filed in a public office under authority of law." Code Cr. Proc. § 272; Code Civ. Proc. § 866. They are the property of the state, and a willful and unlawful removal of them constitutes a crime under Pen. Code, § 94. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 789, 178 N. Y. 274, 18 N. Y. Cr. R. 269.

DOING BUSINESS.

See, also, "Carrying on Business"; "Transacting Business."

"It is impossible to assent to the proposition that 'doing business' within a state means a persistent or continuous condition of doing or offering to do business, usually leading to the appointment of an agent or the establishment of an office within the state." An officer and authorized agent of defendant, a manufacturing corporation of another state, was in Connecticut on business connected with a contract made with

[Appendix.]

Plaintiff by the predecessor of defendant, to whose rights and liabilities it had succeeded, when he was served with summons in an action brought by plaintiff against defendant in the federal court for Connecticut for breach of the same contract. Neither defendant nor its predecessor had ever maintained an office or agent in Connecticut, but they had made a number of sales in the state, including the one to plaintiff which was in controversy. Held, that the service was good, and gave the court jurisdiction of defendant. New Haven Pulp & Board Co. v. Downingtown Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 605, 608.

Defendant, a Virginia railroad company, neither owned nor operated any railroad located in Pennsylvania, and maintained no office in that state, though three directors and its assistant secretary resided there, who may, at various times, have received and given information indirectly affecting the corporation's business elsewhere. Defendant's cars, both freight and passenger, were transported through Pennsylvania by other railroads, for the convenience of passengers and shippers, such railroads, however, paying for the use of the cars, and receiving the freight and passenger rates for that portion of the haul that was done in Pennsylvania. Defendant was also a member of a freight transportation line which maintained an agency in Pennsylvania for the solicitation of freight to be shipped under through bills of lading, each line receiving a proportionate share of the freight, and each contributing to the expenses of the agency; and another railroad located in Pennsylvania sold coupon tickets in connection with its own tickets only, good over defendant's road, accounting each month to defendant for its proportion of the proceeds. The facts did not justify a finding that defendant was doing business in Pennsylvania, so as to authorize it to be sued in that state. Earle v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 235, 237.

A foreign insurance company, though it has ceased to solicit new business, is still doing business in the state, so that jurisdiction may be acquired by service on an agent, where it still has outstanding policies in the state, on which it collects dues, and, in case of losses thereunder, adjusts them and makes remittances. Johnston v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ins. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 438, 441, 43 Misc. Rep. 251.

A foreign corporation, the office of which is in another state, and which merely has an agent in this state, who maintains an office for his own convenience, and does not have exclusive control of the business in the state, and keeps no books nor bank account, and makes no contracts for the sale of goods, but reports everything to the home office, and who usually makes sales to parties outside the state, and, while a particular sale was made of coal situated in the state to a resident, it had been previously sold to a party without the state, who had rejected it, is not doing business in the state within Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 1326, c. 538, prescribing the conditions on which foreign corporations may do business in the state. Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 87 N. Y. S. 869, 93 App. Div. 303.

A corporation, to be "doing business," must transact within the state some substantial part of its ordinary business, continuous in the sense that it is distinguished from merely casual or occasional transactions, and it must be of such a character as will give rise to some form of legal obligation. Where a foreign railroad corporation only maintained an advertising agent within the state, whose duties were only to explain to intending travelers and shippers of freight the advantages of traveling and shipping over such railroad, and the agent possessed no power to sell tickets or contract on behalf of the railroad company, the railroad was not doing business within the state, so as to authorize service of summons on it by delivering a copy to such agent. Rich v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 74 Pac. 1008, 1009, 34 Wash. 14.

A single transaction by a foreign corporation may constitute a "doing of business in this state" within the meaning of section 1283, Gen. St. 1901, making certain requirements of foreign corporations doing business in the state, where such transaction is a part of the ordinary business of the corporation, and indicates a purpose to carry on a substantial part of its dealings here. John Deere Plow Co. v. Wyland (Kan.) 76 Pac. 863.

DOMESTIC BILL

A domestic bill, under the Mississippi statutes, is one drawn by a person in the state, or dated at a place in the state, or a person living therein. Ragsdale v. Franklin 25 Miss. 143, 145.

DOMICILE.

See "Change of Domicile."

Domicile is the place where one has his true fixed permanent home and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning, and where he exercises his political rights. There must exist in combination the fact of residence and the animus manendi. Residence within the district, to give the court jurisdiction of proceedings in bankruptcy, must be bona fide; and the removal of a person from one district to another, for the express purpose of filing a petition in bankruptcy therein, and with the intent of leaving the district as soon as he obtained a discharge, does not make him a resident, so as to confer jurisdiction on the court. In re Garneau (U. S.) 127 Fed. 677, 678, 62 C. C. A. 403.

Every person must have a domicile. He can have but one, which, when once established, continues until he renounces it and takes up another in its stead. It is not lost by temporary absence. The question is one of fact, and it is often difficult to determine. A person who has left his home in the country, and moved with his family to a city, where he has a residence, with no fixed intention of returning to his country home, which he has rented on shares, reserving three rooms in the house for his own use, becomes a resident of the city, and is liable to be taxed as such. City of Lebanon v. Biggers (Ky.) 78 S. W. 213, 214.

Residence distinguished.

"The distinction between 'residence' and 'domicile,' in the law of process and attachment, is very clearly marked by the decisions. 'Domicile' is a much broader term than that of 'residence.' A man may have his domicile in one state, and actually reside in another, or in a foreign country. If he has once had a residence in a particular place, and removed to another, but with the intention of returning after a certain time, however long that may be, his domicile is at the former residence, and his residence at the place of his habitation." Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College, 46 S. E. 253, 259, 54 W. Va. 32 (quoting Drake, Attach. § 59).

The word "domicile," in a statute which provides that no person who is an inhabitant of the state shall be sued out of the county in which he has his domicile, except in certain cases, is used in the sense of "residence." There may, however, be a difference between a man's residence and his domicile. He may have his domicile in one place, and still may have a residence in another; for, although a man for most purposes can be said to have but one domicile, he may have several residences. Pearson v. West (Tex.) 77 S. W. 944, 945 (quoting Brown v. Boulden, 18 Tex. 431, 434).

Of corporation.

The "domicile of a corporation" is within the jurisdiction that creates it, but it is a well-settled principle that foreign corporations seeking to do business within another jurisdiction, with some exceptions, can only enter it for the purpose of doing business under a permit, when it is required, and the law granting the permission can impose conditions that practically submit such corporation to the jurisdiction of the state, so far as pertains to the business there carried on. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (Tex.) 80 S. W. 544, 550.

DONATIO CAUSA MORTIS.

See "Gift Causa Mortis."

DONATIO INTER VIVOS.

See "Gift Inter Vivos."

DONE.

See "Business Done."

DORMANT JUDGMENT.

The word "dormant," as applied to judgments, is broad enough to cover judgments which have not wholly lost their vitality, but which cannot support an execution for want of necessary parties. Manley v. Mayer (Kan.) 75 Pac. 550, 556.

DOUBT.

See "Reasonable Doubt."

DOWER.

See "Election Dower."

Dower accrues to the widow, and not to the wife, and until she becomes a widow her right is inchoate and contingent. Her claim can only become effective on the death of her husband and her survival. Sherman v. Hayward, 90 N. Y. Supp. 481, 482.

DRAINAGE OF LAND.

The term "drainage of land" has practically the same application as "reclamation." The one is the means employed, the other the result. Laguna Drainage Dist. v. Charles Martin Co., 77 Pac. 933, 935, 144 Cal. 209.

DRAWING A PRIZE.

"Drawing a prize" is the ascertainment, by chance or otherwise, of who is entitled to a particular result or a particular thing, by means of some prearranged mode of ascertaining the result; and as soon as the number which entitles the ticket holder to the money or article is drawn from the wheel, or otherwise ascertained, the prize is said to be "drawn." The drawing and receiving are independent acts. People v. Kent, 6 Cal. 89, 90.

DRAWING THE STUMPS.

Where the coal in any division or section of a mine has been exhausted, all the miners are withdrawn from that particular place, and the stumps or pillars of coal supporting the roof over the room in which the miners work are taken out for the coal they contain. In removing them, props of timber are used to support the roof. The removing of these pillars or stumps is called "drawing the stumps." East Jellico Coal Co. v. Golden (Ky.) 79 S. W. 291, 292.

DRESS GOODS.

Wool dress robes or dress patterns, consisting of women's dress goods of wool, embroidered with silk, imported in single patterns in separate lengths and pieces, each pattern comprising the material for the body and trimming of a dress, are "dress goods." Thomas v. Wanamaker (U. S.) 129 Fed. 92, 63 C. C. A. 594.

Embroidered dress goods of wool are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule K, par. 369, 30 Stat. 184 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1667], as "dress goods * * * of wool, and not specially provided for," rather than as "articles embroidered by hand or machinery * * * made of wool," under paragraph 371 of said act (30 Stat. 185 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1667]). Hall & Bishop v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 648.

DRUGS.

Fresh leaves of aconite and belladonna, and fresh roots of bryonia, immersed in their natural condition in alcohol for preservation, are not "drugs advanced in value or condition," as used in paragraph 20, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1628]. Boericke & Runyon Co. v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 1018.

DRUMMER.

The word "drummers," as used in Rev. St. Mo. §§ 1024-1026, requiring foreign corporations for pecuniary profit doing business in the state to file articles of incorporation and be subject to local visitation and the payment of taxes on its business, and expressly excepting from the operation of the statute "drummers or traveling salesmen soliciting business in this state for foreign corporations which are entirely nonresident," means employes of such corporations employed to go into other states and communities to drum up and solicit business for the houses they represent. Strain v. Chicago Portrait Co., 126 Fed. 831, 835.

DRUNKENNESS.

As temporary insanity, see "Temporary Insanity."

DRY DOCK.

A dry dock differs from an ordinary dock only in the fact that it is smaller, and provided with machinery for pumping out the water in order that the vessel may be repaired. All injuries suffered by the hulls of vessels below the water line, by collision or stranding, must necessarily be repaired in a dry dock. Proceedings in rem to enforce a lien for repairs furnished to a vessel which was at the time engaged in navigating the Erie Canal are no less within the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts because such repairs were made in dry dock. Perry v. Haines, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 13, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

DUE.

See "Debt Due or to Become Due"; "Now Due and Payable."

"Due" means owed or owing to. It implies an obligation or duty imposed by law—the duty to pay what is owed—but it does not of itself imply a promise to do so. In re McGuire & Hanlein (U. S.) 132 Fed. 394, 395.

DUE CARE.

The expression "due care" is not the equivalent of "ordinary care." City of San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex.) 78 S. W. 28, 32.

DUE COURSE OF LAW.

The expressions "due course of law" and "law of the land" do not mean any act that the Legislature may have passed, if such act does not give to one opportunity to be heard before being deprived of property, liberty, or reputation, or, having been deprived of either, does not afford a like opportunity of showing the extent of his injury, and give an adequate remedy to recover therefor. Hanson v. Krehbiel (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1041, 1042, 64 L. R. A. 790.

DUE DILIGENCE.

A passenger in such a stupor that he could not be waked up either by shaking or kicking could not have been found to have been a person "in the exercise of due care and diligence," had an indictment been resorted to, and therefore he could not be found to have been in the exercise of due diligence, as was alleged in an action to recover a penalty for wrongfully causing his death. The court continued: "We use the words 'due diligence' in place of the words 'due care' found in Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 267, merely because those are the words of the count in question, and of St. 1886, p. 117, c. 140, under which the action was brought, and not because there is any distinction between those words and the words of Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 267." Hudson v. Lynn & B. R. Co., 71 N. E. 66, 70, 185 Mass. 510.

DUE IN THE SAME RIGHT.

See "Debt Due in the Same Right."

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Whether property is taken without due process of law depends upon the nature of each particular case. If it be such an exercise of power "as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the classes to which the one in question belongs," it is due process of law. Leigh v. Green, 24 Sup. Ct. 390, 392, 193 U. S. 79, 4 L. Ed. 623 (quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] 506).

To say that the law of the land, or due process of law, may mean the very act of the Legislature which deprives the citizen of his rights, privileges, or property, leads to a simple absurdity. The Constitution would then mean that no person should be deprived of his property or rights unless the Legislature shall pass a law to effect the wrong, and this would be throwing the restraint away. It follows that a law which, by its own inherent force, extinguishes rights of property, or compels their extinction without any legal proceedings whatever, comes directly in conflict with the Constitution. King v. Hatfield (U. S.) 130 Fed. 564, 579 (quoting Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378).

"Due process of law in a criminal case requires a law describing the offense. The offense must be described in the accusation. The accused must be given his day in court. His trial must proceed according to established procedure, consisting of rules of pleading and practice." Jamison v. Wimbish (U. S.) 130 Fed. 351, 358 (quoting 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law [2d Ed.] p. 303).

"Due process of law" means an orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case, in which the citizen has an opportunity to be heard; and, where such opportunity is granted by the law, the citizen cannot complain of the procedure to which he is required to conform. State v. District Court of St. Louis County, 97 N. W. 132, 134, 90 Minn. 457.

Due process of law requires that the owner be given an opportunity to be heard at a trial before his private property be taken and adjudged forfeited for his misconduct or for a protection of the public health. He cannot be deprived of the right, either before or after such taking of the property, to have a judicial inquiry whether in fact he has forfeited the right to his property by coming within the condemnation of the law. Lowe v. Conroy (Wis.) 97 N. W. 942, 944, 66 L. R. A. 907.

By "due process of law" is meant notice and an opportunity to be heard. Beebe v. Magoun, 97 N. W. 986, 122 Iowa, 94.

"Due process of law may be said to be satisfied whenever an opportunity is offered to invoke the equal protection of the law by judicial proceedings appropriate for the purpose, and adequate to secure the end and object sought to be attained." Reed v. Reed (Neb.) 98 N. W. 73, 76.

"Due process of law" means according to the settled course of judicial proceedings." City of St. Louis v. Galt, 77 S. W. 876, 879, 179 Mo. 8, 63 L. R. A. 778.

A jury trial is not necessary to constitute "due process of law" in every case. A defendant is not deprived of due process of law, in a proceeding under an act providing for the condemnation and destruction of liquor illegally kept for sale, by the fact that he was denied a jury trial. Kirkland v. State (Ark.) 78 S. W. 770, 772, 65 L. R. A. 76.

The expression "due process of law," as used in the Constitution of the United States, does not require that the assertion of the rights of the public against the individual, or the imposition of burdens on his property for the public use, shall in all cases be done by resort to courts of justice. McMillan v. City of Butte (Mont.) 76 Pac. 203, 205 (citing Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 59 U. S. [18 How.] 272, 15 L. Ed. 372).

Due process of the law includes every step from summons to judgment, and, if a party is deprived of any right usually accorded to others, it is not "due process of law." Riglander v. Star Co., 90 N. Y. Supp. 772, 776.

DUE TO THE PUBLIC.

See "Debt Due to the Public."

DUEBILL.

"When the court, in Fleming v. Burge, 6 Ala. 373, said that a duebill was, in legal effect, a promissory note, it only announced a well-recognized principle that from a duebill the law implies an obligation to pay the amount acknowledged by it to be owing, as the law implies from a promissory note an obligation on the part of the promisor to pay the amount promised to be paid; yet a duebill and a promissory note are in many respects unlike. A duebill is not assignable by indorsement; a promissory note is. A duebill is not entitled to days of grace; a promissory note is. A duebill is a brief acknowledgment of a debt; a promissory note is a promise in writing to pay a specified sum at a time therein fixed. They are, however, in legal effect, the same, for the law implies a like obligation from each—the obligation to pay the debt acknowledged to be due by the one, and the debt promised to be paid by the other." In re McGuire & Hanlein (U. S.) 132 Fed. 394, 395.

DULY AUTHORIZED AGENT.

A receiver for collection and enforcement of the liability of stockholders, appointed by the court, pursuant to the statutes of Minnesota, in a suit by creditors of the insolvent corporation against it and its stockholders to charge the stockholders with their liability for its debts, is a duly authorized agent of the corporation's creditors to prove their debt against the estate of a bankrupt stockholder. Dight v. Chapman, 75 Pac. 585, 588, 44 Or. 265, 65 L. R. A. 793.

DULY PROTESTED.

"Duly protested" is equivalent to an averment that a bill was presented at maturity at the place of payment named in it. Battle v. Weems, 44 Ala. 105, 107.

DUPLICATE.

"The meaning of the word 'duplicate,' in legal phraseology, is the same as that in its use among business men. It is tersely and correctly stated in 10 Am. & Eng. Encycl. of Law, 318, as follows: "'Duplicate' is defined as a document which is the same in all respects as some other instrument, from which it is indistinguishable in its essence and operation.' A substantially like definition is given of the word in all the law dictionaries in common use. In Burrill's Dictionary, verbum 'Duplicate,' is given the following ample definition: 'A duplicate is sometimes defined to be a copy of a thing, but, though generally a copy, a duplicate differs from a mere copy in having all the validity of an original. Nor, it seems, need it be an exact copy. Defined also to be the counterpart of an instrument; but in indentures there is a distinction between counterparts executed by the several parties, respectively, each party affixing his or her seal to only one counterpart, and duplicate originals, each executed by all the parties.'" In paragraph 6 of Schedule A of the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 458 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2304], which requires a stamp to be affixed to each bill of lading, manifest, etc., "and to each duplicate thereof," the word "duplicate" is to be defined, in accordance with the meaning given it generally in business, as one of two instruments, each of which is original, and intended to have the force of an obligation irrespective of the other, and not as meaning merely a copy. Wright v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 843, 846.

DURESS.

"To constitute 'duress' sufficient to avoid a contract in this state, the means adopted need only be of a character necessary to overcome the will and desire of the injured party, whether that person be below or above the average person in firmness and courage, and whether the means employed come clearly within the common-law definition of 'duress' or otherwise. In other words, the law extends its protection to an individual, without reference to whether he is strong or weak, intellectually, and refuses to measure his rights by an arbitrary yardstick avowedly applicable only to men of ordinary intellect, firmness, and courage." Nebraska Mut. Bond Ass'n v. Klee (Neb.) 97 N. W. 476, 478 (citing First Nat. Bank v. Sargent, 91 N. W. 595, 65 Neb. 594, 59 L. R. A. 296; Galusha v. Sherman, 81 N. W. 495, 501, 105 Wis. 263, 47 L. R. A. 417).

"Duress exists when one, by an unlawful act of another, is induced to make a contract or perform some act under circumstances which deprive him of the exercise of his free will." Where plaintiff admitted that no threats were made to induce her to sign a chattel mortgage, which was given on an exchange of houses between herself and defendant, but, after holding out for several hours and refusing to sign the mortgage, she did so finally on the insistence of defendant and his brother that a valid trade had been made, and that if she refused to sign she would become liable for a larger amount than that for which the mortgage was given, the mortgage was not void for duress. Knight v. Brown (Mich.) 100 N. W. 602, 603 (quoting Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569, 8 N. W. 511).

"To be duress, the act must be physical violence, threats of violence or harm, or imprisonment or threat of imprisonment." One of three brothers, who owned all their property in a partnership, died, leaving his estate by will to his two brothers equally, and requesting them to adopt his children, which they did. They continued to hold their property in common, and the estate had been largely increased in value, when, more than 20 years later, the second brother died intestate, leaving a widow and children. The surviving brother then proposed the formation of a corporation to take the common property, and that a division be made between the persons in interest, who were then all adults, by the allotment of stock to each. Though there was some opposition, he insisted and declared that otherwise he would administer the estate as surviving partner, and the others would get only what the courts allowed them. After the matter had been under consideration for six months, an agreement for the formation of a corporation and the allotment of the stock was signed by the persons in interest, except one, whose interest was bought by the others. The agreement was carried out, and the common estate was owned, and the business managed, by the corporation with marked success. The agreement for division of the stock as a family settlement would not be set aside, after a lapse of 12 years, on the ground that the acts and threats of the surviving brother amounted to duress. Burnes v. Burnes (U. S.) 132 Fed. 485, 493.

DUTY.

See "Public Duty."

Other duties, see "Other."

There are instances where the word "duty" may be used in a pleading, although perhaps not with the utmost propriety, in characterizing the nature of the plaintiff's employment, as where the word is used as descriptive of an ultimate fact as to the character of the work which he was required to do, as that one of the duties which plaintiff was employed to perform was to inspect his locomotive. In such an instance the allegation is one of ultimate fact, and is partially descriptive of what his contract was. Pittsburgh C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lightheiser (Ind.) 71 N. E. 218, 220.

DWELLING HOUSE.

See "One Dwelling House."

"Dwelling house," as used in Civ. Code, § 1237, providing that the homestead consists of the dwelling house in which the claimant resides and the land on which it is situated, means the building which is occupied as a dwelling house by the family, and not such portion of the building as may be actually used by the family for residence purposes. In re Levy's Estate, 75 Pac. 301, 302, 141 Cal. 646, 99 Am. St. Rep. 92.

Uncompleted buildings not furnished with either doors or windows, and not occupied nor reasonably capable of occupancy for dwelling purposes, are not "dwelling houses" within Gen. St. p. 2838, § 167, providing that nothing in the act (the road act) shall be construed to extend to pulling down or removing any dwelling house which may encroach on any highway. Whittingham v. Hopkins (N. J.) 57 Atl. 402, 404.

An owner of an adjoining lot sued a church corporation to enforce a building restriction in defendant's deed providing that no building or part of a building should be erected in the rear end of the lot conveyed to be used other than a dwelling house, and that no building should be erected within 10 feet of the line of the north side of a 34 feet wide street. The rear end of the lot was the north side of the 34 feet wide street. To the east of the church was a parish building. The church began to build an addition to such building, no portion of which was within the 10 feet back of the line of such street. The building contained living rooms, bedrooms, and studies for the clergy, and was to be used as their residence. Held, that the addition was not a "dwelling house" within the language of the restriction. Crofton v. St. Clement's Church, 57 Atl. 570, 572, 208 Pa. 200.

An awning in front of a building extending thirteen feet from the house line to the curb, supported by five posts and covered with a roof of transparent glass, is not covered by the words "dwelling house or other building" in a deed providing that the front line of any messuages, dwelling houses, or other buildings shall recede eight feet from the street line. Olcott v. Sheppard, Knapp & Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 201, 202, 96 App. Div. 281.

EACH.

In a tax deed reciting the sale of several tracts, the use in the granting clause of the words "and each and every separate tract and parcel thereof," in addition to the statutory form designating the property conveyed as "the real property last hereinbefore described," indicates a purpose to convey all the land sold. Gibson v. Kueffer (Kan.) 77 Pac. 282.

EARNING CAPACITY.

See "Capacity to Earn Money."

EARNINGS.

The word "earnings," as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 836, declaring that no assignment of future earnings shall be valid as against an attaching creditor of the assignee, unless made to secure a bona fide debt or unless recorded, is used in the same sense as the word "wages." Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Connecticut River Banking Co., 57 Atl. 275, 276, 76 Conn. 477.

EASEMENT.

As land, see "Land."

An easement implies necessarily a fee in another, and it follows that it is a right by reason of such ownership to use the land for a special purpose, and one not inconsistent with the general property in the land of the owner of the fee; his property rights, however, to be exercised in such way as not to unreasonably interfere with the special use for which the easement was acquired. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Wachter, 70 N. E. 974, 975, 70 Ohio St. 113.

An easement "in a public street or highway is the public and common right to use the same for the passage of persons and property, and purposes incidental thereto." L. Realty Co. v. Johnson (Minn.) 100 N. W. 94, 95, 66 L. R. A. 439 (citing Newell v. Minneapolis, L. & M. Ry. Co., 35 Minn. 112, 27

N. W. 839, 59 Am. Rep. 303; Ellsworth v. Lord, 40 Minn. 337, 42 N. W. 389).

"Strictly speaking, a right to cut and take ice is perhaps more in the nature of a profit a prendre than an easement, though it comes within the definition of an 'easement' which was given by Chief Justice Shaw in Ritger v. Parker, 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 145, 54 Am. Dec. 744, and which was quoted with approval by the court in Owen v. Field, 102 Mass. 90." A lease, for a round sum, of premises on the shores of a pond, to be used for a dwelling house, and other buildings for the ice business, and providing that the lessor leases to the lessee the right to cut and take ice from the pond, and that the lessee, in addition to the rent, shall deliver to the lessor as much ice as shall be required for two families during the lease, annexes the right to take ice to the leased premises as an easement or a profit a prendre. Walker Ice Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co. 70 N. E. 937, 939, 185 Mass. 463.

License distinguished.

"A license is an authority given to do some act or acts on the land of another, without giving any estate in the land itself. It differs from an easement in that the latter is a permanent interest, with a right at all times to enter and enjoy it, while the continuance of the former depends on the will of the person who has created it." There is a distinction between an easement and a license, although in some cases it is difficult to see a substantial difference between them. An easement is a privilege in land founded upon a deed or other writing, or upon a prescription. It is a permanent interest in another's land, with the right to enjoy it fully and without objection. It may attach to the land, and pass with the dominant tenement as an appurtenant thereto. Asher v. Johnson (Ky.) 82 S. W. 300, 301 (quoting 5 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2608).

Servitude distinguished.

Though "servitude" and "easement" are often used indiscriminately, the latter term generally refers to a burden imposed. Scudder v. Watt, 90 N. Y. Supp. 605, 608.

EAST HALF.

See "Half."

EATING HOUSE.

The sale of soda water and ice cream in a drug store does not bring the proprietor thereof within the statute providing that keepers of "eating houses, restaurants, and saloons" cannot be lawfully granted permits for the sale of liquor. In re Henry (Iowa) 100 N. W. 43, 44.

EDUCATION.

See "Board of Education"; "Institution of Education."

Education includes moral as well as intellectual and physical instruction. In its broadest sense, the word "education" comprehends not merely the instruction received at school or college, but the whole course of training, moral, intellectual, and physical. People v. Mezger, 90 N. Y. Supp. 488, 489 (citing Bouvier; Ruohs v. Backer, 53 Tenn. [6 Heisk.] 395, 19 Am. Rep. 598).

EFFICIENT CAUSE.

It is only when something occurs subsequent to the defendant's act which makes it result in what would not otherwise have happened that the latter or intervening cause is said to be the "efficient cause," and for the result of which the original actor is not responsible in law. Central Coal & Iron Co. v. Pearce (Ky.) 80 S. W. 449, 450.

EJECTMENT.

See "Justice Ejectment."

EJUSDEM GENERIS.

By the rule "ejusdem generis," where there is an enumeration of particular things, followed by general words, the latter shall be construed as having reference only to things of the same kind or class with those specifically mentioned. Cutshaw v. City of Denver (Colo.) 75 Pac. 22, 25.

ELECTION.

See "General Election"; "Local Option Election."

The word "election" is generally used as indicating the expression of choice by vote, regardless of whether the choice to be made is as to the selection of an officer or the adoption of a proposition. The word "election" as used in Code, § 1900, providing that each member of a building and loan association shall have one vote for each $100 of stock, par value, owned or held by him at any election, refers to the selection of the stockholders or adopting a proposition submitted to them, and need not be limited to the selection of officers, and the proposition for voluntary liquidation and the appointment of a trustee is an election. McKee v. Home Savings & Trust Co., 98 N. W. 609, 610, 122 Iowa, 731.

The word "election," as used in a statute which declares that bets on any election authorized by the Constitution and laws of the state are gaming, is used in its political sense, and not in the same sense in which it is used in the Constitution, and means an election for public office, and does not include a primary election for the purpose of nominating a candidate for public office. Dooley v. Jackson, 78 S. W. 330, 334, 104 Mo. App. 21.

In equity.

An "election" is the choice between two or more courses of action, rights, or things by one who cannot enjoy the benefit of both. Allis v. Hall, 56 Atl. 637, 644, 76 Conn. 322.

A mortgage of a specified number of cattle on a certain farm is good, to the number specified, against a purchaser from the mortgagor, although there are more cattle of the same description on the farm, which fact is not disclosed by the mortgage, since the mortgagee is permitted, by what is called the doctrine of selection or election, to select the specified number from the whole number. Sparks v. Deposit Bank, 78 S. W. 171, 115 Ky. 461.

"The doctrine of election is founded upon the principle that there is an implied condition that he who accepts a benefit under an instrument must adopt the whole of it, conforming with all its provisions, and renouncing every right inconsistent with them. The principle is recognized and established in this country almost precisely the same as in England, and rests upon the equitable ground that no man can be permitted to claim inconsistent rights with regard to the same subject, and that any one who claims an interest under an instrument is bound to give full effect to that instrument as far as he can. A person cannot accept and reject the same instrument, or, having availed himself of it as to part, defeat its provisions in any other part; and this applies to deeds, wills, and all other instruments whatever." Stone v. Cook, 78 S. W. 801, 803, 179 Mo. 534, 64 L. R. A. 287 (citing Fox v. Windes, 127 Mo. 502, 511, 30 S. W. 323, 325, 48 Am. St. Rep. 648).

Election goes not to the form, but to the essence, of the remedy. It applies only where the law supplies to a party two or more modes of procedure predicated upon inconsistent and conflicting theories. If the remedies afforded are predicated upon consistent theories, the suitor may use one or all of the remedies. There can be but one satisfaction. Sweet v. Montpelier Sav. Bank & Trust Co. (Kan.) 77 Pac. 538, 539.

ELECTION CONTEST.

As civil case, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

Condemnation suit distinguished, see "Condemnation Proceeding."

An election contest is a special statutory proceeding designed to contest the right of a person, declared elected, to enter upon and hold office. Maddux v. Walthall, 74 Pac. 1036, 1027, 141 Cal. 412.

ELECTION DOWER.

The "election dower" provided for by a statute to the effect that, if a husband dies without any descendants capable of inheriting, the widow is entitled to one-half of the real and personal property belonging to the husband at the time of his death absolutely, subject to the payments of his debts, being a creature of statute, differs from the dower allowed under another statute entitling a widow to one-third of the land owned by the husband, free from liability for her husband's debts. The principal difference is that ordinary dower is one-third of the estate for life, freed from liability for debts, while election dower is one-half absolutely, subject to debts, which may turn out to be so great as to wipe out the election dower absolutely. Adams v. Adams, 82 S. W. 66, 69, 183 Mo. 396.

ELECTRIC CAR.

Ordinances making it unlawful to operate or run any "street car" unprovided with a car fender of the most improved design and construction, and providing that no "electric car" shall be propelled or operated without having one conductor and one motorman thereon, require a fender, conductor, and motorman only on motor cars, and not on trailers. Von Diest v. San Antonio Traction Co. (Tex.) 77 S. W. 632, 633.

ELEVATOR.

As storehouse, see "Storehouse."

Owner of elevator as common carrier, see "Common Carrier."

EMBANKMENT.

An "embankment" is defined as a mound, bank, or dike of earthwork raised for any purpose, as to carry a canal, road, or railway over a valley. Cent. Dict. But so far as the danger to highway travel is concerned, it cannot matter whether the raised condition above the adjoining soil is produced by filling the roadway or digging away the soil adjoining. A road along the side of an excavation may be a dangerous embankment within the statute. Wilder v. City of Concord, 56 Atl. 193, 196, 72 N. H. 259.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

The crime of embezzlement differs in its essential ingredients from the crime of larceny in this: that in larceny the gravamen of the offense is the unlawful and felonious taking of personal property with the intent to convert and steal the same, while in embezzlement the taking is lawful, because of the trust reposed in the agent, servant, or trustee receiving it, and the gist of the offense consists of the conversion of the property so received with a felonious and fraudulent intent of converting the same to the use of the agent, servant, or trustee. State v. Culver (Neb.) 97 N. W. 1015, 1018.

"Where the property is taken forcibly or furtively, or when the possession is gained by a trick or artifice, and the owner had no intent to yield possession and intrust the property to another, in such cases there is no embezzlement." People v. Dougherty, 77 Pac. 466, 143 Cal. 593 (citing People v. Johnson, 91 Cal. 265, 27 Pac. 663).

EMBRACERY.

Embracery consists in all such practices as tend corruptly to influence a juror. The crime is made up of the attempt thus to influence a juror. Upon such attempt being made, whether successful or not, the crime is consummate. The corpus delicti, the essence and body of the offense, being a corrupt attempt, it is wholly immaterial whether the would-be corrupter gains his point or not, or whether the juror thus approached gives any verdict or not, or whether the verdict be true or false. State v. Woodward, 81 S. W. 857, 861, 182 Mo. 391 (quoting State v. Williams, 136 Mo. 303, 38 S. W. 75).

EMINENT DOMAIN.

The right of eminent domain is not a right belonging to individuals or corporations, but is only conferred by special enactment, and, before a plaintiff should be allowed to absorb the property of another by condemnation, it is not asking too much of him that he affirmatively show that he is authorized by the law to condemn land at all. State v. Superior Court for Stevens County, 74 Pac. 686, 688, 33 Wash. 542.

EMPLOYE.

While the word "employé" is not to be read with full generic force, it has been adjudicated to embrace more than the words

"operative" and "laborer." It may be said generally that the term "employé" includes persons employed by the corporation in comparatively subordinate positions, which cannot correctly be described as either "operatives" or "laborers." Hopkins v. Cromwell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 839, 840, 89 App. Div. 481 (citing In re American Lace & Fancy Paper Works, 30 App. Div. 321, 323, 51 N. Y. Supp. 818, 820).

A health officer is not an "employé," as that word is used in Mun. Code, § 129, declaring that all employés now serving in the health department shall continue to hold their positions, and shall not be removed from office or reduced in rank or pay, except for cause assigned, and after hearing has been afforded them before the board. State v. Craig, 69 N. E. 228, 230, 69 Ohio St. 238.

EMPLOYED.

See "Capital Employed."

A finished manufactured product entirely completed in the fall of one year, and as to which nothing further remained to be done except to be sold when the opportunity offered, and which is stored because not sold until the following April, is not "employed in the mechanic arts" on the 1st day of that April, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 14, providing that all personal property employed in trade, in the erection of buildings or vessels, or in the mechanic arts shall be taxed in the town where so employed. Inhabitants of New Limerick v. Watson, 57 Atl. 79, 80, 98 Me. 879.

EMPLOYMENT.

See "Deprived of Employment"; "Permanent Employment."

END.

See "At the End."

The word "end," as used in a restriction in a deed providing that no building should be erected in the rear end of the lot conveyed within 10 feet from the line of the north side of a street, means the extremity, termination, limit. Crofton v. St. Clement's Church, 57 Atl. 570, 572, 208 Pa. 209.

ENFORCE.

See "Proceed to Enforce."

ENGAGED.

See "Principally Engaged."

"One cannot properly be said to be engaged in a business unless there is to some extent a continuous occupation of his faculties and powers directed toward the carrying on of the business as an object or purpose. The extent of continuity implied when the word 'engaged' is employed depends upon the thing which engages. A man may be engaged in prayer, although the engagement may occupy but a few minutes. A man may be engaged in building a house, which cannot occupy, in the natural course of things, more than a few months. A man also may be engaged in any occupation or pursuit for a limited time." One who has sold his business and good will, and has covenanted not to engage as agent or servant in that business, may not, though he is not engaged in any way in the prohibited business, hold himself out to the world as the manager or superintendent of a similar business carried on under his wife's name, as one giving to that business the benefit of his special skill and personal attention, and thereby attract to it the good will which he has sold. Fleckenstein Bros. Co. v. Fleckenstein (N. J.) 57 Atl. 1025, 1027.

"To say that one is 'engaged' in an occupation signifies much more than the doing of one act in the line of such occupation. It is an expression in common use, and well understood—that one is engaged in merchandising or in practicing law. Webster, Int. Dict., defines 'engage': 'To embark in a business; to employ or involve oneself; to enlist.' Cent. Dict.: 'To occupy oneself; be busied.' An indictment that defendant, "at," etc., "did engage in procuring laborers for employment out of the state, without having first paid the license tax" prescribed, etc., sufficiently charged that defendant "engaged in the business of procuring laborers," within Pub. Laws 1903, p. 347, c. 247, § 74, prohibiting persons from engaging in the business of procuring laborers, etc., without first having paid the tax imposed. State v. Roberson (N. C.) 48 S. E. 595.

ENGAGED CHIEFLY IN FARMING.

See, also, "Person."

"Where one's occupation or business which is of principal concern to him, not ephemeral, but of some degree of permanency, and on which he mainly relies for his livelihood and financial welfare, be other than farming, he is not a person chiefly engaged in farming." A man whose products from land cultivated by him amount to not more than $1,500 to $1,800 per year, while during the same time he expends in the purchase of live stock, and feed for the same, something near $15,000 per year, and who has become indebted, mainly through his live stock transactions, to the amount of more than $50,000, is not "chiefly engaged in farming," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, and is not exempt from proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. Bank of Dearborn v. Matney (U. S.) 132 Fed. 75, 82 (quoting Wulbern v. Drake, 120 Fed. 495, 56 C. C. A. 643).

Where an alleged bankrupt for three years resided on a farm of 300 acres, which he had bought but on which he had paid little, and he farmed less than 100 acres himself, but expended large sums in the purchase of high-bred cattle, which he kept on the farm for a time, and then sold them at auction sales, and in such business became largely indebted, his farming debts being merely nominal, he was not "engaged chiefly in farming" within the national bankruptcy act, and was subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re Brown (U. S.) 132 Fed. 706, 707.

ENGAGED PRINCIPALLY IN MANUFACTURING, ETC.

A corporation chartered to construct and repair vessels, carry on a general ship-building and ship repairing business, construct and operate a marine dry dock, etc., and whose main business consisted in the building of large steel vessels and in repairing others, is a corporation engaged principally in manufacturing and mercantile pursuits, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4, subsec. "b," 30 Stat. 547 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423], providing that such a corporation may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. Columbia Iron Works v. National Lead Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 99, 102, 62 C. C. A. 99, 64 L. R. A. 645.

The phrase "engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining or mercantile pursuits," as used in Bankr. Act 1898, limiting corporations which may be forced into bankruptcy to such as are engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining, or mercantile pursuits, is to be taken in its natural and usual meaning, and any corporation which does not come within such meaning cannot be put into bankruptcy. A building and loan association organized to accumulate a fund from contributions of its members from which loans were to be made to assist members in purchase of real estate, the profits of which business were divided among its members, is not a corporation engaged principally in trading or mercantile pursuits within the act. In re New York Building Loan Banking Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 471, 472.

The phrase "manufacturing pursuits," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3418], providing that any corporation engaged principally in manufacturing or mercantile pursuits may be declared a bankrupt, is used for the purpose of describing the kind of a corporation which may be put into bankruptcy, and that it is not intended that the operation of the bankruptcy law on a corporation of a kind within the meaning of the statute should depend on the question whether it was actually engaged in manufacturing at the particular time when the petition is filed. A suspended concern which has been engaged in manufacturing or trade or mercantile pursuits is subject to the bankruptcy law. A corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing paper from wood pulp, which had purchased woodland and other property for the commencement of its business, was subject to bankruptcy proceedings under the statute, though it had never, in fact, started its factory. In re White Mountain Paper Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 180, 181.

A corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing and dealing in paper and pulp, which had bought large tracts of timber land and expended some $500,000 in the erection and equipment of buildings for paper and pulp mills, and which had hired cut several thousand cords of wood in lengths suitable for the use in the manufacture of paper, was "engaged in manufacturing" within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4 "b," 30 Stat. 547 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423], and subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy, though it had never operated its mills nor completed the manufacture of either paper or pulp, where it had engaged in no other business. White Mountain Paper Co. v. Morse & Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 643, 644, affirming 127 Fed. 180.

A corporation engaged in constructing buildings and bridges by contract, furnishing the labor while others furnish the materials, is a manufacturing corporation, and subject to be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 54, § 4 "b," 30 Stat. 547 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423]. In re Niagara Contracting Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 782, 783.

A corporation incorporated to do a general manufacturing business, and to manufacture, construct, repair, and equip, and buy and sell ships and vessels of all kinds, and parts and furniture therefor, and which since its organization has carried on the business of constructing completed boats, and parts and furniture for vessels, such as boilers, masts, tanks, desks, tables, etc., for the most part made from raw material in its own shops, is engaged principally in manufacturing pursuits within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4, 30 Stat. 447 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423], and subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re Marine Const. & Dry Dock Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 446.

A corporation conducting a laundry, the largest part of its business being the washing, starching and ironing, and polishing of collars, cuffs, etc., for manufacturers before they are put on the market, is engaged principally in manufacturing, within the meaning of the national bankruptcy act, and is subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re Troy Steam Laundering Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 266, 268.

ENTERPRISE.

ENTICE.

The word "entice," as used in Or. Code, § 20, declaring that any person who shall maliciously or forcibly or fraudulently lead, take, or carry away, or entice away any child under the age of 18 years, with intent unlawfully to detain or conceal such child from its parent or parents, or guardian, must be given its ordinary and usual meaning, which is to draw on; to instigate by inciting hope or desire; to allure, especially in a bad sense; to lead astray; to tempt; to incite. Its synonyms are "to allure"; "to coax"; "to destroy"; "to seduce"; "to tempt"; "to inveigle"; "to persuade"; and "to prevail on." Gould v. State (Neb.) 99 N. W. 541, 543.

ENTIRE CHARGE.

See "Take Entire Charge."

ENTIRE CONTRACT.

Where an insurance policy is issued, and different classes of property are insured, each class being separated from the others and insured for a specific amount, and there is a breach of the conditions of the contract as to one class of the property insured, the contract should be considered not as one entire in itself, but as one which is severable. Miller v. Delaware Ins. Co. of Philadelphia (Okla.) 75 Pac. 1121, 1123, 65 L. R. A. 173.

ENTITLED.

See "Beneficially Entitled."

In a statute providing that a married woman is not entitled to letters testamentary unless her husband consent in writing, the expression "is not entitled" means that she has no claim, no right to be appointed; it does not import the absolute disqualification and incapacity of a married woman to take administration without his consent; such an appointment would be revocable, but not absolutely void. English's Ex'r v. McNair's Adm'rs, 34 Ala. 40, 49.

ENTRY.

See "False Entry"; "Forcible Entry"; "Lawful Entry."

ENUMERATED.

In order to remove an imported article from the operation of a tariff provision for merchandise "not enumerated," it is not necessary to show that there is an enumeration of the article according to its chief use. It is enough if there is an enumeration describing any minor use. Dodge & Olcott (U. S.) 130 Fed. 624, 625; Lueders v. Same (Id.).

EQUAL AND UNIFORM.

The requirement that all taxation shall be "equal and uniform" means, with reference to taxes on occupations, that the burden imposed shall fall alike on all persons who are in substantially the same situation—a rule generally recognized, even in the absence of an express constitutional requirement as to uniformity. Within the boundaries of this limitation lie broad fields of legislative discretion, which should not be invaded by the court. In seeking to secure equality and uniformity, the Legislature may tax some trades and not others; it may—indeed, must—classify occupations for the purpose of taxation; and the more exhaustive its system of arrangement, the more nearly similar will be the situation of all who are embraced within any designated class. In re Watson (S. D.) 97 N. W. 463, 465.

EQUALLY DIVIDED.

It is a general rule that, when a bequest is made to several persons of income to be divided "equally" among them, they take as tenants in common, and not as a class or as joint tenants. Loomis v. Gorham, 71 N. E. 981, 982, 186 Mass. 444.

The phrase "equally share and share alike," as used in a will whereby a testator bequeathed his residuary estate, without lawful heirs, and directed that the same should be equally divided among the heirs, share and share alike, meant that in the distribution of the estate the testator's lawful heirs took per capita, and not per stirpes. Mooney v. Purpus, 70 N. E. 894, 896, 70 Ohio St. 57.

Under a bequest of property to be equally divided between the children of two of testator's brothers, the nieces and nephews take per capita, and not per stirpes. Hughes v. Hughes (Ky.) 82 S. W. 408, 409.

EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT.

"In order to constitute a valid assignment in equity, all that is necessary is an order from the person to whom the money is due or coming on the person in whose hands or under whose control it may be to pay to the payee." Mack Mfg. Co. v. Smoot, 47

S. E. 859, 861, 102 Va. 724 (quoting Chesapeake Classified Bldg. Ass'n v. Coleman, 94 Va. 433, 26 S. E. 843).

An agreement to pay a certain sum out of, or that one is entitled to receive the same from, a designated fund when received, does not operate as an "equitable assignment." The test, even of an equitable assignment, "is whether the debtor would be justified in paying the debt, or the portion contracted about, to the person claiming to be the assignee." Donovan v. Middlebrook, 88 N. Y. Supp. 607, 608, 95 App. Div. 365 (citing Fairbanks v. Sargent, 117 N. Y. 320, 22 N. E. 1039, 6 L. R. A. 475).

EQUITABLE CONVERSION.

In order to work a conversion of testator's lands into money from the time of his death, there must be either a positive direction to sell or an absolute necessity to sell, in order to execute the will, or such a blending of real and personal estate by the testator in his will as to clearly show that he intended to create a fund out of both real and personal estate, and to bequeath it as money. In re Cooper's Estate, 56 Atl. 67, 68, 206 Pa. 628, 98 Am. St. Rep. 799 (citing Irwin v. Patchen, 164 Pa. 51, 30 Atl. 436).

EQUITABLE DEFENSE.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 507, authorizing the defendant in an action to interpose any defense he may have, either legal or equitable, "equitable defense" means a defense which a court of equity would recognize, or a defense founded on some distinct ground of equitable jurisdiction. City of New York v. Holzderber, 90 N. Y. Supp. 63, 64, 44 Misc. Rep. 509.

EQUITABLE ELECTION.

See "Election."

EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

See "Estoppel in Pais."

EQUITABLE JOINTURE.

When the statutory requisites are not all found in a provision by a husband for the wife by will or otherwise, yet it is manifest that the husband did not intend her to have the provision and her dower also, she will be compelled in equity to elect between them, which election is known as "equitable jointure." A contract, made in contemplation of marriage, by which a woman purports to release her claim to her intended husband's lands, but in which it is nowhere declared to be in satisfaction of her dower, and in which no provision is made for her support after the husband's death, but simply permits her to receive the rents out of her dower in a former husband's estate, does not constitute an equitable jointure. King v. King (Mo.) 82 S. W. 101, 103.

EQUITABLE LIEN.

"An equitable lien arises where there is some personal obligations or duty to be enforced." Where testator bequeathed to his wife and daughter the use of his estate for life, with remainder, subject to a power of sale in the life tenants, over to defendants, one of the life tenants, by temporarily waiving her right to share in the estate so that a sale of the property was avoided, was not entitled to an equitable lien on the property so as to be able to reach defendant's remainder interest through that medium, but was, as to defendant, a mere volunteer. Hare v. Congregational Soc. of Ferrisburg (Vt.) 57 Atl. 964, 965.

"Where in terms the parties agree that one making advances for the purchase of merchandise to be shipped to him shall have a lien on the same, the lien arises upon the purchase of the merchandise before it is consigned to the creditor. The lien, in such case, attaches to the merchandise purchased, and in the hands of the debtor at the time of his bankruptcy, and may be asserted against the debtor's assignee in bankruptcy. Judge Story said that the possession of the property by the debtor was not a badge of fraud, or against the policy of the law, or in any manner to be deemed inconsistent with the just rights of his general creditors, and therefore the agreement to give a lien or equitable charge was binding upon the property in the hands of the assignee." Cincinnati Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Leslie & Whitaker's Trustee (Ky.) 78 S. W. 413, 415, 64 L. R. A. 219 (quoting Jones, Liens, § 63).

EQUITABLE PROCEEDING.

Mandamus is not an equitable proceeding, and a mandamus issued after judgment against a county, to compel the levy of a tax to pay the same, is not a proceeding in equity, but one at law, in the nature of an execution to enforce satisfaction. Carter County v. Schmalstig (U. S.) 127 Fed. 126, 127, 62 C. C. A. 78 (citing Riggs v. Johnson County, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 166, 18 L. Ed. 768; Heine v. Levee Com'rs, 86 U. S. [19 Wall.] 655, 22 L. Ed. 223).

EQUITY.

"Equity is, as we are told, the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient. He who asks its aid must present himself with clean hands. Its special mission is to relieve from fraud and to enforce the observation of broad and just principles." Theis v. Spokane Falls Gaslight Co., 74 Pac. 1004, 1006, 34 Wash. 23.

Equity is a system, both in England and this country, of well-established law. Equity is not a chancellor's mere notions of what is equality. Laird v. Union Traction Co., 57 Atl. 987, 208 Pa. 574.

"Equity is the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient." Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair (U. S.) 130 Fed. 971, 974.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

An "equity of redemption" is defined to be a right which the mortgagor of an estate has of redeeming it after it has been forfeited at law by nonpayment, at the time appointed, of the money secured by the mortgage to be paid, by paying the amount of the debt, interest, and costs. Ebelharr v. Tennelly (Ky.) 80 S. W. 459, 460 (citing Bouv.).

ERROR.

See "Invited Error"; "Writ of Error."

ERROR CORAM NOBIS.

ERROR OF LAW.

An "error of law" is committed when the court, either upon motion of one of the parties or upon its own motion, makes some erroneous order or ruling on some question of law, which is properly before it and within its jurisdiction to make. Pratt v. Pratt, 74 Pac. 742, 743, 141 Cal. 247.

ESCHEAT.

The words "escheat" and "forfeiture" have a distinct and definite legal meaning, and can never be construed to mean "sale" and "purchase." Woodrough v. Douglas County (Neb.) 98 N. W. 1092, 1094.

ESCROW.

See "Delivery in Escrow."

ESTABLISHMENT.

See "Manufacturing Establishment."

ESTATE.

See "Contingent Estate"; "Vested Estate."

The word "estate" includes all species of property, applicable alike to real and personal, and in its broadest sense is held to include choses in action. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (Tex.) 80 S. W. 544, 553.

The direction in a will that the testator's business shall be carried on with his "estate and property" comprehends the use of all his real and personal property for that purpose. It would seem to be evident that to use, in carrying on the business, the testator's estate and property, is to apply thereto all income, however it may be produced, from either form of property. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 71 N. E. 470, 473, 179 N. Y. 64.

Where a will provides for the management and devise and distribution of the said estate, the words "the said estate" refer to an estate consisting of both the real and personal property. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 71 N. E. 1053, 1064, 211 Ill. 468.

ESTATE OF DECEASED PERSON.

As person, see "Person."

The phrase "estates of deceased persons," as used in Gen. St. 1902, §§ 2367-2377, imposing a succession tax on any property within the jurisdiction of the state which shall pass by will or inheritance, refers to the residuum of the decedent's property inventoried under the law remaining after claims of creditors and charges of administration have been satisfied. Appeal of Gallup, 57 Atl. 699, 702, 78 Conn. 617.

ESTATE TAIL.

A conveyance to a grantee and to the heirs of her body, reciting that if she should die without issue then the lands should revert to the grantor's heirs at law, created an "estate tail," and vested in the grantee a life estate only, under Sand. & H. Dig. § 700, providing that when by the common law any person, who would become seised in fee tail of any lands or tenements by virtue of a conveyance, such person, instead of being or becoming seised thereof in fee tail, shall be adjudged to be seised for life only, and that the remainder shall pass in fee simple absolute to the person to whom the estate tail would have first passed, according to the course of the common law. Black v. Webb (Ark.) 80 S. W. 367, 368.

ESTIMATED REVENUE.

The words "estimated revenue," as used in the Baltimore city charter, providing that in case of any surplus arising in any fiscal year by reason of an excess of income received from the estimated revenue over expenditures for such year the surplus shall be passed to the commissioners of finance, to be credited to the general sinking fund, do not include a loan authorized by the city to be procured for the purpose of extending the water service and constructing a reservoir. Callaway v. City of Baltimore (Md.) 57 Atl. 661, 663.

ESTOPPEL

"According to my Lord Coke, an estoppel is that which 'shuts a man's mouth from speaking the truth.' With this forbidding introduction a principle is announced which lies at the foundation of all fair dealing between man and man, and without which it would be impossible to administer law as a system. The harsh words which the very learned commentator upon Littleton uses in giving a definition of this principle are to be attributed to the fact that before his day 'the scholastic learning and subtle disquisition of the Norman lawyers (in the language of Blackstone) had tortured this principle so as to make it the means of great injustice; and the object of my Lord Coke was to denounce the abuse which he says had got to be "a very cunning and curious learning" and "was odious," and thereby restore the principle and make it subserve its true purpose as a plain, practical, fair, and necessary rule of law.' Estoppels must be mutual; that is, if one side is bound, the other must be. It only includes parties and privies, and does not extend to a stranger." Allred v. Smith, 47 S. E. 597, 599, 135 N. O. 443, 65 L. R. A. 924 (quoting Armfield v. Moore, 44 N. C. 157).

The essential and necessary elements of an "estoppel" are that it must have been made with the intention that the other party should act on it, and the other party must have been induced to act on it. Beaman v. Stewart (Colo.) 74 Pac. 342, 344 (citing Patterson v. Hitchcock, 3 Colo. 533, 536).

ESTOPPEL BY CONDUCT.

The doctrine of "estoppel by conduct" rests upon the principle that it would be a fraud in a party to assert what his previous conduct had denied, when, on the faith of that denial, others have acted so that injury would befall such others if the truth of the fact or previous declarations should afterwards be denied. Dreyfus v. W. A. Gage & Co. (Miss.) 36 South. 248, 250.

"The cases, when carefully analyzed, show that all of the following elements must actually or presumably be present in order to an estoppel by conduct: First, there must have been a false representation or a concealment of material facts; second, the representation must have been made with a knowledge of the facts; third, the party to whom it was made must have been ignorant of the truth of the matter; fourth, it must have been made with the intention that the other party should act upon it; fifth, the other party must have been induced to act upon it." Harrison v. McReynolds, 82 S. W. 120, 125, 183 Mo. 533 (quoting Bigelow, Estop. [3d Ed.] 484).

ESTOPPEL BY JUDGMENT.

See, also, "Res Adjudicata."

As a general rule, an "estoppel by judgment" resides in the judgment itself, and not in the reason for rendering it, and when the decree is definite and certain the opinion of the court cannot be used to show what matters were considered or determined. Gentry v. Pacific Live Stock Co. (Or.) 77 Pac. 115, 117

"The doctrine of estoppel (that is, the conclusiveness of a former judgment) is restricted to facts directly in issue, and does not extend to facts which rest in evidence and are merely collateral." People v. Albers (Mich.) 100 N. W. 908, 910 (quoting Freem. Judgm. § 257).

ESTOPPEL IN PALS.

"The important and primary ground of estoppel by matter in pals is that it would be fraud in a party to assert what his previous conduct had denied, when on the faith of that denial others have acted." Spence v. Renfro, 78 S. W. 597, 598, 179 Mo. 417 (citing Rice v. Bunce, 49 Mo. 231, 8 Am. Rep. 129; Campbell v. Johnson, 44 Mo. 247; Chouteau v. Goddin, 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462; Taylor v. Zepp, 14 Mo. 482, 55 Am. Dec. 113; Newman v. Hook, 37 Mo. 207, 90 Am. Dec. 378).

"Estoppels in pals are called equitable estoppels, not because their recognition is peculiar to equitable tribunals, but because they arise upon facts which render their application in the protection of rights equitable and just." The defense of equitable estoppel is as available at law as in equity. Hoge v. Fidelity Loan & Trust Co. (Va.) 48 S. E. 494, 495 (quoting Barnard v. German American Seminary, 49 Mich. 444, 13 N. W. 811).

"Estoppels by matter in pals, as distinguished from estoppels by record or deed, are sometimes called 'equitable estoppels,' because they originated in courts of equity. But it is not meant by this that they are not available in courts of law, or are cognizable only in courts of equity. Such estoppels were early recognized in courts of law, and came to be so readily and freely sustained as matter of defense at law that it is neither necessary nor permissible to resort to equity for the mere purpose of obtaining the benefit of such an estoppel, when there is not otherwise a ground of equitable jurisdiction." Anglo-American Land, Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Lombard (U. S.) 132 Fed. 721, 733 (citing Barnard v. German-American Seminary, 49 Mich. 444, 13 N. W. 811; Vermont Copper Mining Co. v. Ormsby, 47 Vt. 709, 713; Martin v. Maine Cent. Ry. Co., 83 Me. 100, 21 Atl. 740; Drexel v. Berney, 122 U. S. 241, 253, 7 Sup. Ct. 1200, 30 L. Ed. 1219; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578, 584, 25 L. Ed. 618; Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 68, 76, 78, 28 L. Ed. 79; Wehrman v. Conkin, 155 U. S. 314, 327, 15 Sup. Ct. 129, 39 L. Ed. 167; Bigelow on Estoppel [4th Ed.] pp. 543, 544; 2 Herman on Estoppel, §§ 1297, 1298).

ETC.

The term "etc." is defined in the Century Dictionary as: "And others; and so forth; and so on; generally used when a number of individuals of a class have been specified to indicate that more of the same sort might have been mentioned, but for shortness are omitted." As used in an act of sale of property, describing the property sold by enumerating various articles, and concluding with the term "etc.," the vendor does not intend that the description shall be regarded as complete and exhaustive and as exclusive of everything not expressly mentioned, but, on the contrary, that other articles exist, which for brevity are not mentioned. Bagley v. Rose Hill Sugar Co., 35 South. 539, 548, 111 La. 249.

EUNUCH.

The primary and general definition of the word "eunuch" given in all the dictionaries is "a castrated male of the human species." It must be given its usual and ordinary sense, as understood in the place where used. A newspaper publication that a man is a eunuch is actionable per se. Eckert v. Van Pelt (Kan.) 76 Pac. 909, 910, 66 L. R. A. 266.

EVERY.

In a tax deed reciting the sale of several tracts, the use in the granting clause of the words, "and each and every separate tract and parcel thereof," in addition to the statutory form designating the property conveyed as "the real property last hereinbefore described," indicates a purpose to convey all the land sold. Gibson v. Kueffer (Kan.) 77 Pac. 282, 283.

EVIDENCE.

See "Best Kind of Evidence"; "Demurrer to the Evidence"; "Direct Evidence"; "Indirect Evidence"; "Preponderance of the Evidence"; "Prima Facie Evidence"; "Traditionary Evidence"; "Unequivocal Evidence."

"Technically there is a difference between evidence and proof. Evidence tends to establish or disprove an alleged matter of fact in issue. Proof is an effect of evidence, while evidence is merely the means of making proof. A fact is not proved unless it is established." Oliveros v. State, 47 S. E. 627, 629, 120 Ga. 237.

EXCEPTION.

Technically the words "exception" and "reservation" are different in meaning, but have often been used as synonymous. Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193.

If A. owns ten acres of land and conveys it all to B. except one acre, upon which his mansion stands, that is an "exception." Dozier v. Toalson, 79 S. W. 420, 422, 180 Mo. 546.

EXCESS.

See "To Excess."

EXCESSIVE PUNISHMENT.

See "Cruel Punishment."

EXCLUSIVE.

The word "exclusive" in a contract between a city and a certain person purporting to grant the exclusive privilege of laying and maintaining water pipes in its streets, and by which it agreed to pay certain rentals for hydrants, such contract to continue in force for 20 years, was insufficient to raise the implication that the city by the use of the word thereby agreed to renounce its power to construct the water-works itself, because such is not the ordinary meaning of the word, and because the word "exclusive," if given its usual interpretation, would render the exclusive feature of the contract void. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. City of Sioux Falls (U. S.) 131 Fed. 890, 899.

EXCLUSIVE EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

"Exclusive educational purposes," when applied to an academy, is broad enough to cover the buildings and grounds which form a part of the foundation, and which are exclusively used for the school life, whether the lads are at study or at recitations, or are eating, reading, sleeping, drilling, or at play. People v. Mezger, 90 N. Y. Supp. 488, 489.

EXCUSE.

As used in an instruction that malice means the doing of a wrongful act intentionally, without justification or excuse, the language, "without any justification or excuse," not only excludes justifiable and excusable homicide, but homicide extenuated to manslaughter, because done in sudden heat and passion upon sufficient legal provocation. It must not be supposed that the word "excuse" is only applicable to excusable homicide, as homicide in self-defense. It would therefore be wrong to hold that the word "excuse" was intended by the court to be used in the absence of something which renders one wholly excusable or justifiable, but, on the contrary, it should be held to include also any legal extenuation of the offense charged. State v. McDaniel, 47 S. E. 384, 387, 68 S. C. 304.

EXECUTION.

"Execution" and "signing" are not synonymous terms. Execution implies complete execution—signing, sealing, and delivery—whereas signing implies only one of the steps towards execution. Hayes v. Ammon, 85 N. Y. Supp. 607, 608, 90 App. Div. 604.

EXECUTOR IN HIS OWN WRONG.

An executor in his own wrong is one who wrongfully intermeddles with the goods of the deceased, or does any other act characteristic of the office. Allen v. Hurst, 48 S. E. 341, 342, 120 Ga. 763 (citing 1 Wms. Ex'rs, p. 298).

EXECUTORY DEVISE.

As remainder, see "Remainder."

An executory devise is such a limitation of a future interest in lands or personal chattels as the law admits in the case of a will, though contrary to the rules of limitation in conveyances at common law. Stallcup v. Cronley's Trustee (Ky.) 78 S. W. 441, 442.

EXERCISING CORPORATE FRANCHISES.

"Exercising corporate franchises" and "carrying on business" in a corporate or organized capacity mean the same thing, under Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, authorizing an annual state tax on life insurance companies for the privilege of exercising corporate franchises or for carrying on business in their corporate or organized capacity within the state. People v. Miller, 71 N. E. 930, 932, 179 N. Y. 227.

EXPECTANCY.

An expectancy or hope is defined as "a mere hope unfounded in any limitation, possession, trust, or legal act whatever, such as the hope which an heir apparent has of succeeding to the ancestor's estate. This is sometimes said to be a bare or mere possibility. It is a possibility, in the popular sense of the term. But it is less than a possibility in the specific sense of the term "possibility"; for it is no right at all, in contemplation of law, even by possibility, because in the case of a mere expectancy nothing has been done to create an obligation in any event, and where there has been no obligation there can be no right, for right and obligation are correlative terms." The interest of a contingent remainderman is not an expectancy. McDonald v. Bayard Sav. Bank, 98 N. W. 1025, 1026, 123 Iowa, 413 (quoting 2 Fearn, Remainders, p. 23).

EXPECTATION.

The term "expectation," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 120, § 366, imposing a tax on the transfer of property by will, where one becomes beneficially entitled in possession or expectation to any property or income thereof, is used "not to denote an expectation of becoming vested both with the title and the possession where neither is now vested, but to denote a condition where the title is vested and the possession is deferred. The term 'in expectation' is used in contradistinction to 'in possession.' Both contemplate a title vested and indefeasible; but in one instance the right of enjoyment is immediate 'in possession,' in the other it is postponed 'in expectation.' As used in this statute, these words last quoted refer to the future possession of an estate now vested, and which is subject to the immediate enjoyment of another." People v. McCormick, 70 N. E. 350, 353, 208 Ill. 437, 64 L. R. A. 775.

EXPEDIENTE.

"Expediente," in Mexican law, means all the papers or documents constituting a grant or title to land from government. Vanderslice v. Hanks, 3 Cal. 27, 38.

EXPENSE.

See "Actual Expense."
All expenses, see "All."

Of court.

Any expense lawfully incurred is an expense of holding court. Expenses of a committee of citizens of a creditor appointed by a grand jury to inspect and examine the offices, papers, books, and records of county officers, and to make a full and complete report of the result of such investigation to the next succeeding grand jury, are expenses of the court, the grand jury being a component part of the court. Chatham County v. Gaudry, 47 S. E. 634, 635, 120 Ga. 121.

Of family.

The phrase "expenses of the family," as used in 3 Mills' Ann. St. 1891 (2d Ed.) § 3021a, providing that the expenses of the family are chargeable on the property of both husband and wife, is not limited to necessities, and what shall be included in the term must be determined by the facts of each case, subject to the limitations that the articles must have been purchased for and used in or by the family or some member thereof. Gilman v. Matthews (Colo.) 77 Pac. 366.

EX POST FACTO.

"An ex post facto law is one which renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed." State of Iowa v. Jones (U. S.) 128 Fed. 626, 628 (citing Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. [6 Cranch] 87, 3 L. Ed. 162).

A statute which deprives the accused of any substantial right which he possessed when the offense was committed, or which after that time changes the punishment of his offense, is as to him ex post facto. People v. Johnson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 134, 136, 44 Misc. Rep. 550.

A retrospective criminal or penal law is not "ex post facto" where it does not deprive the party of some additional right to which he was entitled under the law at the time the offense was committed, or does not alter his situation to his disadvantage. State v. Tyree (Kan.) 77 Pac. 290, 291.

EXPOSE.

See "Voluntary Exposure."

EXPOSE TO UNNECESSARY DANGER.

Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, see "Voluntary Exposure."

In construing a clause in an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability in a greater sum than $100 in case insured lost his life from unnecessary exposure to danger or to obvious risk of injury, the court said: "Apart from the adjudications on the question, I should be inclined to the opinion that, as a main purpose in taking a policy of accident insurance is to procure indemnity against the consequences of the insured party's carelessness and oversights, a stipulation against 'exposure to unnecessary danger or to obvious risk of injury' excludes from the force of the policy accidents occasioned by that positive sort of negligence which in personal injury litigation falls within the doctrine of assumed risk, and consists of knowledge of a danger, and willingness to encounter it, but does not exclude such as happen from the mere failure of the insured to shun a danger unknown to him, which might have been known by due care, or what is denominated 'contributory negligence.' This view would require, to bring into operation the minimum indemnity clause of the policy, volition on the part of the insured in needlessly exposing himself to danger as in cases where the word 'voluntary' is used. It seems to me the intention of the contract implies liability for an accident unless there was a voluntary assumption of unnecessary risk—an assumption of the risk, not, of course, in the expectation of being hurt, which would amount to self-inflicted injury, but in the expectation of encountering the danger and avoiding injury from it." It was held that such a limitation did not apply to a death from a casualty to which insured was exposed in the performance of his duties as a bridgeman. Jamison v. Continental Casualty Co., 78 S. W. 812, 814, 104 Mo. App. 306.

EXPRESS DEDICATION.

See "Dedication."

EXPRESS MALICE.

Express malice is that deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature which is manifested by external circumstances capable of proof, such as previous difficulties; preparation to commit the offense; threats. Henderson v. State, 48 S. E. 167, 168, 120 Ga. 504.

Express malice is proved by evidence of a sedate, deliberate purpose and formed design to kill another; and such purpose and design may be shown from the circumstances attending the act, such as the deliberate selection and use of a deadly weapon, knowing it to be such, stealthily lying in wait, preconcerted plans or the previous procurement or preparation of instruments, contrivances, or other means for slaying or doing great bodily harm to the deceased victim. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262.

EXPRESS TRUST.

See "Trustee of Express Trust."

EXPRESS WARRANTY.

To constitute an "express warranty," the word "warrant" need not be used, nor are any particular words necessary. Whatever representations are made by the seller at the time of the sale as to the quality of the article is an express warranty. Cummins v. Ennis (Del.) 56 Atl. 377 (citing McLennan v. Ohmen, 75 Cal. 553, 17 Pac. 687).

In a case involving the question of whether or not representations made by a seller of goods amounted to a warranty, the court, in passing on the issue raised, said: "Perhaps no subject in the entire domain of law has produced more contrariety of opinion than has the subject of warranty in sales of personal property. Not only have the courts differed in deciding cases, but courts and authors have often failed to discriminate between warranties and deceit or fraudulent representations. As an illustration, it is often said, in considering the subject of express warranty, that it is not necessary that the seller should have intended, by the language used, to warrant the thing sold, and that, in order to create a warranty, the purchaser must be influenced by the statement alleged to constitute the warranty. Both of these propositions are correct, as applied to a question of fraud, based upon a statement made by the seller, but neither is correct in determining whether or not a statement constitutes an express warranty. Such a warranty is entirely a matter of contract, and the contract which creates it must, like all other contracts, embody the mutual intentions of the parties. Nor is it necessary that the buyer must have been deceived before he can recover for the breach of an express warranty." In a written agreement plaintiff agreed to sell an entire crop of cane, to be grown by him on his plantation for four years, and to cultivate all cane in a good manner, and to deliver it clean for the mill, "said cane to be sound, ripe, and merchantable." Held, that there was an express warranty, and that plaintiff was not entitled to recover the stipulated price for all the cane if it was not sound and merchantable. Ellis v. Riddick (Tex.) 78 S. W. 719, 721.

In insurance.

"An express warranty [in insurance] is an agreement expressed in the policy whereby the assured stipulates that certain facts are or shall be true, or certain acts shall be done relative to the risk. It may relate to an existing or past fact, or be promissory and relate to the future." A stipulation in a fire policy that the insurance company should not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by order of any civil authority, is not a warranty, within Civ. Code Cal. §§ 2607, 2608, providing that a statement in a policy of a matter relating to the thing insured or to the risk as a fact, and a statement which imports that it is intended to do or not to do a thing which materially affects the risk, is a warranty, the statute not creating any new definition of warranty in insurance. Conner v. Manchester Assur. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 743, 744 (quoting Phillips on Insurance, § 754).

EXTEND—EXTENSION.

The word "extend," both by etymology and by common usage, is an exceedingly flexible term, lending itself to a great variety of meanings, which must in each case be gathered from the context, which is owing to the fact that it is essentially a relative term, referring to something already begun; hence, in a concrete sense, it has no persistent meaning, although abstractly it always implies increase or amplification as distinguished from inception; as, for instance, "the extension of a man's business," or "of his line of credit," or "of the due time of his debts." Extension in space may be in any direction. It is not confined to mere linear prolongation. Middlesex & S. Traction Co. v. Metlar (N. J.) 58 Atl. 142, 143.

The word "extend" implies something to be extended, and therefore there can be no inference that the Legislature intended by Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, entitled "An act to extend and regulate the liability of employers," to abrogate any right of action existing under the statutes or common law, unless such an intention is clearly to be drawn from the language of the act itself. Rosin v. Lidgerwood Mfg. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 49, 51, 89 App. Div. 245.

The term "extension" conveys to the mind an enlargement of the main body; the addition of something of less import than that to which it is attached. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Buffalo & W. Electric Ry. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 418, 421, 96 App. Div. 471.

EXTENDER.

"Extender" in Spanish law means to commit to writing at length. Beach v. Gabriel, 29 Cal. 580, 584.

EXTENT.

See "Appreciable Extent."

EXTENUATE.

As used in an instruction relating to manslaughter, which tells the jury that implied malice would be inferred when the killing took place without any cause which would in law justify, excuse, or extenuate the homicide, the word "extenuate" has the same meaning as "mitigate," and refers to the reduction of the grade of the offense, as well as to a reduction of the punishment. Connell v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 746, 748.

EXTINGUISHMENT.

"An extinguishment is a discharge by operation of law." Woodrough v. Douglas County (Neb.) 98 N. W. 1092, 1095.

EXTRA BRAKEMAN.

An "extra brakeman" is one who has no regular employment, but takes the place of a regular employé when off duty. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mulfinger's Adm'x (Ky.) 80 S. W. 499.
8 Wds. & P.—55

EXTRA GOOD ORE.

The words "extra good ore," in a contract to indemnify for the expense of sinking a mining shaft, if the drill hole was not as represented, the representation being "1 to 8 feet soil and clay, 110 to 117 feet dark flint, with extra good ore," do not refer merely to the quality of the ore, but require a quantity sufficient to justify mining. Hall v. Chitwood, 81 S. W. 208, 209, 106 Mo. App. 568.

EXTRALATERAL.

See "Extraliminal."

EXTRALIMINAL.

"Extraliminal," or "extralateral," with reference to the rights conferred by a lode location, while depending for its existence on something within the boundaries, may, nevertheless, be exercised under certain conditions beyond those boundaries. Jefferson Min. Co. v. Anchoria-Leland Min. & Mill. Co. (Colo.) 75 Pac. 1070, 1073, 64 L. R. A. 925.

EXTRAORDINARY.

The words "difficult" and "extraordinary," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 3253, authorizing the court to grant an additional allowance where the action is difficult and extraordinary, must be given their usual and accepted meaning. A general rule specifying the precise limitation that they impose upon the power of courts to grant an additional allowance may be difficult to formulate, but every application to the facts of a particular case, when presented, is not troublesome. The section does not authorize an additional allowance in an action for personal injuries, where the only question for the court is the amount of the damages, and no difficult questions of law are involved. Standard Trust Co. v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 70 N. E. 925, 926, 178 N. Y. 407.

F. O. B.

The term "f. o. b." cars, in mercantile contracts, means "free on board" cars at the place of shipment. Such term means that the seller will, without expense or act of the buyer, deliver to the latter the subject of the sale on cars at such place. All the authorities declare that a sale f. o. b. cars so plainly indicates that the seller, without expense to the buyer, is to deliver the subject of the sale on cars, ready to be taken out by the carrier, that the term is not open to construction. Vogt v. Shienebeck (Wis.) 100 N. W. 820, 822.

FACTOR.

As trustee of an express trust, see "Trustee of Express Trust."

Where plaintiff, at defendant's request, delivered to it a car of lemons for the purpose of completing a sale already effected by defendant at a stated price, defendant to receive a certain commission on the sale, though it was not, in the transaction, within the technical definition of a factor, in that the lemons were not first placed in its possession for the purpose of a sale, but were delivered to it for the purpose of completing a sale already effected, defendant's relation to the plaintiff, after he had delivered them to it, was substantially that of a factor. Betts v. Southern California Fruit Exch. (Cal.) 77 Pac. 993, 994.

FAIR.

See "Unfair."

FAIR CONSIDERATION.

See "Present Fair Consideration."

The term "fair consideration," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67, 30 Stat. 564 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3449], providing that all conveyances made by a bankrupt within four months next preceding his bankruptcy, with intent to defraud his creditors, shall be void, except as to purchasers in good faith and for a present, fair consideration, does not make it necessary that the consideration for the transfer should be a just equivalent of the thing bought. The word "fair," as used in the section, signifies no more than honest or free from suspicion. It is evidently not intended as the equivalent of "adequate," unless the inadequacy is such as to indicate a purpose on the part of the vendor to cheat his creditors; and until one is declared a bankrupt third persons may deal with him as with any other, save that all transfers made by him within four months next preceding his bankruptcy, with intent on his part to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, shall be void, except as to good-faith purchasers for a present fair consideration. Myers v. Fultz (Iowa) 100 N. W. 351, 352 (citing Dunlop v. Thomas, 68 Pac. 909, 28 Wash. 521).

FAIR GROUNDS.

The words "fair grounds," in Gen. St. 1902, § 1358, declaring a punishment for any one who shall, within one mile of the fair grounds of any incorporated society, expose for sale, from any wagon or temporary stand, any article of provision without the consent of the society, are used as the equivalent of the words "exhibition or fair," used in the original act (Pub. Acts 1868, p. 147, c. 14), so that the prohibition extends only to a sale while a fair is being held. State v. Reynolds, 58 Atl. 755, 756, 77 Conn. 131.

FAITH.

See "Full Faith and Credit"; "Good Faith."

FALL.

The word "fall," as used in a complaint in an action on an accident policy, alleging that insured fell from the cars and received injuries, from which he died, implies the happening by chance of an undesigned and involuntary event, which resulted in bodily injuries effecting the death of the insured through external, violent, and accidental means, within the terms of the policy. Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (S. D.) 100 N. W. 428, 429.

FALSE AFFIDAVIT.

Where the statements made in an affidavit in support of a pension claim are true, it is not a "false or fraudulent affidavit," the making of which constitutes a crime, under Rev. St. § 4746 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3279], merely because it was not in fact sworn to on the date shown in the notary's certificate. United States v. Wood (U. S.) 127 Fed. 171, 173.

FALSE ENTRY.

An entry on the books of a national bank by the cashier as a cash item of a check which actually entered into a transaction of the bank is not making a "false entry," under Rev. St. § 5209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], though he knew the check to be worthless and fraudulent, and made the entry with the intent to deceive, as the entry is a truthful statement of the actual transaction. United States v. Young (U. S.) 128 Fed. 111, 113.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

False imprisonment is the unlawful detention of the person of another against his will. The gist of the action is the unlawful detention. Marshall v. Cleaver (Del.) 56 Atl. 380, 381; McCaffrey v. Thomas, Id. 282, 283.

A case of false imprisonment is made out when it is shown that plaintiff was intentionally detained as a prisoner by defendant without any warrant therefor. He is not required to prove malice or want of probable cause. Thompson v. Bucholz (Mo.) 81 S. W. 490, 491.

FALSE PRETENSE.

A "false pretense," such as falls within the statute relating to the offense of obtaining property under false pretenses, is a false representation relating to some existing or past fact, and must actually mislead. To constitute the offense, it is enough if a material part of the pretense be false, that it be made with the intent to defraud, and that it induces the person sought to be wronged to part with his property; and these are inquiries proper for the jury under appropriate instructions from the court. Wilkerson v. State, 36 South. 1004, 140 Ala. 155.

The pretenses relied on to constitute the crime of false pretenses must relate to a past event or an existing fact, and any representation or assurance or promise in relation to a future transaction, however false and fraudulent it may be, is not within the meaning of the statute. Cook v. State (Neb.) 98 N. W. 810 (citing Maxwell's Cr. Proc. 129; Dillingham v. State, 5 Ohio St. 284).

The essence of the crime of obtaining money or property by false pretenses is that the false pretense should be of a past event, or of a fact having a present existence, and not of something to happen in the future, and that the prosecutor believed that the pretense was true, and that, confiding in the truth of the pretense and by reason thereof, he parted with his money or property. State v. Bohle, 81 S. W. 179, 180, 182 Mo. 58 (quoting State v. Evers, 49 Mo. 545).

FALSE REPRESENTATION.

The same statements may be regarded as false representations or mere expressions of opinion, according to the circumstances of the particular case. An opinion falsely expressed, with intent to deceive, and which does deceive, is an actionable false representation. A party having superior knowledge of the property sold, and giving a false opinion in regard to a matter of fact, with intent to affect the price to be paid, is guilty of fraud. Schneider v. Schneider (Iowa) 98 N. W. 159, 163.

FALSIFY.

To surcharge or falsify is to allege an omission in an account or deny the correctness of some or all of the items rendered. One who objects to a stated account must surcharge or falsify it, and an account rendered by an administrator is a stated account. Tate v. Gairdner, 46 S. E. 73, 74, 119 Ga. 133.

FAMILY.

See "Head of a Family."

Family expense, see "Expense."

The word "family" has its root in the Oscan word "famul," which signifies a slave.

Much of this primary meaning was applicable to the status of married women at the common law with reference to property. If a husband and wife occupy land belonging to him as a homestead, she is a "family" of the owner. Cross v. Benson (Kan.) 75 Pac. 558, 560, 64 L. R. A. 560.

A "family" has been defined as "a collective body of persons, who live in one house, under one head or manager." A person furnishing a home for himself, his mother, two minor brothers, and an invalid sister, and furnishing the groceries and money for their support, is the head of a "family," within the statute, fixing the amount of wages which shall be exempt. Jarboe v. Jarboe, 79 S. W. 1162, 1163, 106 Mo. App. 459.

The word "family" is too indefinite to describe a party to a contract, and hence an allegation that defendant let certain premises to plaintiff and his family did not describe the parties to the contract with sufficient certainty. Davis v. Smith, 58 Atl. 630, 632, 28 R. I. 129, 66 L. R. A. 478.

A widow, who continues to occupy the homestead, and whose children have all arrived at majority and moved away, is the "family of the owner," within the constitutional provision exempting as a homestead the residence occupied by the family of the owner. Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Price (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1019.

FARM.

My farm, see "My."

FARMING.

See "Engaged Chiefly in Farming."

The term "farmer" is not synonymous with a tiller of the soil. To constitute one a farmer, it is not essential that he in person should till the soil, or that his operations should be limited to agricultural planting, sowing, and cultivation of the soil. The terms "farming" and "tilling of the soil," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3418], providing that any natural person, except a wage earner or a person engaged chiefly in farming and the tilling of the soil, etc., may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, are more or less closely allied. The term "farming" is doubtless employed in the act, as a generic term, in a comprehensive sense. It is reasonable to conclude that the term was not limited merely to the production of grains and grasses, and the like. The farmer may cultivate all or a part of his land. He may be general or special. He may devote his cultivation to the production of corn, or wheat, or oats, or rye, or grasses, whichever in his judgment may be the more useful or profitable. He may include with those breeding, feeding, and rearing of live stock, embracing cattle, horses, mules, sheep, and hogs, for domestic use and for market; and, if he find it more profitable to feed his agricultural products to his live stock than to rely upon marketing the surplus, he may not be limited to the quantity of live stock for such purposes to what he may breed or rear upon his farm. For this purpose he may rely entirely upon the purchase of his live stock from his neighbors or on the markets, and utilize his farm products in feeding and fattening such feeders for market. Bank of Dearborn v. Matney (U. S.) 132 Fed. 75, 76.

FATHER.

The word "father," as used in section 21 of the act concerning wills, by virtue of the provisions of Rev. St. 1874, p. 833, relative to statutes, includes "mother." Walker v. Hyland (N. J.) 56 Atl. 268, 271.

FEE SIMPLE.

Generally the words "fee simple" mean an absolute estate of inheritance, but not necessarily so. A title in fee simple determinable is in a qualified sense a fee simple; and, where the language in a will is followed by a clearly expressed qualification, it must be held that the testator used the first words in that sense. Orr v. Yates, 70 N. E. 731, 735, 209 Ill. 222.

"Ownership in fee simple implies something more than being the holder of the naked legal title to land. It implies an indefeasible legal title—the entire title and estate in land." United States v. Hyde (U. S.) 132 Fed. 545, 550.

FEED ROLL.

A feed roll, or automatic feeder, used in connection with a rip saw, is a toothed appliance, something like a saw, but working in front of the saw proper, and feeding the board to it automatically, and tending to prevent the board from being thrown against the sawyer by the hold its teeth take. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works (Mo.) 80 S. W. 292, 294.

FELLOW SERVANT.

Where two persons are both engaged in the common service of a master, in conducting and carrying on the same general business, and neither is in any sense under the control or direction of the other, they are fellow servants. Sauls v. Chicago, R. I. & T. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 81 S. W. 89, 90.

Whenever co-employees under the control of one master are engaged in the discharge of duties directed to one common end, such duties being so closely related that each employee must know he is exposed to the risk of being injured by the negligence of another, they are "fellow servants." Donnelly v.

Cudahy Packing Co. (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1017, 1018.

The presumption is that all who enter the service of a common master, and engage in a common service or in the same general undertaking, are "fellow servants." Weeks v. Scharer (U. S.) 129 Fed. 333, 335.

FELONY.

See, also, "Misdemeanor."

A felony is a crime punishable with death or imprisonment in the state prison. People v. Smith, 77 Pac. 449, 450, 143 Cal. 597.

As adultery may be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, it is a felony, as Code, § 5093, defines a felony as a public offense, which may be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary. State v. Clemenson, 99 N. W. 139, 123 Iowa, 524.

FENCE.

See "Division Fence"; "Legal and Sufficient Fence."

As building, see "Building."

Under a statute declaring that, if a railroad company fence in its track, it shall only be liable in case of injury to stock resulting from want of ordinary care, a railroad track is not "fenced in," where it is inclosed on two sides and on one end, leaving the other end open. To fence in a place, as against live stock, means to surround it by a fence, so as to prevent the intrusion of such animals upon the inclosed premises. Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Swan (Tex.) 78 S. W. 920, 922.

FERRULE.

"Knight's Mechanical Dictionary describes a ferrule as 'a metallic ring or sleeve on the handle of a tool or the end of a stick to keep the wood from splitting.' The Imperial Dictionary defines a ferrule to be 'a ring of metal put around a column, cane, or other thing, to strengthen it or prevent its splitting.'" The common understanding is that a ferrule for an umbrella or cane is a ring or short tube of metal fitted on or inclosing the lower end of a cane or umbrella stick. It is in that sense that the term is employed in a patent, the specification of which describes a ferrule as primarily a tube open at both ends. Evans v. Newark Rivet Works (U. S.) 126 Fed. 492, 494, 61 C. C. A. 474.

FERRY.

See "Private Ferry."

In one sense a ferry is a continuation of the highway from one side of the water over which it passes to the other, and is for transportation of passengers or of travelers with their teams and vehicles and such other property as they may carry or have with them. In a strict sense the ferry business is confined to the transportation of persons, with or without their property, and a ferryman carrying on only a ferry business is bound to transport in no other way. St. Clair County v. Interstate Sand & Car Transfer Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 300, 304, 192 U. S. 454, 48 L. Ed. 518.

FIDUCIARY CAPACITY.

A laundry agent in a country town, whose duties are to collect articles, forward them to the laundry in the city, receive them back, and distribute them, make collections, and remit to his principal, after deducting his commissions, is acting in a "fiduciary capacity," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 550 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428], providing that a discharge shall not affect debts created by the bankrupt's misappropriation or defalcation while acting in any fiduciary capacity. Shipley v. Platts (S. D.) 97 N. W. 1, 2.

FIGS.

Figs, preserved whole, as nearly as possible in their natural condition, are dutiable under the enumeration of "figs," under paragraph 264, Schedule G, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 171 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1651]. Reiss & Brady v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 578.

FINAL.

The word "final," in an agreement for arbitration which provided that the controversy between the parties under the arbitration agreement should be submitted to the circuit court, and that its decision should be final, necessarily implies that the decision of the circuit court shall not be reviewed by another court. Hoste v. Dalton (Mich.) 100 N. W. 750, 751, 11 Detroit Leg. N. 392.

The word "final," in Laws 1894, c. 556, tit. 15, art. 1, §§ 4-7, providing that the decision of a county judge, in a proceeding by a school district trustee to compel reimbursement for expenses incurred by him in litigation affecting the interests of the district, allowing or disallowing the claim, shall be final, was merely intended to give the order the effect of a final order in a special proceeding, and, like other orders of that class, it is subject to review. Anderson v. School Dist. No. 15, 85 N. Y. Supp. 943, 945, 89 App. Div. 231.

FINAL ACCOUNT.

See "Decision and Decree Allowing a Final Account."

FINAL CONFIRMATION.

The final confirmation to which the act of Congress of 1851 refers is the final adjudication of the tribunals of the United States upon the validity of the title of the claimant under the Mexican grant. Until the survey which follows such adjudication is made and approved, the title is not definitely confirmed to any particular premises. Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 46, 85 Am. Dec. 157 (citing Johnson v. Van Dyke, 20 Cal. 228; Richardson v. Williamson, 24 Cal. 289).

FINAL DECISION.

The words "final decisions," as used in Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 6, cl. 1, 26 Stat. 828 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 549], which provides that the Circuit Courts of Appeal established by the act shall exercise appellate jurisdiction by appeal or by writ of error to review final decisions in the District Court and the existing Circuit Courts in all cases other than those provided by law, do not include an order denying the application of one not a party for leave to intervene, when discretionary with the court, nor an order refusing to entertain an appeal from the decision of receivers with reference to proof of a claim before them, where it was discretionary, and did not deprive the claimant of any substantial right. Land Title & Trust Co. v. Asphalt Co. of America (U. S.) 127 Fed. 1, 20, 62 C. O. A. 23.

FINAL JUDGMENT.

See, also, "Interlocutory Judgment"

A judgment is final, for the purpose of an appeal, when it determines the rights of the parties. Lemmons v. Huber (Or.) 77 Pac. 836, 837.

A judgment, to be final, must not only decide that one of the parties is entitled to relief of a final character, but must give that relief by its own force, or be enforceable for that purpose without further action by the court or by process for contempt. Reed v. Reed (Ky.) 80 S. W. 520, 522 (citing Bondurant v. Apperson, 61 Ky. [4 Metc.] 30).

If a judgment is not one that disposes of the whole case on its merits, it is not final. Heinze v. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 337, 340.

FINAL JURISDICTION.

The words "final jurisdiction," as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 1483, relating to prosecuting attorneys of criminal courts of common pleas filing informations for offenses occurring within the period within which such courts respectively have final jurisdiction, mean a jurisdiction to try the cause and upon conviction to impose the full penalty prescribed, as distinguished from a jurisdiction tion given in respect to offenses the punishment whereof may be greater or less than that which a justice court can impose. State v. Compaine, 57 Atl. 164, 76 Conn. 549.

FINDING.

Though a motion for a new trial because "the finding and judgment of the court is not sustained by the evidence" and "is contrary to law" might have been overruled because of its form, yet, where it was granted, the defect in form is not available on appeal. "The court could have concluded, the trial having been by the court, that the word 'finding' in the motion was equivalent to the word 'decision,' and, having done so, the court might have treated the word 'judgment' as surplusage." Balph v. Magaw (Ind.) 70 N. E. 188, 189 (citing Rodefer v. Fletcher, 89 Ind. 563; Rosenzweig v. Frazer, 82 Ind. 342; Christy v. Smith, 80 Ind. 573; Wilson v. Vance, 55 Ind. 384; Gates v. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co., 154 Ind. 338, 56 N. E. 722).

An inquest of insanity held by two justices of the peace upon the alleged insanity of any person or inhabitant of their county, and their certificate that said person therein named is insane and a proper subject for treatment in the hospital for the insane, is not a judgment of a court or equivalent thereto; nor is such finding and certificate equivalent to a verdict of a jury or a finding of a court that such person is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own estate, its purpose being to establish the fact that such person is entitled to admission to a hospital for the insane for treatment. Leinss v. Weiss (Ind.) 71 N. E. 254-256.

FIRST TEN YEARS.

The phrase "the first ten years," as used in a franchise granted by a municipality to a waterworks company, providing that the privileges granted to the company shall continue for a term of 25 years from and after the passage of the ordinance, and the municipality agreeing to lease the company's fire hydrants for said term, and pay a rent per year, and the municipal taxes assessed on the property for the first 10 years, etc., points to the first period of 10 years in the period of 25 years, and, there being no period of 25 years except the one commencing with the life of the franchise, the 10-year period will commence at that time. Town of Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co. (Wis.) 98 N. W. 539, 541.

FISH SKINNED OR BONED.

Cream of codfish, consisting of codfish skinned and boned, and subjected to the further process of cutting or shredding, is dutiable as "fish skinned or boned," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par.

261, 30 Stat. 171 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1651]. H. B. Teed & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 447.

FIXTURE.

Whenever chattels have been placed in and annexed to a building by their owner as a part of the means by which to carry out the purposes for which the building was erected or to which it has been adapted, and with the intention of permanently increasing its value for the use to which it is devoted, they become, as between the owner and his mortgagee, fixtures, and as much a part of the realty as the building itself; and this is true, notwithstanding that such chattels may be severed from and taken out of the building in which they are located, without doing any injury either to them or to it, and advantageously used elsewhere, and notwithstanding that the building itself may thereafter readily be devoted to a use entirely different from that which was contemplated when the annexation was made. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Penn Cordage Co. (N. J.) 58 Atl. 409, 410.

There must be an actual annexation of the chattel to the realty, with an intention of making a permanent accession to the freehold, and the application of the chattel to the use for which the realty in connection with which it is used is appropriated; and, in determining the question of annexation, more weight is to be given to the intention of the owner than to the method adopted in making the annexation. Security Trust Co. v. Temple Co. (N. J.) 58 Atl. 865, 866.

FLOUR.

See "Blended Flour."

FOOTING STONE.

Dimension stone synonymous, see "Dimension Stone."

FOR.

The word "for," as used in the statute requiring that notice be given for at least a specified number of days prior to the meeting of the city council as a board of equalization, means "during." Shannon v. City of Omaha (Neb.) 100 N. W. 298, 299 (citing Leavitt v. Bell, 55 Neb. 57, 75 N. W. 524).

FOR THE PRESENT.

Where one interested in a corporation agreed with an advertising agent that advertising for the corporation might be charged to him "for the present," it meant so long as there was no termination of the contract by notice, for a period of an indefinite length, with an implied condition that it should not be unreasonably long. Lewis v. Worrell, 71 N. E. 73, 185 Mass. 572.

FORCE.

See "Be in Force."

Any force, see "Any."

FORCIBLE ENTRY.

A forcible entry is an entry without the consent of the person having the actual possession (Civ. Code Prac. § 452, subsec. 1). Robinson v. Marshall (Ky.) 78 S. W. 904, 905.

"A forcible entry is not proved by evidence of a mere trespass. There must be proof of such force, or at least such show of force, as is calculated to prevent any resistance." There is no such force or violence used as is necessary to make one guilty of forcible entry and detainer where defendant, in the absence of prosecutrix, merely unlocked and took off the lock she had put on, and then put his own lock on, without breaking anything or doing any violence, and committed no violence on the return of the prosecutrix. State v. Leary (N. C.) 48 S. E. 570, 571 (quoting 2 Bish. Cr. Law, 509).

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

The action of forcible entry and detainer is a summary proceeding to recover possession of premises forcibly or unlawfully detained. The inquiry in such cases is confined to the actual, peaceable possession of the plaintiff and the unlawful or forcible ouster or detention by defendant; the object of the law being to prevent the disturbance of the public peace by the forcible assertion of a private right. Gore v. Altice, 74 Pac. 556, 557, 33 Wash. 335 (citing McCauley v. Welles, 12 Cal. 500).

FORECLOSURE PROCEEDING.

See "Commencement of Foreclosure Proceedings."

As action, see "Action."

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANY.

The words "foreign insurance company," as used in Rev. St. Me. c. 49, § 92, which declares that any person having a claim against any foreign insurance company may bring an appropriate suit thereon in the courts of the state, and that process may be served on the insurance commissioner, or on any duly appointed agent of the company within the state, apply only to foreign insurance companies which have complied with sections 79, 80, 84, and have obtained a license to do business in the state. Greenleaf v. National Ass'n of Ry. Postal Clerks (U. S.) 130 Fed. 209, 211.

FOREIGN PORT.

See "Passenger from a Foreign Port."

FORFEITURE.

The words "escheat" and "forfeiture" have a distinct and definite legal meaning, and can never be construed to mean "sale" and "purchase." Woodrough v. Douglas County (Neb.) 98 N. W. 1092, 1094.

FORGERY.

To constitute "forgery," under the English or common-law definition, the instrument must be such that, if genuine, it would be apparently of some legal efficacy. Huckaby v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 942, 944.

"Legal forgery cannot be made out by imputing a possible, or even actual, ignorance of the law to the person intended to be defrauded. However dark may be the moral hue of a transaction, courts of justice can only act upon a legal crime, upon criminal breaches of perfect legal operation." Pearson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 78 S. W. 1128, 1129 (quoting People v. Shall [N. Y.] 9 Cow. 778).

FORMER SPOUSE.

A woman, whose husband had secured a divorce from her, was not granted by such decree a right to marry; but she did so while such divorced husband was living, he also having married again. Held, that such divorced husband was the "former spouse" of the woman, within the meaning of a statute making it a felony for one to marry while having a former spouse living. Barfield v. Barfield, 35 South. 884, 885, 139 Ala. 290.

FORTHWITH.

The requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 3152, that the papers shall "forthwith" be sent to the justice to whom the transfer is made, and the plaintiff shall "forthwith" appear before him, indicate a purpose to have the order made at a time when, in the orderly course of the proceedings, the parties, or the plaintiff, at least, would be supposed to be before the justice, so that both parties would have notice that it was made, and so that, on the receipt of the order by the justice to whom the action is transferred, it will be in a condition to be at once tried or further postponed as such latter justice shall determine. De Zur v. Provost, 90 N. Y. Supp. 1016, 1018, 99 App. Div. 14.

FOUND.

An indictment is "found" when 12 grand jurors competent to vote upon such finding shall concur in finding such indictment. Shivers v. Territory, 74 Pac. 899, 901, 13 Okl. 466.

FOUND WITH THE WILL.

Where a will makes reference to a sealed letter "found with the will," any sealed letter, or any number of them, setting forth the purposes of the trust, made by anybody at any time after the will was executed and "found with the will," would each fully and accurately answer the reference. Appeal of Bryan, 58 Atl. 748, 749, 77 Conn. 240.

FOUNDED UPON A CONTRACT.

A claim for damages for breach of contract is one "founded upon a contract," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a, 30 Stat. 562 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447], and is provable in bankruptcy. In re Frederick L. Grant Shoe Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 881, 882.

FRANCHISE.

See "Corporate Franchise."

A franchise is a privilege conferred in the United States by the immediate or antecedent legislation of an act of incorporation, with conditions expressed, or necessarily inferential from its language, as to the manner of its exercise and for its enjoyment. Rhinehart v. Redfield, 87 N. Y. Supp. 789, 792, 93 App. Div. 410 (citing Woods v. Lawrence Co., 66 U. S. [1 Black] 386, 409, 17 L. Ed. 122).

A franchise is a royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject. To be a franchise, the right possessed must be such as cannot be exercised without the express permission of the sovereign power; a privilege or immunity of a public nature, which cannot legally be exercised without legislative grant. State v. Twin Village Water Co., 56 Atl. 763, 768, 98 Me. 214.

The franchise of being a corporation is a "franchise," within the meaning of Const. art. 13, § 1, providing for the taxation of all nonexempt property, and defining property as including moneys, credits, franchises, and all other matters and things capable of private ownership. Bank of California v. City and County of San Francisco, 75 Pac. 832, 833, 142 Cal. 276, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130.

The word "franchise," as used with reference to the rights derived by Laws Ill. 1859, pp. 530, 532, as amended by acts of 1861 and 1865 incorporating the Chicago City

Railways, and granting necessary rights in the streets selected and thereafter to be selected, means the grant from the city of authority to occupy the streets. Govin v. City of Chicago (U. S.) 132 Fed. 848, 857.

A license to keep a dramshop is not a franchise, which can be tested or vacated by quo warranto. Hargett v. Bell, 46 S. E. 749, 750, 184 N. C. 394.

FRAUD.

Fraud has been defined to be any kind of an artifice by which another is deceived. All surprise, trick, cunning, dissembling, and other unfair way by which another is cheated, is fraud. Collusion in a court of equity is fraud. In short, fraud is infinite. The suppression of the truth is equivalent to the utterance of a falsehood, and both are fraud. Holt v. King, 47 S. E. 362, 365, 54 W. Va. 441.

FRAUDULENT AFFIDAVIT.

Where the statements made in an affidavit in support of a pension claim are true, it is not a "false or fraudulent affidavit," the making of which constitutes a crime, under Rev. St. § 4746 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3279], merely because it was not in fact sworn to on the date shown in the notary's certificate. United States v. Wood (U. S.) 127 Fed. 171, 173.

FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT.

Concealment becomes fraudulent only when it is the duty of the party having knowledge of the facts to discover them to the other. Arkins v. Arkins (Colo.) 77 Pac. 256, 257.

"There may be such relations between the parties that silence or the nondisclosure of a material fact will be a 'fraudulent concealment.' If a person standing in a special relation of trust and confidence to another has information concerning property and contracts with the other, and does not disclose his exclusive knowledge, the contract may be avoided. Mere silence under such circumstances becomes fraudulent concealment." Pitman v. Holmes (Tex.) 78 S. W. 961, 963 (quoting Perry on Trusts, § 178).

Of cause of action.

A mere statement that a holder had no knowledge of the existence of the cause of action does not amount to a statement that the person liable has "fraudulently concealed the cause of action," within Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 83, § 22, providing that, if a person liable to an action fraudulently conceals the cause of such action from the knowledge of the person entitled thereto, the action may be commenced any time within five years after the person entitled to bring the same discovers he has such cause of action, and therefore such statement is not sufficient to prevent the application of the statute of limitations. Parmelee v. Price, 70 N. E. 725, 730, 208 Ill. 544 (citing Conner v. Goodman, 104 Ill. 365).

FREE FROM CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

The expression "the employé injured being free from contributory negligence" is the equivalent of the provision of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, requiring an allegation that the employé was at the time of the injury complained of in the exercise of due care and diligence. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Collins (Ind.) 71 N. E. 661, 662 (citing Indianapolis Union Ry. Co. v. Houlihan, 157 Ind. 494, 498, 60 N. E. 943, 54 L. R. A. 787; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lightheiser, 71 N. E. 218).

FREEHOLDER.

See "Resident Freeholder."

A freeholder is "one who holds lands in fee or for life, or for some indeterminate period." It is also defined as "an estate of inheritance or for life in real property." In order to be a freeholder, a person must have a property right in and title to real estate, amounting to an estate of inheritance, or for life, or for an indeterminate period. A wife living with her husband on land, the title to which is in the latter, and which is occupied by them jointly as a family homestead, is not by reason thereof a "freeholder," within the meaning of Cobbey's Ann. St. § 7175, providing that village authorities may grant license to sell intoxicating liquors on petition signed by a designated number of resident freeholders; and the same is true as to a husband living with his wife on land occupied by them jointly as a homestead, the legal title to which is in her. Campbell v. Moran (Neb.) 99 N. W. 498, 499 (quoting Winfield's Adjudged Words and Phrases; 8 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 898).

FREIGHTS.

The word "freights," as used in section 5 of the interstate commerce act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 380 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3156]), which provides that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other carrier for the pooling of freights of different or competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof, means the commodities carried, and not the compensation paid for such carriage. Interstate Com- merce Commission v. Southern Pac. Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 829, 838.

FRIVOLOUS DEFENSE.

A frivolous defense is one which at first glance can be seen to be merely pretensive, setting up some ground which cannot be sustained by argument. Dominion Nat. Bank v. Olympia Cotton Mills (U. S.) 128 Fed. 181, 182.

FROM.

The word "from," as used in an information under Comp. Laws, § 11,551, prohibiting larceny by stealing in any building on fire, which charged defendant with stealing goods from a building on fire, means "in"; the word "from" being often used interchangeably with "in." People v. Klammer (Mich.) 100 N. W. 600, 11 Detroit Leg. N. 306.

FROM TIME TO TIME.

A recognizance, binding an appellant in a criminal case to appear before the trial court "from time to time of the same," is not in compliance with a statute under which the recognizance should bind defendant to appear "from term to term." Fulton v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 227.

FRUCTUS NATURALES.

Those crops which grow from perennia roots, and which do not require the natural labor of the owner to bring them into existence, are called "fructus naturales," and pass to the heir at law or devisee as a part of the real estate. Simanek v. Nemets (Wis.) 97 N. W. 508, 510.

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT.

Full faith and credit are not denied an Illinois judgment by Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 1780, which, as construed by the New York courts, precludes the maintenance of an action on such judgment by one foreign corporation against another, because it is not upon a cause of action which arose within the state. Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 92, 191 U. S. 373, 48 L. Ed. 225.

FULL LEGISLATIVE POWERS.

In a statute conferring upon a board of school commissioners "full legislative powers," the expression quoted covers the entire field of legislation upon this subject, including the officers and agents to be employed, the mode and manner of their election or appointment, the tenure of their respective offices, their duties and compensation, and for what causes and by whom they may be suspended or removed from office. These and any other matters requiring legislation are necessarily embraced. It means ample, complete, perfect powers, not wanting in any essential quality. Mobile School Com'rs v. Putnam, 44 Ala. 506, 537.

FULL SATISFACTION.

"Full satisfaction" of the minds and consciences of the jury of the guilt of a defendant is no compliance with the rule which requires the jury to be convinced of guilt "beyond all reasonable doubt." Jones v. State (Miss.) 36 South. 243.

FUNDS.

See "Available Funds."

In Acts 1885-86, p. 142, c. 1233, § 9, providing that churches and all property of seminaries, asylums, hospitals, infirmaries, and colleges, and all other funds devoted to charitable purposes, shall be exempt from taxation, the word "funds" is used in the sense of "capital." City of Louisville v. Werne (Ky.) 80 S. W. 224, 225.

FURNISHING LIQUOR.

Giving away intoxicating liquor is within the inhibition of Acts 1902, p. 92, No. 90, forbidding "furnishing liquor," but not expressly forbidding giving. State v. Tague (Vt.) 56 Atl. 535.

FURNITURE.

See "Household Furniture."

FURTHER DEVELOPMENT.

"Further development," in a contract providing that if, in making certain developments, more water was made to flow than plaintiff was entitled to, then plaintiff was to have the option of purchasing such excess of water, less the amount actually paid by it in making such further development, referred to the development further or beyond what was necessary to make up the deficiency. Chapea Water Co. v. Chapman (Cal.) 77 Pac. 990, 992.

GALL CURE.

The term "gall cure" is one descriptive of a medicine, and, standing alone, could not be monopolized as a trade-mark, and, when used as such in connection with a picture, is not infringed by the use of the words as a part of the name of another remedy in connection with another and distinctive picture.

Bickmore Gall Cure Co. v. Karns Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 126 Fed. 573, 574.

GALLOON.

See, also "Narrow."

"The dictionaries generally concur in defining 'galloon' as a 'narrow, tapelike fabric used for binding hats, shoes, etc.'" Certain woven articles from 1 to 2½ inches wide, chiefly used as hat bands for trimming men's hats, are not "galloons," within the meaning of that word as it is used in Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, § 1, par. 263, 28 Stat. 529. United States v. Walter H. Gruef & Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 688, 689, 62 C. C. A. 414.

GAMBLING.

"Keeping a gambling house and gambling are distinct offenses. A person guilty of keeping a gambling house may not be guilty of gambling and one may be guilty of gambling without having any connection with the house. The essence of the former offense is the keeping of the place for the purpose of gambling, or the permission of gambling in a place under the care or control of the accused, as appears from section 4962 of the Code, defining it," by declaring that if any person keep a house, shop, or place resorted to for the purpose of gambling, etc., the offender shall be fined, etc., and proof of participation in the play is not essential to a conviction, but under section 4964 of the Code, providing that, if any person play at any game for any sum of money or other property of any value, etc., he shall be guilty of misdemeanor; but, in order to convict, he must be shown to have joined in the game or have participated in the betting or wagering of money or other property. State v. White, 98 N. W. 1027, 1028, 123 Iowa, 425.

GAME.

See "Banking Game."

The act of pool selling or betting by buyers on pools is not a "game," within Ky. St. 1903, § 1978, prescribing a penalty for those suffering any game in which any property or money is bet, won, or lost in any house or in premises in their occupation City of Louisville v. Wehmoff (Ky.) 79 S. W. 201; Same v. Alvey, Id.; Same v. Pirle, Id.; Same v. Smith, Id.

The words "game or gambling device," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3424, providing that any person who shall lose any money or property at any "game or gambling device" may recover it by civil action, do not include a fictitious sale and purchase, though sections 2121, 2223, 2337-2342, declare ac-tious sales and purchases to be gambling, and render all parties thereto particeps criminis. See v. Runzi, 79 S. W. 992, 993, 105 Mo. App. 435.

GAME OF CHANCE.

Throwing dice is purely a game of chance, and chess is purely a game of skill. But games of cards do not cease to be games of chance because they call for the exercise of skill by the players, nor do games of billiards cease to be games of skill because at times, especially in the case of tyros, their result is determined by some unforeseen accident, usually called "luck." The test of the character of the game is, not whether it contains an element of chance or an element of skill, but which is the dominating element that determines the result of the game. People v. Lavin, 71 N. E. 753, 755, 179 N. Y. 164, 66 L. R. A. 601.

GAMING CONTRACT.

A contract between a broker and his customer, whereby there is to be no other liability on either side than a settlement of differences, and under which the broker, as well as the customer, equally stand to gain or lose by the rise or fall of prices, and the parties have no other right or interest against each other under the entire contract than that resulting from the differences, is a "gaming contract." Thompson v. Williamson (N. J.) 58 Atl. 602, 605.

GAMING DEVICE.

Lottery is a "gaming device," and the keeping of a house for the purpose of selling lottery tickets is within the spirit and intentment of a charter delegating power to prevent and suppress gaming and gambling houses or places where any game in which chance predominates is played for anything of value. City of Portland v. Yick, 75 Pac. 706, 709, 44 Or. 439.

GAMING TABLE.

The characteristics of the gaming table are: First, it is a game; second, there is a keeper, dealer, or exhibitor; third, it must be exhibited for the purpose of obtaining bettors. Mayo v. State (Tex.) 82 S. W. 515, 516.

GENERAL AVERAGE.

"General average as per foreign custom" would be a declaration not wholly lived up to, if foreign custom made the assured pay on one basis, but the memorandum clause allowed him to collect on another. International Nav. Co. v. Sea Ins. Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 13, 15, 63 C. C. A. 663.

GENERAL DAMAGES.

General damages are those which the law presumes must naturally, proximately and necessarily result from the publication of the libelous matter. They arise by inference of law, and are not required to be proved by evidence. They are allowable whenever the immediate tendency of the words is to impair the plaintiff's reputation, although no actual pecuniary loss had in fact resulted; and are designed to compensate for that large and substantial class of injuries arising from injured feelings, mental suffering and anguish, and personal and public humiliation, consequent upon the malicious publication of the false and libelous matter. Hanson v. Krehbiel (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1041, 1042, 64 L. R. A. 790.

GENERAL ELECTION.

In view of Const. art. 7, § 7, and Mills' Ann. St. § 1578, referring to annual elections as "general elections," the election of 1903 was a "general election," within Const. art. 14, § 9, providing that, in case of a vacancy in the office of assessor or coroner, the board of county commissioners shall fill such vacancy by appointment, the appointee to hold office till the next "general election." Mannix v. Selbach, 74 Pac. 460, 461, 31 Colo. 502.

GENERAL LAW.

A law which operates only upon a class of individuals is none the less a "general law," if the individuals to whom it is applicable constitute a class which requires legislation peculiar to itself in the matter covered by the law. The class, however, must not only be germane to the purpose of the law, but must also be characterized by some substantial qualities or attributes which render such legislation necessary or appropriate for the individual members of the class. It may be founded on some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction (Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 251, 27 Pac. 604, 607), but the distinction must be of such a nature as to reasonably indicate the necessity or propriety of legislation restricted to that class. The classification must not be arbitrary, for the mere purpose of classification, but must be founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction, which will suggest a reason which might rationally be held to justify the diversity in the legislation. Deyoe v. Superior Court of Mendocino County, 74 Pac. 28, 29, 140 Cal. 476, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73 (citing People v. Central Pac. R. Co., 105 Cal. 576, 38 Pac. 905).

A law is general which operates alike upon all the inhabitants, or all the cities, or all the villages, or other subjects of a class of subjects. A law is general, in the constitutional sense, which applies to and operates uniformly upon all members of any class of persons, places, or things requiring legislation peculiar to itself in matters covered by law. State ex rel. Corriston v. Rogers (Minn.) 100 N. W. 659, 660 (quoting State v. Cooley, 56 Minn. 540, 58 N. W. 150).

"The term 'general,' when used in antithesis to 'special,' means relating to a class, instead of to persons only of that class." City of Baltimore v. Allegany County Com'rs (Md.) 57 Atl. 632, 636 (quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. 165, note).

"The difference between a general and a special statute is that a general law applies to all of the class, while a special statute applies to one or to a part of a class only." City of Little Rock v. Town of North Little Rock (Ark.) 79 S. W. 785, 787 (citing Railway v. Hanniford, 49 Ark. 291, 5 S. W. 294; Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 348; Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 148).

A law which excepts a part of a given class is not general and uniform. State v. City of Red Lodge (Mont.) 76 Pac. 758, 760.

GENERAL LEGACY.

A general legacy is a gift of personal property by a last will and testament, not amounting to a bequest of a particular thing or money, or of a particular fund designated from all others of the same kind. In re Fisher, 87 N. Y. Supp. 567, 568, 93 App. Div. 186 (citing Crawford v. McCarthy, 159 N. Y. 514, 54 N. E. 277).

"A legacy of shares of stock given generally, and without any indication that testator intended to bequeath particular stock held by him at the date of the will or existing as a part of his estate, is a general legacy, and, if the shares bequeathed are not in testator's possession at the time of his death, the gift is considered to be a direction to the executors to purchase the securities for the legatee with his general estate. Blair v. Scribner, 57 Atl. 318, 324, 65 N. J. Eq. 498 (citing Norris v. Thompson's Ex'rs, 16 N. J. Eq. [1 C. E. Green] 218; 2 Williams, Ex'rs [R. & T. Ed.] *1026; 3 Pom. Eq. Juris. § 1132; 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. [4th Am. Ed.] 610).

GENERAL LEGATEE.

"A general legatee is one who has a bequest of a specified quantity, payable out of the personal assets generally." In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

GENERAL PURPOSE.

Under constitutional provisions and statutes providing that no tax shall be levied by a city without designating in the levy the purpose for which it is to be applied, that no tax levied for one purpose shall be applied to another, and providing that, in an ordinance fixing the tax rate for any year, the levy shall be subdivided for the following purposes: For schools, for sinking fund, for police purposes, for sprinkling streets, for general purposes, etc.—and leaving to the discretion of the city the levies to be made each year for the enumerated purposes, an ordinance subdividing a levy among a number of such enumerated purposes, but making no mention of street sprinkling, does not embrace a levy for that purpose under the head of "General Purposes," and no part of the levy can be used for street sprinkling. City of Louisville v. Button (Ky.) 82 S. W. 293, 294.

GIFT.

See "Absolute Gift."
Gift to a class, see "Class."

"There can be no gift without an intention to give and a delivery, either actual or constructive, of the thing given. There must be both a purpose to give, and the execution of this purpose. The purpose must be expressed either orally or in writing, and it must be executed by the actual delivery to the donee of the thing given, or of the means of getting possession and enjoyment thereof. It is the fact of delivery that converts the unexecuted and revocable purpose into an executed and complete gift." Collins v. Maude, 77 Pac. 945, 947, 144 Cal. 289 (citing Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 674, 54 Pac. 267).

GIFT CAUSA MORTIS.

It is essential to the validity of a "gift causa mortis" that there must be an actual and complete delivery of the property made in execution of the gift, and for the express purpose of consummating it. Bruce v. Squires (Kan.) 74 Pac. 1102, 1108.

A loan, by a person who did not expect to live long, of a sum of money to a firm, which executed a receipt containing an agreement to turn the money over to a certain person in case of the lender's death, was not a gift causa mortis because not delivered to the beneficiary, or any one for him, and not to go to him until the death of the lender. Ragan v. Hill (Ark.) 80 S. W. 150.

Where one who was ill stated that she was "going to die," and handed another a number of bankbooks, saying "Bury me out of this, and whatever is left is yours," there was a gift causa mortis. Mahon v. Dime Sav. Bank of Brooklyn, 87 N. Y. Supp. 253, 259, 92 App. Div. 508.

GIFT ENTERPRISE.

The law lexicographers define a "gift enterprise" as a scheme for the division and distribution of certain articles of property, to be determined by chance, among those who have taken shares in the scheme. Black's Law Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.; Anderson's Law Dict. So in Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 17, it was said, in approving the above definition, that the words "gift enterprise," as thus understood, had attained such notoriety that the courts would take judicial notice of what is meant when they appear in legislative enactments. Manufacturers and dealers in trading stamps sold to merchants, to be given to cash customers, and absolutely redeemable in goods offered by the trading-stamp concern, without restrictions except as to the number redeemable at any one time, are not engaged in a gift enterprise within the meaning of a provision of a city charter authorizing the city to levy a license tax on each gift enterprise. City of Winston v. Beeson, 47 S. E. 457, 459, 135 N. C. 271, 65 L. R. A. 167.

To constitute a gift enterprise, the element of chance must enter into the scheme. A trading-stamp business, consisting of the selling of checks or stamps to merchants, who give the same to their customers on purchases of goods, the number of stamps given being determined by the amount of the purchase, the stamps on presentation at the trading-stamp store entitling the holders to select any article from an assortment of articles, each article being plainly marked with its value in stamps, such value not being greater than the market value of the articles, is not a "gift enterprise" within the meaning of a statute denouncing gift enterprises, etc. State v. Shugart, 35 South. 28, 29, 138 Ala. 86, 100 Am. St. Rep. 17.

GIFT INTER VIVOS.

To constitute a valid gift inter vivos of personal property, the gift must be voluntary, gratuitous, and absolute, and take effect at once, and ordinarily must be accompanied by a delivery of the thing to the donee, or to some one for his use and benefit. The delivery of a gift, however, is not always required. Hence, where a deed recited that part of the consideration was a note, with interest payable annually for the use of a certain person during her life, there was a valid gift of the interest, though the note was not delivered to the donee. Malone's Committee v. Lebus (Ky.) 77 S. W. 180, 181.

It is essential to the validity of a gift inter vivos that there must be an actual and complete delivery of the property made in execution of the gift, and for the express purpose of consummating it. Bruce v. Squires (Kan.) 74 Pac. 1102, 1103.

GIN AND WATER.

In considering an indictment charging the mixing of cantharides with gin and water, which was objected to on the ground of ambiguity, the court said: "The court, jury, and accused must have known that gin and water is a drink. That is the usual acceptance and meaning of those words, and in that sense they must be taken." Madden v. State, 1 Kan. 340, 350.

GINGER ROOT UNGROUND.

A by-product in the process of extracting the essence of ginger root, which results from cracking the crude root in a machine and running it through a still, and consists of the residue of the process pressed into cakes, is not within the provision in paragraph 667, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1688], for "ginger root unground." Cracking the root, so that it is reduced to small particles and pulverized, is a process of grinding. Lewis German & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 128 Fed. 467.

GIVE.

Giving away liquor as furnishing liquor, see "Furnishing Liquor."

GIVEN.

Where the judge, after having read a requested instruction to the jury which had been marked "given," stated that he wished to modify it, and immediately concluded not to give the same, and orally so stated to the jury, whereupon he marked it "refused," the instruction being plainly erroneous, and defendant's right to review the same having been preserved by the court's marking the same "refused," defendant was not prejudiced by the court's oral statement that he wished to modify the instruction which was objectionable, under Prac. Act, § 53, providing that the court shall not modify instructions given otherwise than in writing. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Zapp, 70 N. E. 623, 624, 209 Ill. 339.

GLASSWARE.

See "Blown Glassware."

GLUCOSE.

The term "glucose" is obnoxious to many, if not a majority, of the public, and is misunderstood by them. They do not know that in this country glucose is now made entirely from corn, and that the terms "glucose" and "corn syrup" are commercially synonymous. This fact is known to the manufacturers, and perhaps to the dealers. A prejudice exists against the term "glucose," because that material can be manufactured from many substances, including sawdust. In Europe it is made mainly of potatoes. By many it is associated with a glue factory. In this country "corn syrup" and "glucose" are not only commercially synonymous terms, but it is stated by counsel for respondent that they are permitted to be so used in all the other states. We have not verified this statement, but, as it is not challenged, we assume it to be correct. People v. Harris (Mich.) 97 N. W. 402, 403.

GLUE.

So-called "bone size," used for filling and softening corduroys, is not "glue" within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 152 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1628]. G. W. Sheldon & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 127 Fed. 494.

GO TO.

Where a testator in his will directs that certain property after the death or remarriage of his widow "shall go to and belong to" other relatives, the words "go to and belong to" are not equivalent to "pay and divide." On the marriage or death of the widow the property "goes" to—that is, moves, passes, proceeds, and belongs to; that is, comes under the physical power of, and is at the disposal of—those persons to whom the legal title was transferred at his death. Thus the language used correctly describes the progress of the tangible property from the possession of the testator to that of the beneficiary, and has nothing of the meaning of "paying and dividing." In re Hitchens' Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 472, 476, 43 Misc. Rep. 485.

GOOD AND EFFECTUAL DEED.

The words "good and effectual," as applied to a tax deed, must be understood to mean that the deed shall pass the title to the vendee, if the sale was made in obedience to the directions of the law, and was authorized by it; not that the vendee shall be released from the onus of proving every prerequisite to the regularity of the sale. Lyon v. Hunt, 11 Ala. 295, 315, 316, 46 Am. Dec. 216.

GOOD CAUSE SHOWN.

A "good cause shown," in Laws 1894, p. 413, c. 235, § 5, providing that a joint-stock association shall not be dissolved, except, among other things, for good cause shown, refers to a condition of affairs where the business of the association could no longer be carried on, either because of the inherent failure of the enterprise, or because of considerable loss of the assets, and consequent danger of continuing the business, or because of the existence of other reasons which threaten to eventually wipe out the assets or divert the business from the original purposes for which it was formed. Colton v. Raymond, 85 N. Y. Supp. 210, 213, 214, 41 Misc. Rep. 580.

GOOD CONDITION.

Statements contained in receipts and bills of lading to the effect that the goods mentioned therein were received in "good order" or "good condition" are in the nature of mere admissions, mere written declarations, not conclusive or nonexplainable as against the party making them, much less as against one who did not. Bath v. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 78 S. W. 993, 995.

GOOD FAITH.

See "Purchaser in Good Faith."

"Good faith" is defined to be honesty of intention, and freedom from knowledge of circumstances which ought to put the holder upon inquiry. Cochran v. Fox Chase Bank, 58 Atl. 117, 118, 209 Pa. 34.

The good faith which will protect a defendant in an action of trover for the conversion of timber cut and removed by him from plaintiff's land is not incompatible with some degree of negligence. Almost any trespass upon the rights of another which is not willful arises in whole or in part from the defendant's ignorance of something which he might have discovered had he exercised a certain degree of care. Where injury is caused by negligence, as distinguished from willfulness, wantonness, or recklessness, it seems that the defendant is chargeable only with the actual damage in the ordinary sense of that term. Dartmouth College Trustees v. International Paper Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 92, 98.

GOOD GOVERNMENT.

In the ordinance of 1787 giving Territorial Legislatures power to make laws for the good government of the territory, etc., the term "good government" embraces within its scope the whole range of legislation necessary to secure the comfort, prosperity, and happiness of a people. Under that power the Legislature may provide for taking private property for public uses. Swan v. Williams, 2 Mich. 427, 431.

GOOD HEALTH.

In life insurance cases it has been held that good health does not ordinarily mean freedom from infirmity, and that good health or sound health means a state of health free from disease or ailment that affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously. It is a relative term, and does not mean absolute freedom from physical infirmity, but only such a condition of body and mind as that one may discharge the ordinary duties of life without serious strain upon the vital powers. Hence, in a suit by a female against a railroad company for damages for personal injuries, where it is alleged that plaintiff was, prior to the injuries, in good health, a recovery may be had, notwithstanding it appears from the evidence that at the time of the injuries the plaintiff was laboring under an infirmity of which she was ignorant, and which did not interfere with the discharge by her of the ordinary duties of life. Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Douglas, 46 S. E. 867, 868, 119 Ga. 658.

An applicant for life insurance, who from a time prior to his application until his death, some years after delivery of the policy, suffered from nephritis, or Bright's disease, which was the direct, though remote, cause of his death, was not "in good health" when the policy was delivered, within the meaning of a provision therein that it should not take effect until delivered while the applicant was in good health, nor until the first premium was paid while he was also in good health. Austin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n (U. S.) 132 Fed. 555, 559.

A statement, in an application for additional insurance, that the applicant was in "good health," was not a misrepresentation, though she was at the time pregnant. American Order of Protection v. Stanley (Neb.) 97 N. W. 467, 469.

GOOD ORDER.

Statements contained in receipts and bills of lading, to the effect that the goods mentioned therein were received in "good order" or "good condition," are in the nature of mere admissions, mere written declarations, not conclusive or nonexplainable as against the party making them, much less as against one who did not. Bath v. Houston & T. O. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 78 S. W. 993, 995.

GOOD ORE.

See "Extra Good Ore."

GOOD WILL.

"Good will" varies with the custom of the general trade and the character or methods of the particular business. An early definition by Lord Eldon is "the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place." This involved the ancient idea that good will inhered in the premises where the business was conducted. This is too limited for modern kinds or methods of business. The habit of people to purchase from a certain dealer or manufacturer, which is the foundation for any expectation that purchases will continue, may depend on many things besides place. Confidence in the quality of the goods, in the facilities of the establishment to fill orders promptly, or in the personal integrity or skill of a dealer or manufacturer, familiarity of the public with a designating name for the product, and probably many other circumstances, might be mentioned as illustrative. The good will is a sort of beaten pathway from the seller to the buyer, usually established and made easy of passage by years of effort and expense in advertising, solicitation, and recommendation by traveling agents, exhibition tests, or displays of goods, often by acquaintance with local dealers who enjoy confidence of their own neighbors, and the like. Rowell v. Rowell (Wis.) 99 N. W. 473, 478.

"A good will is the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place." With reference to a commercial partnership business requiring no special personal skill or professional knowledge, this good will may be described "to be the advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stock, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers on account of its local position, or common celebrity or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices." Plaintiff and defendant dissolved a partnership existing between them on July 23d, reciting in the contract of dissolution the sale by defendant to plaintiff of his entire interest in the business, together with the good will thereof. On August 1st following, they entered into another agreement, reciting the sale by defendant to plaintiff of abstract books, iron safe, and letterpress for a certain sum, and stipulated as a further consideration that plaintiff should give defendant the free use of the abstract books, and should keep them in defendant's office, and defendant should not compile abstracts or engage in the abstract business. The parties, not being partners at the time of the subsequent agreement, and the sale not being one of good will, the restraint on defendant from engaging in the abstract business was in violation of Rev. Civ. Code, § 1277, making contracts restraining any one from exercising a lawful vocation, otherwise than as provided in sections 1278 and 1279, void. Prescott v. Bidwell (S. D.) 99 N. W. 93, 94 (quoting Bishop on "Contracts," p. 520; Story on "Partnerships," § 99).

GOODS.

See "Confusion of Goods"; "Dress Goods."

The word "goods" has a generic meaning, in which it is synonymous with the word

"property"; and it has a specific meaning, as in the phrase "a stock of goods," where it means articles of trade—goods, wares, and merchandise. It is used in its specific sense in section 847 of the Revised Statutes, providing that "every person who shall willfully and maliciously set fire to or burn, or attempt to set fire to or burn, any bridge, shed, railroad, plank road, railroad car, carriage or other vehicle, or any goods, wares, or merchandise, shall, on conviction, be imprisoned." State v. Fontenot, 86 South. 630, 631, 112 La. 628.

GOODS IN STORE.

The term "goods in store," in a chattel mortgage, does not include an iron safe kept for use, and not for sale; it has reference only to merchandise and commodities kept on hand for purposes of sale. Curtis v. Phillips, 5 Mich. 112, 113.

GOVERNMENT.

See "City Government"; "Good Government"; "Republican Form of Government."

GRADE.

Any change in grade, see "Any."

The term "grade" in Gen. St. 1902, § 2051, making the municipality liable for special damages resulting from a change in a street grade, is used not to signify a level precisely established by mathematical points and lines, but the surface of the highway as it in fact exists; and any elevation or depression of this surface by municipal authorities resulting from an attempt to establish a grade is a change of grade which, if damages result, will support an action. Pickles v. City of Ansonia, 56 Atl. 552, 553, 76 Conn. 278.

GRADUATING.

By "graduating the license" is meant to regulate its amount according to the amount of the gross sales of the licensee, or on some other basis of proportion. Thus, under the general license law, the wholesale merchant pays $3,500 if his gross sales amount to seven millions or more, and $50 if they amount to a quarter of a million or less; and the retail merchant's license varies in the same way, from $3,500 to $5, according to the amount of his sales. State v. Rittenberg, 86 South. 330, 112 La. 224.

GRANT.

See "Imperfect Grant."

An instrument which does not purport to convey any present interest in an existing patent, or one for which an application is pending, is not a "grant" within Rev. St. U. S. § 4898 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3387]. National Cash Register Co. v. New Columbus Watch Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 114, 63 C. C. A. 616.

A grant in its own nature amounts to an extinguishment of the right of the grantor, and implies a contract not to reassert that right. Trustees of Town of Brookhaven v. Smith, 90 N. Y. Supp. 646, 649.

By statute the words "grant or convey" in a deed carry with them an implied warranty that the estate conveyed is at the time of the execution of the deed free from incumbrances, unless restrained by express terms contained therein. Rotan v. Hays (Tex.) 77 S. W. 654, 655.

GRANTEE.

Where a conveyance by A. and wife to B. and C., her husband, recited that it was to them and the heirs of their body, for the express purpose of a home for them for life, and for the welfare and comfort of their children, provided that, if B. and C. separated, the interest of C. in the land should cease, and provided that the grantees, with the written consent of the grantors, or the survivor of them, might sell the land and reinvest the proceeds in other lands, to be owned and held by them and their heirs in the manner provided in the deed, and provided that, if the grantees died, the land should revert to the grantors or the survivor, the grantor's widow may convey the property without requiring B. and C. and children to join in the deed, C. having separated from B., the grantees being B. and C. Louisville & A. R. Co. v. Horn (Ky.) 82 S. W. 567, 568.

GRASS SEED.

Canary seed, which is botanically a grass seed, but is used principally as a bird seed, and which is not known commercially as grass seed, is not within the meaning of the words "grass seeds," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 656, 30 Stat. 201 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1687], relating to grass seeds not specially provided for. Nordlinger v. United States (U. S.) 127 Fed. 683, 684, 62 C. C. A. 409.

GRAZE.

Where sheep are being driven from one range to another, the occasional eating of grass as they go, or while stopped for a needed rest, is not "grazing" them, within Rev. St. 1887, § 1210, making it unlawful to herd sheep or permit them to graze within two miles of the dwelling house of the owner or owners of possessory claims. Phipps v. Grover (Idaho) 75 Pac. 64, 65.

GREAT BODILY INJURY.

See "Assault with Intent to Commit Great Bodily Injury."

GREAT INCONVENIENCE.

The mere question between the right to challenge three jurors and the right to challenge two juries and a half is not within the meaning of the expression "great inconvenience," as used in the statement that, where a proposed construction of a statute would occasion great inconvenience, that construction is to be avoided if another and more reasonable interpretation is present in the statute. Betts v. United States (U. S.) 132 Fed. 228, 236.

GROOVE.

A "groove" is defined as "a furrow, channel, or long hollow." Gordon, Strobel & Lureau v. Carnegie Steel Co. (U. S.) 126 Fed. 538, 540.

GROSS DAMAGES.

In a complaint for the flowage of plaintiff's land by defendant's milldam under the mill acts "gross damages" are simply the equivalent of "annual damages," which are to be ascertained by the same mode and upon the same facts. Ingram v. Maine Water Co., 57 Atl. 893, 894, 98 Me. 566.

GROSS NEGLIGENCE.

In order to constitute gross negligence, there must be charged and shown either a willful intent to injure, or that reckless and wanton disregard of another's rights and safety, and that willingness to inflict injury, which the law deems equivalent to an intent to injure; and where plaintiff, in an action for wrongful death, alleges that it was caused by defendant's wanton and willful misconduct, he cannot recover on proof of mere negligence. Wilson v. Chippewa Valley Electric R. Co., 98 N. W. 536, 538, 120 Wis. 636, 66 L. R. A. 912.

In a suit in which an issue of gross negligence was involved, the trial court, in defining the term, instructed the jury that "gross negligence is the failure to take such care as a person of common sense and reasonable skill in like business, but of careless habits, would observe in avoiding injury to his own person or life, under circumstances of equal or similar danger to the plaintiff on the occasion under consideration." The appellate court in passing on this instruction, and the contention of the appellant that "gross negligence" should be defined as the want of slight care, said that it might be doubted if there was an appreciable practical difference between the two definitions, and that whatever the hazard of the particular employment might be, whether upon a railroad or elsewhere, the degree of care is required to correspond with the danger of the situation, and a definition given by the trial court, or its equivalent, should be applied in all cases where gross negligence was an element of the suit. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Board (Ky.) 77 S. W. 189.

GROSS PREMIUM PLAN.

The "gross premium plan" employed by a building association in taking the premium and determining the amount is where an amount or certain percentage determined on is deducted from the par value of the stock at the time of the loan, and the difference or balance is handed over to the borrower. The amount so deducted is often determined by receiving bids from various members who are desirous of anticipating the value of their stock by borrowing from the association some of its funds on hand. Fidelity Sav. Ass'n v. Bank of Commerce (Wyo.) 75 Pac. 448, 456.

GROSS PREMIUMS.

In Tax Law, § 187, Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 630, c. 494, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, imposing a franchise tax on the gross amount of premiums received during the preceding calendar year by domestic insurance companies, the term "gross premiums" includes, in addition to all other premiums, such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance. People v. Miller, 85 N. Y. Supp. 468, 471, 88 App. Div. 218.

Gross premiums received by domestic insurance companies for business done in the state for the purpose of taxation, under Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, § 1, imposing an annual state tax for the privilege of carrying on the business, and providing that the term "gross premiums" shall include such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance, do not include premiums unearned and paid in advance, but refunded on a cancellation of a policy. People v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 177 N. Y. 515.

GROSS RECEIPTS.

Unearned premiums returned to the insured on the cancellation of the policy of insurance do not constitute any part of the "gross receipts" of the company by which the policy was issued, and need not be included in its return of gross receipts, under the provisions of Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, § 58. State v. Fleming (Neb.) 97 N. W. 1063, 1069.

GROUND RENT.

A ground rent, being an estate of inheritance in the rent of lands, is a freehold estate, and is a right to and interest in the lands, within the meaning of section 4158, Rev. St. 1892, relating to descent and distribution. McCammon v. Cooper, 69 N. E. 658, 69 Ohio St. 366.

GUARANTY.

See "Continuing Guaranty"; "Quality Guaranteed."

"A guaranty is a promise to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty, in case of the failure of any person who is himself in the first instance liable to such payment or performance." Cowan v. Roberts, 46 S. E. 979, 980, 134 N. C. 415, 65 L. R. A. 729.

GUARDIAN.

The guardian and next friend in conducting a civil action are a "species of attorney, whose duty it is to bring the rights of the infant to the notice of the court," and the authority of each is limited to the proceeding in which he is appointed. Williams v. Cleaveland, 58 Atl. 850, 853, 76 Conn. 426.

GUARDIAN AD LITEM.

"There is no substantial difference between a guardian ad litem and a prochein ami. The former denomination is usually applied when the representation is for an infant defendant, and the latter where it is for an infant plaintiff." Vaile v. Sprague, 78 S. W. 609, 610, 179 Mo. 393.

GUEST.

The universal rule seems to be that one cannot be the "guest" of a hotel unless he procure some accommodation. He must procure a meal, room, drink, feed for his horse, or at least offer to buy something of the innkeeper before he becomes a guest. Tulane Hotel Co. v. Holohan (Tenn.) 79 S. W. 113.

GUILTY.

See "Plea of Guilty."

GUN.

As deadly weapon, see "Deadly Weapon."

HABEAS CORPUS.

As civil proceeding, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

Habeas corpus is for the benefit of those unlawfully restrained of their liberties, and this means physical, and not moral, restraint. In re Dykes, 74 Pac. 506, 507, 13 Okl. 339.

The writ of habeas corpus is not in the nature of, nor is it to be used as a substitute for, proceedings in error. A finding or decision of the inferior court, no matter how erroneous, if it does not affect its jurisdiction, is not subject to attack in this collateral proceeding. The office of the writ is to determine the legality of the particular imprisonment, and the facts to be considered in determining that question are jurisdictional facts. Younger v. Hehn (Wyo.) 75 Pac. 443, 444.

HABITATION.

In the law of process and attachment "residence" and "habitation" are generally regarded as synonymous. A "resident" and an "inhabitant" mean the same thing. A person resident is defined to be "one dwelling or having his abode in any place"; an inhabitant, "one that resides in a place." Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 253, 259, 54 W. Va. 32 (citing Drake on Attachment).

HALF.

The words "east half and west half" in a description in a deed naturally import an equal division; but they may lose that effect when it appears that at the time the deed was made some fixed boundary or monument divided the premises somewhere near the center, so that the words referred more properly to one of such parts than to a mathematical division which had never been made. People v. Hall, 88 N. Y. Supp. 276, 279, 43 Misc. Rep. 117.

HALF SECTION LINE.

A road was ordered by the authorities of a county along a "half section line." In a contest over the location of such line between the owners of premises on opposite sides of the road, in which contest the county was not interested, it was held that the line of a division fence jointly built between the holdings of the contending parties, to which each party had occupied and maintained possession for more than 10 years, was rightly adopted by the trial court as the "half section line," within the meaning of the proceedings locating such road. Nance County v. Russell (Neb.) 97 N. W. 320, 321.

HARMLESS.

See "Hold Harmless."

HAVE CHARGE OF.

A treasurer of a corporation, merely empowered by the by-laws to "have charge of and be responsible for" the securities of the corporation, has no authority to change the registration and sell certain of its bonds without special authority. Jennie Clarkson Home for Children v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 848, 853, 92 App. Div. 491.

HAZARDOUS NEGLIGENCE.

Where one poured kerosene oil from a can on wood and kindling in a stove in which she knew there were live coals, and there was an explosion of the can, resulting in her being seriously burned, she was charged, as a matter of law, of being guilty of "hazardous negligence" precluding a recovery for the injury from the manufacturer of the oil on the ground that it was below the legal standard of safety. Riggs v. Standard Oil Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 199, 204.

HEAD OF A BUREAU.

The person in charge of the branch office of the bureau for the collection of revenue from the sale and use of water in the borough of Brooklyn was not the "head of a bureau," within New York Charter, § 1543, providing that the heads of departments shall have power to remove certain officers, but that no head of a bureau shall be removed until he has been allowed an opportunity of making an explanation. People v. Oakley, 87 N. Y. Supp. 856, 859, 93 App. Div. 535.

HEAD OF A FAMILY.

A head of a family is one who contracts, supervises, and manages the affairs about the house, not necessarily a father or a husband. A person furnishing a home for himself, his mother, two minor brothers, and an invalid sister, and furnishing the groceries and money for their support, is the "head of a family," within the statute fixing the amount of wages which shall be exempt. Jarboe v. Jarboe (Mo.) 79 S. W. 1162, 1163 (quoting Ridenour-Baker Grocery Co. v. Monroe, 142 Mo. 165, 43 S. W. 633).

HEALING ACT.

A healing act is one that cures some defect in a proceeding which the Legislature could have authorized in the first instance. Lockhart v. City of Troy, 48 Ala. 579, 584.

HEALTH OFFICER.

HEARING.

Any hearing, see "Any."

HEIRS.

See "Bodily Heirs"; "Lawful Heirs." Distributees synonymous, see "Distributee."

Unless it is necessary to effectuate the manifest intention of a testator, the word "heirs" is a word of limitation. Jabine v. Sawyer (Ky.) 78 S. W. 140, 141.

Where a will provided that, if a life tenant should die before 25 years, a certain portion of his income should go to his mother, and "the rest to be divided between the heirs living and the heirs of any deceased," the word "heirs," as first employed in the first sentence, means the children of testatrix, and, as secondly employed, the children or descendants of such of her children as may be dead. Dulaney v. Dulaney (Ky.) 79 S. W. 195, 197.

The word "heirs," as used in a will providing that, if a daughter to whom all the real estate of testatrix was devised should die before her husband without having disposed of the property by will or leaving bodily heirs, the husband should take the real estate, with power to do with it as he desired, and providing that if the daughter should die, leaving heirs, before her father, he should enjoy the income during his life, and at his death it should return to the daughter's heirs, means children, and is to be construed as a word of limitation. Cralle v. Jackson (Ky.) 81 S. W. 669, 670.

The word "heirs," as used in a deed from a husband to his wife for life, with remainder to his heirs at her death, or before marriage as his widow, means children. Shirey v. Clark (Ark.) 81 S. W. 1057, 1058.

Where a testator directs that if his son shall have any lawful issue at his death the estate shall vest in his heirs forever, the word "heirs" means the same as lawful issue, and is not used in its legal sense. Harclerod v. Bass (Miss.) 36 South. 537, 538.

As used in a will giving land to testator's two sons, their heirs and assigns, forever, the word "heirs" is not used as "heirs of the body," and the sons took a fee. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1163, 183 Mo. 238.

The word "heirs" or "descendants," used in the creation of a separate estate of a married woman, will not, at her death, exclude the marital rights of the husband, except as to the children. Wood v. Reamer (Ky.) 82 S. W. 572, 574.

In 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4828, providing that, when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, etc., the term "heirs" means the widow and children of the deceased, and does not include parents and collateral heirs. Copeland v. City of Seattle, 74 Pac. 582, 583, 33 Wash. 415, 65 L. R. A. 338.

The words "heirs" and "personal representatives," as used in 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4828, providing that, when the death of a person is caused by any injury received from the wrongful act of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action, include only the widow and children of the deceased person, and do not authorize an action by the mother for the wrongful death of her unmarried adult son, on whom she was dependent. Manning v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 75 Pac. 994, 34 Wash. 406.

It is only as to the adopting parent that the adopted child is made heir or next of kin by the statute (Comp. Laws 1897, § 8780) providing that an adopted child shall become the heir at law of the person adopting it, and the adopted child, therefore, is not heir by right of representation of the kindred of the person who adopted it. Van Derlyn v. Mack (Mich.) 100 N. W. 278, 280, 66 L. R. A. 437 (quoting Helms v. Elliott, 14 S. W. 930, 89 Tenn. 446, 10 L. R. A. 535).

HEIRS OF THE BODY.

Bodily heirs synonymous, see "Bodily Heirs."

HERD.

Driving sheep from one range to another is not "herding" them, within Rev. St. 1887, § 1210, making it unlawful for any person to herd sheep on the land of others. Phipps v. Grover (Idaho) 75 Pac. 64, 65.

HEREDITAMENT.

"Tenements and hereditaments" include every species of realty, as well corporeal as incorporeal. In re Handley's Estate, 57 Atl. 755, 757, 208 Pa. 388.

HIGH CARE.

"High care," used in an instruction requiring the jury to believe that plaintiff used that high care which a person of ordinary prudence would have used, conveys the idea that a higher degree of care than ordinary care was imposed by law on him in that respect, if, indeed, it did not actually have that effect. St. John v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 80 S. W. 235, 237.

HIGH-TENSION SYSTEM.

The high-tension system is a method of generating at the power house a large volume or current of electricity, but with a comparatively low voltage, and converting it into a small current or volume with an exceedingly high voltage, and carrying it out along the line on small wires, to be taken off at different points called "substations." At these substations the current is reconverted into the large volume again, with a pressure adjusted to the requirements of the trolley wire. The method of transmission of the current may be likened somewhat to transmitting water through pipes. Harrison v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry. (Mich.) 100 N. W. 451, 452.

HIGHWAY.

See "Passable Highway."

The term "highway," as used in Code, § 919, providing that any part of a plat may be vacated, provided it does not abridge or destroy any right of any proprietor therein, and declaring that nothing contained in the statute shall authorize the closing or obstruction of the highways, means a traveled street, as distinguished from the mere space laid out between lots and blocks, which may sometimes become such. It cannot be construed to mean a country road, for the plat contemplated is that filed within corporate limits, where a road is always a street. All streets are highways, but all highways are not streets. Chrisman v. Omaha & C. B. Ry. & Bridge Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 63, 65.

When land is taken for highway purposes it does not become a "highway," within the meaning of the statute relating to the change of grade in the highway, until it has been made into one by working it to some grade and otherwise completing it for travel. Gorham v. City of New Haven, 58 Atl. 1, 2, 76 Conn. 700; Munson v. Same, Id.

"The term 'highway' is generic, comprehending in its broadest sense every public way, from an alley to a railroad or a navigable river." The Legislature, in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7233d, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors by virtue of a license in any room, unless it is arranged with a window or glass door, so that the whole of it may be in view from the street or highway, did not use the word "highway" in an unrestricted sense, and a paved alley 16 feet wide passing through the middle of a block is not a highway. State v. Harrison, 70 N. E. 877, 878, 162 Ind. 542.

Laws 1899, p. 958, § 469, authorized a canal company to lease, sell, or discontinue its canal. The canal company conveyed the entire canal and its appurtenances to a steamboat company, with all the franchises of the grantor in connection with the ownership and operation of the canal. The steamboat company operated the canal for about three years, charging the tolls authorized by law, when it conveyed the east 12 miles of the canal to a manufacturing company, reserving to itself and its successor and a certain person named the right at all times when the canal was operated to use it for boats, light or loaded, without charges. The entire canal except such 12 miles was abandoned, but the grantee continued to use the 12 miles for itself and such persons as it saw fit to permit. Such 12 miles were a public highway, and must be regarded, for the purpose of transportation, a public highway, to be operated under the restrictions placed on the original canal company by the act under which it was organized. New York Cement Co. v. Consolidated Rosendale Cement Co., 70 N. E. 451, 453, 178 N. Y. 167; Same v. Consolidated Rosendale Cement Co., Id.

HINDRANCE.

See "Unavoidable Hindrance."

HIRE.

See "Let for Hire"; "Using for Hire."

The compensation received by a man who owned a team, wagons, and a plow, with which he worked by the day for different employers as he could obtain work, earning usually from nine to fifteen dollars per week, and working alone when he could not find work for his team, must fall within the meaning of either "wages" or "hire," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 27, 30 Stat. 545 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3420], defining a "wage earner" to be one who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,500 per year. In re Yoder (U. S.) 127 Fed. 894, 895.

HOLD HARMLESS.

A receipt to an administrator, containing an agreement to "hold him harmless" in case the estate which he represents does not pay enough on settlement to cover the amount received, is held equivalent to an agreement to return the amount in case the claim should be rejected. Gorman v. Nairne, 12 Ala. 338, 339.

HOLIDAY.

See "Legal Holiday."

HOME PORT.

Under the United States statutes requiring the name of the "home port" of a vessel to be painted on her stern, and defining the word "port" to mean either the port where the vessel is registered or enrolled, or the place in the same district where the vessel was built, or where one or more of the owners reside, a corporation having its principal place of business in Chicago, and offices in Paducah, sufficiently complies with such statutory requirements by painting on the stern of a vessel belonging to it the words "of Paducah, Kentucky." Commonwealth v. Ayer & Lord Tie Co. (Ky.) 77 S. W. 686, 688.

HOMESTEAD.

See "Urban Homestead."

The homestead right or privilege granted by statute, before it has ripened into a life estate by the death of the spouse holding the legal title, is a quality of exemption and freedom of the property embraced in the homestead from execution and forced sale, incumbrance, or alienation without the consent of both husband and wife. The right of homestead is a personal privilege, which may be waived or lost unless asserted in due time on all proper occasions. The statute providing for the selection and exemption of a homestead withdraws the land thus selected from forced sale, and prevents alienation without the consent of both spouses. But the statute treats the subject as one of exemption, rather than creation of any new estate in the property in the spouse not holding the legal title. Campbell v. Moran (Neb.) 99 N. W. 498, 499.

A "homestead" is defined as follows: "A homestead not exceeding in value $2,000, consisting of the dwelling house in which the claimant resides, and its appurtenances, and the land on which the same is situated, not exceeding 160 acres of land to be selected by the owner thereof, and not in any incorporated city or village, or instead thereof, at the option of the claimant, a quantity of contiguous land, not exceeding two lots within any incorporated city or village, shall be exempt from execution or forced sales." Comp. St. 1901, c. 36. The first limitation imposed is that the homestead shall not exceed $2,000 in value; the next that it shall not exceed 160 acres of land not in any incorporated city or village, or, in lieu thereof, not exceeding two lots within such city or village. Tyson v. Tyson (Neb.) 98 N. W. 1076, 1078.

Under the act exempting a dwelling house in which the claimant lives, and its appurtenances, and the land on which it is situated, not exceeding 160 acres, a homestead may be composed of contiguous parts of different governmental subdivisions, and, where the buildings are situated upon only one of such subdivisions, that only does not necessarily constitute the homestead. Tindall v. Peterson (Neb.) 98 N. W. 688, 689.

Under Civ. Code, § 1237, providing that the homestead consists of the dwelling house in which the claimant resides and the land on which it is situated, the homestead does not include such other land as has resting thereon, as a part thereof, a building or buildings devoted to other purposes than those of a family home. In re Levy's Estate, 75 Pac. 301, 303, 141 Cal. 646, 99 Am. St. Rep. 92.

A homestead, if one exists, should be preserved, and there can be no sale of any portion of the building, if the result thereof will be to unreasonably interfere with the use and occupation of such homestead. Each case presented must be determined in great part on the particular facts involved therein. Where a two-story building is subject to convenient use as a residence by the owner, she should not be deprived of her homestead right of any part because she is using for her ordinary business the front windows and a portion of the room on the lower floor. Edmonds v. Davis, 98 N. W. 375, 376, 122 Iowa, 561.

Property is not deprived of its character as a homestead, under a statute exempting to every housekeeper or head of a family a dwelling house and appurtenances, and the land used in connection therewith, not exceeding a certain specified amount in value, by reason of the fact that the house was constructed into two separate living apartments, one of which was rented. Adams v. Adams, 82 S. W. 66, 67, 183 Mo. 396.

A leasehold interest which may be sold on execution may constitute a homestead. White v. Danforth, 98 N. W. 136, 137, 122 Iowa, 403.

HOMICIDE.

Homicide is the killing of any human creature, and is of three kinds—justifiable, excusable, and felonious. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262.

HOOD.

A "hood" used in connection with a rip saw is a tin or sheet-iron cap partly covering the saw, and preventing the board from flying up, while the saw is cutting it, and striking the operative. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works (Mo.) 80 S. W. 292, 294.

HORSE.

As chattel, see "Chattel."

HOTEL.

As building, see "Building."

A house having 24 bedrooms and a dining room containing the required amount of space, and with adequate kitchen facilities, and harboring between 80 and 40 people, was a "hotel," within Laws 1897, p. 234, c. 312, § 31, cl. "k," authorizing a holder of a liquor tax certificate, who is a keeper of a hotel, to sell liquor on Sunday to his guests with their meals. In re Oullinan, 87 N. Y. Supp. 660, 661, 93 App. Div. 427.

HOUSE.

See "Apartment House"; "Dwelling House"; "Eating House"; "School-house"; "Tenement House."

HOUSE OF WORSHIP.

The erection of a vestry or parish house is not the erection of a "house of worship," within the meaning of a will giving a legacy on condition of an additional sum being raised for the erection of a new house of worship. If a house of public worship was erected containing a vestry within its walls, it would not be contrary to the provisions of the will; but if a fund was raised for the erection of a meetinghouse and vestry which might be separate structures, with no provisions showing what part of the fund was to be used for the meetinghouse and what part for the vestry, the fund as a whole would not be for the erection of a house of worship. Trustees of the Ministerial Fund of the First Parish in Cambridge v. First Parish in Cambridge, 71 N. E. 74, 75, 186 Mass. 85.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE.

A bequest of "household furniture" includes silverware, but does not include mere garments and articles of clothing. Scoville v. Mason, 57 Atl. 114, 115, 76 Conn. 459.

IDEA.

The word "idea" is frequently used as a substitute for the word "intention," especially by careless talkers. Lewis v. Paull, 42 Ala. 136, 144.

IF.

Where synonymous, see "Where."

IF ABLE.

The phrase "if able," in Rev. St. c. 18, § 51, providing that, when any person is affected with any disease or sickness dangerous to the public health, the local board of health may remove him to a separate house and there care for him at his charge, if able, relates to the pecuniary ability of the party at the time the expenses were incurred. Inhabitants of Greenville v. Beauto, 58 Atl. 1026, 99 Me. 214.

IF IT APPEARS.

The phrase "if it appears," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2623, providing that if it appears to the surrogate that the will was duly executed, and that the testator at the time of executing it was in all respects competent and not under restraint, it must be admitted to probate, is equivalent to a requirement that the fact of competency must be established by sufficient evidence. In re Goodwin's Will, 88 N. Y. Supp. 734, 95 App. Div. 183.

IF POSSIBLE.

The qualifying phrase "if possible," in Gen. St. §§ 471, 472, declaring it unlawful for any president, director, etc., or other officer of any banking institution to receive deposits, with knowledge that the bank is insolvent, and making it the duty of every such officer, "if possible," to know the condition of the bank, has application to the discovery of wrong conditions by reasonable examination, and does not serve to excuse the want of all examination by a competent director. In short, the requirement of the statute is that the examination must be made, and must be of such a character as would result in a knowledge of the condition of the bank if such knowledge could possibly, within the range of reasonable frequency and thoroughness, be obtained. Forbes v. Mohr (Kan.) 76 Pac. 827, 829.

ILLEGALITY.

Illegality is predicable of radical defects only, and signifies that which is contrary to the principles of the law, as distinguished from mere rules of procedure. It denotes complete defects in the proceedings. State v. Norton, 48 S. E. 464, 465, 69 S. C. 454 (quoting 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 482).

IMMATERIAL ALLEGATION.

Concerning the rule which governs what may be termed "immaterial allegations," and distinguishes them from mere surplusage, it is said that: "The statement of immaterial or irrelevant matter or allegations is not only censured, as creating unnecessary expense, but also frequently affords an advantage to the opposite party, either by affording him matter of objection on the ground of variance, or as rendering it incumbent on the party pleading to adduce more evidence than would otherwise have been necessary. It is therefore of the greatest importance in pleading to avoid any unnecessary statement of facts, as well as prolixity in the statement of those which may be necessary. If a party take unto himself to state in pleading a particular estate, where it was only required of him that he should show a general or even a less estate, title, or interest, the adversary may traverse the allegation, and, if it be untrue, the party will fail." 1 Ohit. Pl. p. 325, § 252. The meaning of "immaterial" is that the thing pleaded is unnecessary to plaintiff's action; that he could have succeeded without reference thereto; but, when he sees fit to set forth such matter, then it becomes material. It is an immaterial thing made material by the act and choice of the pleader. Dunlap v. Kelly, 78 S. W. 664-666, 105 Mo. App. 1.

IMMEDIATE.

In an accident policy agreeing to pay a certain indemnity for the immediate continuance and total loss of time necessarily resulting from injuries, the word "immediate" will be construed as applying to causation, and not to time. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Branham (Ind.) 70 N. E. 174, 176.

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.

"Immediate delivery," as to coal, has a trade meaning among coal shippers, and means during the current month in which the offer is made and accepted. Feeley v. Boyd, 76 Pac. 1029, 143 Cal. 282, 65 L. R. A. 943.

IMMEDIATE NOTICE.

The term "immediate," as used in a policy requiring immediate notice to be given to the insurer of an accident, means within a reasonable time with regard to the attending circumstances. Columbia Paper Stock Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 78 S. W. 320, 322, 104 Mo. App. 157.

IMMEDIATELY.

As soon as practicable synonymous, see "As Soon as Practicable."

IMMIGRANT.

See "Alien Immigrant."

IMPEACH.

The rule is that jurors cannot impeach their own verdict, but this does not prevent a party showing by affidavits of jurors that the insertion in the answer in a special verdict was by mistake, and that the jury agreed on the opposite answer. Such evidence did not impeach the verdict of the jury, for that is not the written paper filed, but is the agreement which the jury reached, and the former, like most records or writings, is but the expression of evidence of some mental conception. Hence it may well be said that a showing that such writing is not correct is not impeachment of the verdict itself. Wolfgram v. Town of Schoepke (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1054, 1056.

The credibility of a witness is for the determination of the jury, and it was not error to instruct that a witness may be believed though impeached for general bad character, if the jury believe the witness has sworn to the truth, the use of the word "impeached" being the equivalent of "attacked" or "assailed." Ector v. State, 48 S. E. 315, 316, 120 Ga. 543.

IMPERFECT GRANT.

An imperfect grant is one which requires a further exercise of the granting power to pass the fee in the lands; is one "which does not convey full and absolute dominion, not only as against private persons, but as against the government, and which may be affirmed or disavowed by the political or granting authority." Territory v. Delinquent Tax List of Bernalillo County (N. M.) 76 Pac. 316, 317.

IMPERFECT OWNERSHIP.

Ownership is imperfect when it terminates at a certain time or on a condition. Ruddock Cypress Co. v. Peyret, 36 South. 105, 107, 111 La. 1019.

Ownership is "imperfect" when it is terminable at will, or on a condition or at a certain time. Where a claim against a city was assigned to a person in payment of a debt due him, and on further condition and consideration that he should devote the balance to be collected pro tanto to the payment of the debts due to the assignor's other creditors in whose favor, to that extent, such person bound himself by written contracts, as to the remaining interest in the claim his ownership was imperfect, in that it was subject to the condition that such remaining interest should, on the payment of the claim by the city, be surrendered to the holders of the equitable title in satisfaction of the debts due them. Sintes v. Commerford, 36 South. 656, 659, 112 La. 706.

IMPLICATION.

See "Amendment by Implication"; "Necessary Implication."

IMPLIED DEDICATION.

See "Dedication."

IMPLIED MALICE.

Implied or constructive malice is an inference or conclusion of law from the facts found by the jury, and, among these, the actual intention of the prisoner becomes an important and material fact; for, though he may not have intended to take away life or to do any personal harm, yet he may have been engaged in the perpetration of some other felonious or unlawful act from which the law raises the presumption of malice. State v. Brinte (Del.) 53 Atl. 258, 262.

"Legal or implied malice (as distinguished from ill will or 'malice' in the vernacular sense of the word) is defined to be the intentional doing of a wrong act without just cause or excuse." An instruction which states that malice does not mean mere spite, hatred, or dislike, but that condition of mind which makes a person disregard the rights of others by doing an act without just cause or provocation, is erroneous. Ickenroth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 162, 166, 102 Mo. App. 597.

IMPLIED WAIVER.

An implied waiver, of a forfeiture for instance, is where one party has pursued such a course of conduct, with reference to the other party who has incurred the forfeiture, as to evidence an intention to waive the same, or where the conduct pursued is inconsistent with any other honest intention than an intention to waive the forfeiture, and the one who has incurred the forfeiture has been induced by such conduct to act upon the belief that there has been a waiver, and has incurred trouble and expense thereby. Astrich v. German-American Ins. Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 13, 20.

IMPOSSIBILITY.

See "Physical Impossibility."

IMPRESSION.

The word "impression" is equivalent to the word "mistake" in an instruction, in an action for reformation of a deed for mutual mistake, stating that plaintiffs were entitled to a verdict if the parties were at the time of the execution of the deed under the "impression" that the deed described other property. Metcalf v. Lowenstein (Tex.) 81 S. W. 362, 364.

IMPRISONMENT.

See "False Imprisonment."

IMPROVEMENT.

See "Local Improvement."

The word "improvements," in an agreement for the sale of mining claims which stipulated that if the purchaser failed to perform his agreement the improvements should become the property of the seller as rent for the occupation of the premises by the purchaser and as damages sustained by reason of a breach of the contract, includes removable betterments placed on the land by the purchaser, and which he might, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, take away. Smith v. Detroit & D. Gold Min. Co. (S. D.) 97 N. W. 17, 19.

The word "improvements" in Gen. St. 1894, § 5853, declaring that the word "improvements," as used in the act relating to actions concerning improvements on realty, shall be construed to include all kinds of buildings, fences, ditching, drains, grubbing, clearing, breaking, and all other necessary or useful labor or permanent value to the land, does not include ordinary repairs, but all improvements which are of permanent value to the land are within its scope. The test is whether the alleged improvements are of permanent value to the land. Northern Inv. Co. v. Bargquist (Minn.) 100 N. W. 636, 638.

The phrase "improvement or improvements" in San Francisco Charter, art. 16, § 29, requiring that when the supervisors shall determine that the public interest requires the construction of any permanent improvement or improvements, etc., includes the construction of sewers. Law v. City and County of San Francisco (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1014, 1017.

IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE.

The doctrine of "imputed knowledge" as to actual existing conditions necessarily rests upon the duty of the master to furnish his employé with a safe place in which to work, and is inapplicable where there is no such duty. It is ordinarily the duty of the master, as the court instructed the jury, to furnish his employé a suitable and safe place in which to work, and suitable appliances wherewith to perform the work; and, where such duty exists, the master is held to the exercise of care in making the place and appliances safe, and cannot be heard to say that he did not know of defects and dangers that he might have ascertained by the exercise of reasonable care. Roche v. Llewellyn Ironworks Co., 74 Pac. 147, 149, 150, 140 Cal. 563.

IN.

The words "in one year," in a will directing that, on the death of one of the beneficiaries, the executors in one year therefrom shall divide the portion of the principal held in trust for him among his heirs equally, means within one year, and thereby the testator desired to express his intention that the time when the different remaindermen would come into actual possession and use of their estates should not be postponed beyond one year from the date of the death of a life tenant, and in no sense can they be taken to work any enlargement of the time of payment. Nichols v. Nichols, 86 N. Y. Supp. 719, 722, 42 Misc. Rep. 381.

IN ADDITION TO.

Rev. St. 1898, § 4490, provides that on escape from prison the guilty person shall be punished by imprisonment, not to exceed 10 years, in addition to his former sentence; and section 4494 declares that, in case of a prisoner breaking jail, he shall be punished by imprisonment for one year in addition to the unexpired term of the former sentence. The words in section 4490, "in addition to his former sentence," and in section 4494, "in addition to the unexpired term," were used to indicate that the punishment for the second offense is not deemed to abridge the execution of the judgment theretofore pronounced. The theory of the law is that where a judgment has once been rendered bearing solely on the person, as in the case of a sentence to confinement at hard labor for punishment of crime, it can only be satisfied by death of the party, his confinement at hard labor for the length of time mentioned in the sentence, less any good time earned according to law, by a reversal of the judgment, or by pardon. The sections do not preclude the recapture and confinement of a person escaping from custody to serve the unexpired term of his original sentence without judicial proceedings, the time of his voluntary absence not being counted in his favor. In re McCauley (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1031, 1032.

IN ANY PLACE.

See "Any."

IN BULK.

The term "in bulk" has long been understood in commercial circles as contradistinguished from "package" or "parcel," as where wheat, lard, and the like are sold in bulk. The common and approved usage of language, the technical meaning given by the business world, and the legal definition of the expression "in bulk" are opposed to the idea of a number of packages, parcels, or barrels containing merchandise being regarded as being in bulk. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1020, 1022.

Where a storekeeper, after selling at auction part of his stock of goods, sold at a private sale all but a few dollars worth of the balance, such sale was a "sale in bulk," defined by Laws 1901, p. 224, c. 109, § 4, to be a sale of a stock of goods out of the usual course of business. Fitz-Henry v. Munter, 74 Pac. 1003, 1004, 33 Wash. 629.

IN CUSTODY.

See "Custody."

IN DISGUISE.

The term "persons in disguise" does not include persons in ambush or concealed in bushes, where a person so concealed lies in wait to attack by surprise. Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118, 143.

IN REM.

A suit strictly in rem is where the property itself, conceived of as having done the wrong or as having been the instrument of its commission, is being proceeded against. In such a suit personal service within the jurisdiction, or appearance, is not necessary. The decree can, however, extend only to the property in controversy. Public citation to the world is all that is necessary, and the decree binds everybody. Hill v. Henry (N. J.) 57 Atl. 554, 555.

Proceedings to vacate streets are proceedings in rem. Detroit Real Estate Inv. Co. v. Frazer (Mich.) 100 N. W. 271.

A suit in partition is a proceeding in rem, and the jurisdiction of the court is confined to the property described in the complaint. Sandiford v. Town of Hempstead, 90 N. Y. Supp. 76, 79, 97 App. Div. 163.

A statute providing that a vessel may be sued and made defendant without any proceeding against the owners, or even mentioning their names, partakes of all the essential features of an admiralty proceeding in rem, in which exclusive jurisdiction is given to the District Courts of the United States. The exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts extends to the enforcement by proceedings in rem of a lien for repairs furnished to a vessel engaged in navigating the Erie Canal, though such vessel was employed wholly in commerce between ports in the same state. The Robert W. Parsons, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 14, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

Where testatrix's will devised lands to trustees "in trust for my grandchild, D.," such provision was not equivalent to vesting the title in the grandchild. In re Dixon's Estate, 77 Pac. 412, 143 Cal. 511.

INABILITY.

The term "inability," as used in a statute that, in case of the failure, inability, or refusal of the mayor to act, the president pro tem. shall perform the duties and receive the compensation of the mayor, embraces disqualification or disability on account of interest in the subject-matter of the action. Riggins v. Richards (Tex.) 77 S. W. 946, 948.

INCAPABLE.

See "Total Incapacity."

Gen. St. § 549, providing that the probate court shall appoint an administrator c. t. a. in the place of an executor who is "incapable" to accept the trust, does not empower the court to reject an executor named in the will on the ground that he is lacking in honesty, integrity, and business experience, the purpose of the section being only to authorize the appointment of an administrator when the person named as executor is disqualified by law. Appeal of Smith, 24 Atl. 273, 274, 61 Conn. 420, 16 L. R. A. 538.

INCEPTION.

The "inception of a cause" in a court, in a constitutional sense and in every other sense, is the first step or proceeding necessary to be taken in order that the subsequent proceedings may follow. The lodging of the papers in the criminal district court, no matter in what shape those papers may be, provided they are sufficient to seize the court of the subject-matter, is the inception of the case. State v. Bollero, 36 South. 754, 755, 112 La. 850.

A note made payable to the maker's order, and successively indorsed by him and by a firm for whose accommodation it was made, and by defendant, and after a few days was discounted for the firm by plaintiff, had no "inception" until it was discounted, because suit could not have been maintained on it prior to that time. Simpson v. Hefter, 87 N. Y. Supp. 243, 244, 42 Misc. Rep. 482.

INCEST.

An information that one had sexual intercourse with his daughter sufficiently states the crime of "incest," defined in Pen. Code, § 285, as the commission of fornication or adultery by persons within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriages are prohibited. People v. Stratton, 75 Pac. 166, 141 Cal. 604.

INCHOATE INSTRUMENT.

Instruments that the law requires to be registered are said to be "inchoate" prior to registration, in that they are then good only between the parties and their privies and persons having notice of them. Wilkins v. McCorkle (Tenn.) 80 S. W. 834, 837.

INCIDENT.

Under Pol. Code, § 2631, providing that by taking and accepting land for a highway the public acquire only the right of way and "the incidents necessary to enjoying and maintaining it," the county has no right to bore wells in the highway and use the subterranean water for sprinkling it. Wright v. Austin, 76 Pac. 1023, 143 Cal. 236, 65 L. R. A. 949.

INCLOSURE.

See "Substantial Inclosure."

INCLUDE.

The name "Independent Democratic Party" includes that of "Democratic Party," within Election Law, Laws 1896, p. 925, c. 909, § 57, providing that the name which shall be designated as the political name in a certificate of independent nomination shall not "include" the name of any organized political party. In re Carr, 88 N. Y. Supp. 107, 94 App. Div. 493.

INCOME.

A salary paid to a judgment debtor for his personal services is "income" out of which he may be required, under Act March 22, 1901, P. L. 1901, p. 373, § 3, to make payments on account of an unsatisfied judgment. White v. Koehler (N. J.) 57 Atl. 124.

INCOMPETENT.

See "Mentally Incompetent."

INCONSISTENT WITH.

The words "inconsistent with," as used in an instruction that, if a witness had been shown to have made before the grand jury statements which were inconsistent with and contradictory to the statements made on the trial, it would be for the jury to say whether or not his credibility had been destroyed, being used in connection with the words "contradictory to" by the conjunction "and," are evidently used in the sense of opposed to or "contradictory with," and were not intended to convey the idea that mere inconsistency would be a sufficient reason for rejecting the testimony. O'Dell v. State, 47 S. E. 577, 120 Ga. 152.

INCONVENIENCE.

See "Great Inconvenience."

An inconvenience which controls the construction of a statute must be an inconvenience of such a kind as to force the right to find a reasonable interpretation in lieu of one which is unreasonable. That a number of indictments against the same defendant, charging him with using the mails to defraud, are by order of the court tried together by the same jury, does not affect the right under Rev. St. U. S. § 819 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 629], to three peremptory challenges for each indictment, for such an inconvenience as will arise from such a construction of the statute is of such an inferior class that to attempt to determine whether Congress had it in mind is necessarily a matter of pure speculation. Betts v. United States (U. S.) 132 Fed. 228, 237.

INCORPOREAL THING.

Incorporeal things are such as are not manifest to the senses, and which are conceived only by the understanding, such as the rights of inheritance, servitudes, and obligations. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 97, 111 La. 982.

INCREASE.

The term "increase" is the synonym of "augment" or "aggravate." Mathew v. Washash R. Co. (Mo.) 78 S. W. 271, 272.

INCUMBRANCER.

An incumbrancer is one who has a legal claim against an estate. A judgment is an incumbrance, and the holder thereof is an incumbrancer. De Voe v. Rundle, 74 Pac. 836, 837, 33 Wash. 604.

INDECENT LIBERTIES.

An indictment for the crime of taking indecent liberties with or on the person of a female child under the age of consent is not defective because it does not state the particular acts which constitute the alleged indecent liberties. The term "indecent liberties," when used with reference to a woman, old or young, is self-defining; and it would be as unnecessary and as indecent to allege the defendant's particular acts as it would be, if he were charged with rape, or carnally knowing or abusing a female child under the age of consent, to set forth the evidence in the indictment. The term, when used with reference to a female child under the age of consent, is the legal equivalent of an assault or attempt on her person. State v. Kunz, 97 N. W. 131, 132, 90 Minn. 526 (citing State v. West, 89 Minn. 321, 40 N. W. 249).

INDEMNIFY.

To "indemnify" means, according to Cent. Dict., to "secure against loss, to save harmless, to make good, to reimburse." A sheriff accepted a bond to indemnify him against liability for damages sustained by a levy on personal property. The sheriff could not recover on a bond for attorney's fees, incurred in defending an action for conversion of the property levied on, until such fee had been actually paid by him. Cousins v. Paxton & Gallagher Co., 98 N. W. 277, 278, 122 Iowa, 465.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

A man who owned a team, wagons, and a plow, with which he worked by the day for different employers as he could obtain work, earning usually from $9 to $15 per week, and working alone when he could not find work for his team, was not an "independent contractor," but a "wage-earner," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4, cl. "b," 30 Stat. 547 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423], and was not subject to be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. In re Yoder (U. S.) 127 Fed. 894, 895.

INDIANS BY DESCENT.

The term "Indians by descent," as used in Indian treaties, includes full-blooded Indians as well as those of mixed blood. Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381, 435.

INDIRECT EVIDENCE.

Indirect evidence consists of inferences and presumptions. An inference is a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of the law to that effect, and a presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts. Lake County v. Nellon, 74 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 14.

INDIRECT PURCHASE.

Under the statute prohibiting an administrator from purchasing, directly or indirectly, the property of the estate, procuring another to purchase for him is an "indirect purchase," and is precisely what the statute prohibits. Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90, 95.

INDIVIDUAL.

The word "individual," as used in General Order in Bankruptcy No. 6, 89 Fed. v. 32 C. C. A. ix, prescribing the procedure in case two or more petitions shall be filed against the same individual in different districts, and in case of two or more cases against a partnership in different districts, is used in the sense and is descriptive of a single person incapable of division, and includes a corporation. In re United Button Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 378, 381.

INDORSE — INDORSEMENT — INDORSER.

See "Accommodation Indorser."

The words "indorse" and "indorser" have a popular as well as a technical meaning; hence from the circumstance that they, and they alone, were used in a conversation in which a person was asked and consented to put his name on the back of a note for the purpose of increasing its commercial value, it does not necessarily follow that the person signed as indorser merely, and not as surety. Redden v. Lambert, 36 South. 663, 669, 112 La. 740.

The use of the word "indorser" or "indorsement," in a conversation between the parties anterior to the signing of the instrument, is not decisive of the obligation of the party who signed across the back, for both words are used popularly to designate a maker who subscribes his name on the back of a note, as well as an indorser in the technical sense of the term. Oexner v. Loehr (Mo.) 80 S. W. 690, 691.

A third person signing a note on the face thereof, and placing the word "indorser" after his name, is not an indorser known to the law merchant, and is therefore not entitled to demand or protest or notice of non-payment. His liability is either that of a maker or guarantor. Herrick v. Edwards, 81 S. W. 466, 467, 106 Mo. App. 633.

An indictment is "indorsed" when the words "A true bill" are written on the indictment and signed by the foreman, and the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury are written thereon. Shivers v. Territory, 74 Pac. 899, 901, 13 Okl. 466.

INDUBITABLE PROOF.

"Indubitable proof," in a rule that the standard of proof in suits to reform written instruments is clear, precise, and indubitable, is evidence that is not only found to be credible, but of such weight and directness as to make out the facts alleged beyond a reasonable doubt. Highlands v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 58 Atl. 560, 562, 209 Pa. 286.

INFAMOUS PUNISHMENT.

"For more than a century imprisonment at hard labor in the state prison or penitentiary or other similar institution has been considered an infamous punishment in England and America." An order of a police magistrate directing that a person shall serve a term in the chain gang was a sentence to infamous punishment, where the members of the chain gang wore the typical striped clothing of the penitentiary convict, with iron manacles riveted on their legs which could only be removed by the use of the cold chisel, the irons on each leg connected by chains, and their progress to and from work was public, and from dawn to dark, with brief intermissions, they tolled on the public roads and before the public eye. Jamison v. Wimbish (U. S.) 130 Fed. 351, 355 (quoting Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89).

INFERENCE.

An inference is a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of the law to that effect. Lake County v. Neillon, 74 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 14.

"Inference is a deduction or conclusion from facts or propositions known to be true. When the facts themselves are directly attested, the jury may deduce or infer or presume from them the truth or falsity of the main proposition." An inference of fact can be found by a jury only from other facts proven. A jury, instead of basing their verdict upon a fact proved, based it upon a probability. A probability is not a proven fact, and hence the inference drawn from it cannot be properly based upon it. Seavey v. Laughlin, 57 Atl. 796, 797, 98 Me. 517 (quoting Gates v. Hughes, 44 Wis. 336).

INFERIOR COURT OF RECORD.

As Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 37, § 240, limits the jurisdiction of city courts to the cities in which the courts are established, such courts are "inferior courts of record" within chapter 53, § 5, providing that judges of inferior courts of record in towns and cities shall receive, in lieu of all other fees, perquisites, and benefits, in cities and towns having a population of more than 5,000 inhabitants, $1,500, to be paid out of the city treasury. Wolf v. Hope, 70 N. E. 1082, 1087, 210 Ill. 50.

INFLAMMABLE LIQUID.

Kerosene is not an "Inflammable liquid" within the meaning of a policy of insurance. Buchanan v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., 61 N. Y. 26, 29.

INFLUENCE.

See "Undue Influence."

The word "influence," in the term "undue influence," as affecting the validity of a will, does not refer to any and every line of conduct capable of disposing in one's favor a free and self-directing mind, but to a control acquired over another which virtually destroys his free agency. Caughey v. Bridenbaugh, 57 Atl. 821, 823, 208 Pa. 414.

INFORMATION.

See "Denial of Knowledge or Information."

INHABITANT.

An "inhabitant" and "resident" mean the same thing. Pearson v. West (Tex.) 77 S. W. 944, 945.

In the law of process and attachment, "residence" and "habitation" are generally regarded as synonymous. A "resident" and an "inhabitant" mean the same thing. A person resident is defined to be "one dwelling or having his abode in any place"; an inhabitant, "one that resides in a place." Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College, 46 S. E. 253, 259, 54 W. Va. 32 (citing Drake on Attachment).

INHABITANT OF.

As used in a statute providing that the time during which a defendant in a criminal case is "not an inhabitant of or usually resident within" the state is not to be counted in his favor, the words "inhabitant of" and "usually resident within" are synonymous. In determining the construction of these words, the court said: "We are cited to various decisions upon statutes affecting taxation and the administration of estates, in which the words 'inhabitants' and 'residents' are differentiated from 'domicile' and from each other, but none of these cases present the two words in such context as they appear in the section under construction. It may be that 'inhabitant' is often a more comprehensive term than 'resident,' but, taken together as they appear in the clause under consideration, with the modifier 'usually' before the word 'resident,' it seems to us that the term 'usually resident,' following the word 'inhabitant' in such close, immediate connection, was intended to illustrate the meaning of 'inhabitant,' and that, whatever different shades of distinction may be drawn when the words are used independently of each other in other statutes here they are synonymous. When to the noun 'resident' the adjective 'usual' is prefixed, in the sense of 'customary' or 'common,' the term becomes more clearly the synonym of 'inhabitant' as that word is defined by the courts." State v. Snyder, 82 S. W. 12, 22-24, 182 Mo. 462.

INHUMAN TREATMENT.

See "Cruel and Inhuman Treatment."

INJUNCTION.

Injunction is a conservatory writ, which it is within the sound legal discretion of the judge before whom a cause is pending to issue whenever it is necessary to prevent one of the parties, during the continuance of the suit, from doing some act injurious to the other party. State ex rel. Pelletier v. Somerville, 36 South. 864, 866, 112 La. 1091.

"Originally injunctions were preventive only, and it is only within recent years that a mandatory injunction has sprung into existence. Preventive injunctions necessarily operate upon an unperformed and unexecuted act, and prevent a threatened, but nonexistent, injury. A concrete case is presented whenever a right of the plaintiff is threatened by the defendant and the damage would be irreparable, and where protection of that right belongs to the class of cases that are cognizable in equity." Schubach v. McDonald (Mo.) 78 S. W. 1020, 1024, 1027, 65 L. R. A. 136.

INJURY.

See "Wanton Injury"; "Willful and Malicious Injury."

INJURY TO THE PERSON.

See, also, "Personal Injury."

The phrase "injury to the person," as used in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 260, § 10, providing that no person who shall be committed on execution in any action for malicious injury to the person, health, or reputation of another shall be deemed within the meaning of section 1 of the act, authorizing persons imprisoned for debt to apply to be admitted to take the poor debtor's oath, includes an action for alienation of the affection of a wife, the gist of the action being depriving him of companionship and a wounding of his feelings. Taylor v. Bliss (R. I.) 57 Atl. 939, 940.

INLAND WATERS.

The phrase "inland waters," as used in a policy of marine insurance on a houseboat, expressly limiting the risk to loss or disaster occurring while the boat is within inland waters, does not include the waters of the Atlantic Ocean off Coney Island. Fulton v. President, etc., of Insurance Co. of North America (U. S.) 127 Fed. 413, 414.

INQUIRE AND REPORT.

The words "inquire and report" have long been used in England and in this country as a formula for a reference to a master in chancery to obtain and report information to the court. Austin v. Ahearne, 61 N. Y. 6, 12.

INQUIRE INTO THE CIRCUMSTANCES.

The phrase "inquire into the circumstances," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2471a, providing that, if the demand of any public officer for the books and papers pertaining to the office is refused, he may make complaint to any justice of the Supreme Court of the district, or to the county judge, and declaring that at the time of the return of the order to show cause, or at any time to which the matter may be adjourned, on proof of the due service of the order, a justice or judge to whom the application is made shall proceed to inquire into the circumstances, means that when an issue of fact is raised by the affidavit interposed in objection to the application it is the duty of the court to take evidence relative to that issue, and to decide it in one way or the other; for to "inquire into the circumstances" imports a judicial investigation of the question of fact. In re Gill, 88 N. Y. Supp. 466, 467, 95 App. Div. 174.

INSANE—INSANITY.

See "Temporary Insanity."

A person is insane when he or she is not possessed of mind and reason equal to a full and clear understanding of his or her act in making a contract. Barlow v. Strange, 48 S. E. 344, 345, 120 Ga. 1015 (citing Frizzell v. Reed, 77 Ga. 724).

In many statutes, of which that of Michigan and Wisconsin are instances, the term "insanity," considered in its technical sense, is separated from its equivalent as regards the ability of the sufferer to care for himself or his property, leaving no ground to claim that mental unsoundness—meaning insanity, strictly so called—is essential to the appointment of a guardian. In re Streiff, 97 N. W. 189, 191, 119 Wis. 563, 100 Am. St. Rep. 903.

"Insanity" may be either total or partial in its character. It may be either permanent or temporary in duration. Where insanity of a permanent character is once established by the evidence, it is presumed to continue until the contrary is proven satisfactorily; but if the insanity be of a temporary character no such presumption arises. To exempt a person from responsibility for crime the insanity must be of such a character as either to deprive him of the capacity to distinguish between right and wrong in respect to the particular act committed, or to deprive him of sufficient will power to choose whether he would do the act or refrain from it. So long as a person has capacity to distinguish between right and wrong in the particular act, and has will power to do it or not to do it, he will be held criminally responsible, even though the mind is subject to hallucinations, melancholy, exhilaration, or is otherwise affected from the use of cocaine, intoxicants, or any other cause. State v. Jack (Del.) 58 Atl. 833, 834.

INSANE DELUSION.

"An insane delusion does not mean a mistaken conclusion from a given state of facts, nor a mistaken belief as to the existence of facts. An erroneous conclusion of a sane person may arise from incorrect reasoning, or from a deduction from information which he supposed to be correct." A misconception as to a particular matter is not an insane delusion when it does not spring up spontaneously from a disordered intellect. Bohler v. Hicks, 48 S. E. 306, 308, 120 Ga. 800.

INSOLVENCY—INSOLVENT.

The term "insolvency," as used in bankruptcy and insolvency laws, means the inability of a person to pay his debts as they mature in the ordinary course of business; but as used in a general sense, it means a substantial excess of a person's liabilities over the fair cash value of his property. Grunsfeld Bros. v. Brownell (N. M.) 76 Pac. 310, 311.

The bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 15 (30 Stat. 545 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3419]), declares that a person shall be deemed insolvent whenever the aggregate of his property shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts. The fact alone that the indebtedness of a retail merchant to a wholesale house is past due when a payment is made thereon does not give the creditor reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be insolvent. In re Goodhile (U. S.) 130 Fed. 471, 473.

A person is deemed to be "insolvent," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, when the aggregate of his present property "shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts." John S. Brittain Dry Goods Co. v. Bertenshaw (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1027.

An insolvent, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, 30 Stat. 545 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3421], is one the aggregate of whose property, etc., shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts. Cullinane v. State Bank of Waverly, 98 N. W. 887, 888, 123 Iowa, 340.

The general understanding is that an insolvent debtor is one whose property is insufficient to pay all his debts, or out of which his debts may be collected. Kingsley v. City of Merrill (Wis.) 99 N. W. 1044, 1047.

Where the record shows that a building and loan association was insolvent and in the hands of a receiver, a debt due to it must be treated as that due an "insolvent concern," on a question as to whether the debt of the corporation should be treated as that of a going concern or of an insolvent one. Carman v. Carrico (Ky.) 80 S. W. 216, 218.

INSTALLMENT PREMIUM PLAN.

The method employed by a building association in taking the premium and determining the amount is called the "installment premium plan," where the borrower agrees to pay periodically a sum or percentage in addition to the interest and the dues on his stock. Fidelity Sav. Ass'n v. Bank of Commerce (Wyo.) 75 Pac. 448, 450.

INSTITUTION.

See "Charitable Institution"; "State Institution."

INSTITUTION IN THE STATE.

The words "institutions in this state," as used in Rev. St. § 2731-1, imposing a collateral inheritance tax, but declaring that the provisions of the act shall not apply to property transmitted to "institutions in this state for purposes of purely public charity or other exclusively public purposes," do not include boards and societies, and auxiliaries thereto, which are incorporated and organized under the laws of other states for purposes of purely public charity or other exclusively public purposes. Humphreys v. State, 70 N. E. 957, 959, 70 Ohio St. 67, 65 L. R. A. 776.

INSTITUTION OF EDUCATION.

A gymnastic association where regular gymnastic exercises are taught and a teacher in physical culture is constantly employed is an "institution of education" within Const. § 170, exempting such institutions from taxation. German Gymnastic Ass'n of Louisville v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 80 S. W. 201, 65 L. R. A. 120.

A pharmacy college whose charter provided that, should the corporation be dissolved, its funds and property, after payment of debts, should be paid into the state treasury for the benefit of the common school fund, which is without stockholders, and whose entire income, which is derived from nominal membership fees, an initiation fee, small tuition fees, and the rental of a portion of its building, is applied to the purposes of the institution, is an "institution of education" within a constitutional provision exempting from taxation institutions of education not used for gain. Louisville College of Pharmacy v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 82 S. W. 610, 611.

INSTRUMENT.

See "Inchoate Instrument"; "Negotiable Instrument"; "Perfect Instrument."

INSUFFICIENT.

In a statute providing that when sureties are or become insufficient new bond may be required, "insufficient" is a comprehensive term, embracing every cause or ground the court may regard as amounting to that. It includes removal of surety from the state. State v. Hull, 53 Miss. 626, 644.

An objection that the certificate of protest related to matter between other parties than those to the suit on the note, and was therefore incompetent, is not within the contention that the certificate was insufficient; and, where defendant objected to the admission in evidence of the protest of a note on the specific objection that it was not competent, he could not on appeal raise the question that the protest could only be proved by a certified copy of the record kept by notaries. Elwen v. Wilbor, 70 N. E. 575, 579, 208 Ill. 492.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

An insurable interest is such an interest in property arising from the relations of the party obtaining the insurance, either as creditor or surety for the assured, or from the ties of blood or marriage to him, as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefit from the continuance of his life. It is not necessary that the expectation of advantage or benefit should be always capable of pecuniary estimation, for a parent has an insurable interest in the life of his child, and a child in the life of his parent, a husband in the life of his wife, and a wife in the life of her husband. The natural affection in cases of this kind is considered as more powerful—as operating more efficaciously—to protect the life of the insured than any other consideration. But in all cases there must be a reasonable ground, founded upon the relations of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured, otherwise the contract is a mere wager by which the party taking the policy is directly interested in the early death of the assured. Brett v. Warnick, 75 Pac. 1061, 1064, 44 Or. 511 (citing Warner v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 28 L. Ed. 924).

"As to what relationship must exist between the parties to create in one of them an insurable interest in the life of the other is a question upon which the authorities are not so definite, but it seems to be settled that, when such interest is dependent alone upon consanguinity, the parties must be related as closely as the second degree, and such interest will only be presumed in favor of the husband, wife, father, mother, child, brother, or sister of the insured. Such interest, however, may exist in one not so related by blood or affinity to the insured, when the facts show that he has a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit or advantage from the continued life of the insured." Wilton v. New York Life Ins. Co. (Tex.) 78 S. W. 403, 404.

INTEGRITY.

The word "integrity," as used in Code, § 1369, providing that no person shall be entitled to serve as administrator who has been adjudged incompetent to execute the duties of a trust because of want of understanding or integrity, means soundness of moral principle and character, as shown by a person's dealing with others in the making and performance of contracts, in fidelity and honesty in the discharge of trusts. In short, it is used as a synonym for "probity," "honesty," and "uprightness" in business relations with others. In re Gordon's Estate, 75 Pac. 672, 674, 142 Cal. 125.

INTENT.

Intent, in its legal sense, is quite distinct from motive. It is defined as the purpose to use a particular means to effect a certain result. Motive is the reason which leads the mind to desire that result. Baker v. State (Wis.) 97 N. W. 566, 570.

If a man knows that the act he is about to commit will naturally or necessarily have the effect of injuring or defrauding another, and he voluntarily and intentionally does the act, he is chargeable, in law, with the intent to injure or defraud. It is not necessary that his object or purpose was primarily to injure or defraud. It may have been to benefit himself. United States v. Breese (U. S.) 131 Fed. 915, 922.

INTENT TO COMMIT GREAT BODILY INJURY.

See "Assault with Intent to Commit Great Bodily Injury."

INTENT TO COMMIT RAPE.

See "Assault with Intent to Commit Rape."

INTENT TO KILL.

See "Shooting with Intent to Kill."

"Intent to kill" means just what the ordinary signification of the words suggest, whether it be described by the words "actual intent," "design," or "premeditated design" makes no difference. When we leave entirely out of view those subtleties often indulged in, in discoursing on the meaning of "premeditated design," and giving words the meaning ordinarily attributed to them, the person who effects the death of another by design does so intentionally, and the design or intent is understood to necessarily precede the act by which the purpose is accomplished. In other words, the intent is understood to be premeditated or thought of, because without mental action the purpose could not be formed. So, when it is said that the slayer intentionally caused the death of his victim, it is at the same time said that he caused it by design or premeditated design. That the word "premeditated," as used in the statutes on the subject of felonious homicide, has no other significance than that the design must precede the homicidal act, is indicated from the evident purpose of the statute makers to give the same meaning to the term "premeditated design" where used inclusively in murder in the first degree, as to "design" where that word alone is used exclusively in murder in the third, and manslaughter in the first, second, and third, degrees. Cupps v. State (Wis.) 98 N. W. 546, 549.

INTENT TO MURDER.

See "Assault with Intent to Murder."

INTERCOURSE.

"Intercourse" means "a commingling; intimate connections or dealings between persons or nations, as in common affairs and civilities, in correspondence or trade; communication; commerce; especially interchange of thought and feeling; association; communion." Webster's Dict. In a prosecution for rape under Pen. Code, § 261, par. 1, a conviction cannot be had on proof alone that defendant had intercourse with the prosecutrix. People v. Howard, 76 Pac. 1116, 1117, 143 Cal. 316.

INTEREST.

See "Change of Interest"; "Community of Interest"; "Direct Interest"; "Insurable Interest"; "Money at Interest"; "Real Party in Interest"; "Pre-Emption Interest."

As used in a policy providing that it shall be void, if any change, other than by the death of insured, takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, etc., the word "interest" has the same meaning as in the phrase "right, title, and interest." It means a legal interest, a proprietary or insurable interest, not a mere sentimental interest. Stenzel v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 35 South. 271, 272, 110 La. 1019, 98 Am. St. Rep. 481.

"An interest in land is the legal concern of a person in the thing or property, or in the right to some of the benefits or uses from which the property is inseparable." A contingent remainderman has such a present and existing interest as is susceptible of release to the life tenant in possession. McDonald v. Bayard Sav. Bank, 98 N. W. 1025, 123 Iowa, 413.

Tax liens held by the state are not interests in and claims upon the land on which they are a lien, within the meaning of Laws 1903, c. 234, § 6, p. 341, relating to the registration of land titles. National Bond & Security Co. v. Daskam, 97 N. W. 458, 91 Minn. 81.

An agreement to pay counsel a sum equal to 33⅓ per cent. of the amount which may be allowed on a claim was not within Rev. St. U. S. § 3477 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2320], providing that all transfers and assignments made of any claim upon the United States, or any part or share thereof, or interest therein, whether absolute or conditional, shall be absolutely null and void unless made after the claim is allowed. Knut v. Nutt, 35 South. 686, 688, 83 Miss. 365.

INTERESTED.

An inquiry by the Post Office Department for the purpose of determining whether a corporation has been guilty of a fraudulent use of the mails, and whether a fraud order shall be issued against it, is a proceeding in which the United States is "interested" within Rev. St. U. S. § 1782 [U. S. Comp. St.

1901, p. 1212], prohibiting a United States senator from receiving compensation for services rendered by him to any person or any bureau of the United States in relation to a matter in which the United States is interested. United States v. Burton (U. S.) 181 Fed. 552, 557.

The mother of an illegitimate child is not a "party interested in the event" of an action brought by the child against the executor of his putative father on a contract whereby the father agreed to settle a sum of money on the child in consideration of support by the mother until a certain date, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, rendering such persons incompetent as witnesses to transactions with decedents in actions against executors or administrators. Rousseau v. Rouss, 86 N. Y. Supp. 497, 501, 91 App. Div. 230.

Under a statute entitling a husband, where there are no children, to one-half of the estate absolute, a husband is a "person interested" in the estate, within the meaning of another statute authorizing a "person interested" to file an affidavit preliminary to proceedings for the discovery of assets. Ex parte Gfeller, 77 S. W. 552, 556, 178 Mo. 248.

INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT.

See, also, "Final Judgment."

Interlocutory judgments are such as are given in the middle of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Any judgment leaving something to be done by the court before the rights of the parties are determined, and not putting an end to the action in which it is entered, is interlocutory. Leonard v. Sibley (Vt.) 56 Atl. 1015.

A judgment is interlocutory under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, defining a judgment as either interlocutory or final where it is entered against the defendant after demurrer to reply to a separate defense has been overruled, dismissing the separate defense, and providing that plaintiff recover a certain sum as costs and disbursements on the trial of the demurrer and issue of law. Maeder v. Wexler, 87 N. Y. Supp. 402, 403, 43 Misc. Rep. 19.

INTERNALLY.

An allegation of a petition that plaintiff was injured "internally" was sufficient to admit proof of injury to her womb or any of her internal organs. Houston Electric Co. v. McDade (Tex.) 79 S. W. 100.

INTERSTATE CHARACTER.

See "Business of an Interstate Character."

INTIMATE ACQUAINTANCE.

Where persons have known a testatrix for upwards of 20 years, and were on terms of social intimacy with her, and had seen and conversed with her immediately before and after the execution of the will, they were "intimate acquaintances" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, permitting the opinion of an intimate acquaintance respecting the mental sanity of a person. In re McKenna's Estate, 77 Pac. 461, 462, 143 Cal. 580.

INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

"Intoxicating liquor" is defined to be "any liquor intended for use as a beverage, or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such a proportion that it will produce intoxication when taken in such quantities as may be practically drunk as an intoxicant." In a prosecution for violating the local option law, a requested charge to acquit defendant if the beverage sold was not intoxicating liquor if drunk in reasonable quantities was incorrect, what is a reasonable quantity being left undefined, and the expression "reasonable quantities" not being equivalent to such quantities as may practically be drunk. Murry v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 568, 569 (quoting Decker v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 20, 44 S. W. 845).

It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that liquor which contains 3 per cent. or more of alcohol is "intoxicating." State v. Piche, 56 Atl. 1052, 1053, 98 Me. 348.

INTRALIMINAL

"Intraliminal," with reference to property rights conferred by a lode location, embraces all within its boundaries, down to the center of the earth. Jefferson Min. Co. v. Anchoria-Leland Min. & Mill. Co., 75 Pac. 1070, 1073, 64 L. R. A. 925.

INVESTIGATION.

Any investigation, see "Any."

INVITED ERROR.

A requested instruction cannot be regarded on appeal as having "invited error," where it appears that it was refused on the ground that it had already been given in the main charge. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bowen (Tex.) 81 S. W. 27, 28.

INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The crime of voluntary and involuntary manslaughter is defined by Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 1981, as whoever unlawfully kills any human being without malice, express or implied, either voluntarily upon a sudden heat, or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act is guilty of manslaughter. That a pistol, by the accidental discharge of which deceased was killed while defendant was playing with him, was carried by defendant in violation of law, does not make him guilty of involuntary manslaughter. Potter v. State, 70 N. E. 129, 130, 162 Ind. 213, 64 L. R. A. 942.

INVOLUNTARY TRUSTEE.

One who gains a thing by fraud is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an "involuntary trustee" of the thing gained for the benefit of a person who would otherwise have had it. Muller v. Palmer, 77 Pac. 954, 955, 957, 144 Cal. 305.

INVOLVE.

An action to collect delinquent real estate taxes does not involve title to real estate, so as to confer appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court, under Const. art. 6, § 12. The suit necessarily assumes that the title to the land is in the defendants. The purpose of the suit is not to divest title out of defendants, but to enforce the lien of the taxes on the land, and to sell the land to satisfy the judgment. The plaintiff does not claim any title to the land. He seeks only to charge it with a lien. The enforcement of the judgment by a sale under the execution may have the effect to pass the title to some one other than the defendants, but that does not make the case one which involves title to real estate, any more than any judgment in personam, enforced by execution, would involve title. State ex rel. Reed v. Elliott, 79 S. W. 696, 698, 180 Mo. 658.

Title to land is not "involved," so as to give the Court of Appeals appellate jurisdiction, where the judgment for the recovery of money recites that on plaintiff's motion the lien created by the levy on real estate under the attachment sued out in the action is waived. Rhodes v. Frankford Chair Co. (Ky.) 79 S. W. 768.

INVOLVING THE MERITS.

See "Merits."

IRREGULARITY.

The court, in Treasurers v. Bourdeaux's Representatives, 3 McCord, 142, says: "In Tidd's Practice, 434, it is said: 'An "irregularity" may be defined to be the want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding, and consists either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or in doing it in an unreasonable time or improper manner.'" State v. Norton, 48 S. E. 464, 465, 69 S. C. 454.

IS.

As used in a constitutional provision that where an old county is reduced for the purpose of forming a new one the seat of justice in the old county shall not be removed without the concurrence of two-thirds of both branches of the Legislature, and two-thirds of the qualified voters of the county, etc., but that the provision requiring a two-thirds majority shall not apply to certain counties, the word "is" is used in the sense of "shall" or "may be." Lindsay v. Allen (Tenn.) 82 S. W. 171, 173.

ISSUE.

The word "issue" is defined in the Century Dictionary as to send out, deliver for use, deliver authoritatively. A county warrant is not issued until it is actually delivered into the hands of the person authorized to receive it. American Bridge Co. v. Wheeler, 76 Pac. 534, 535, 35 Wash. 40.

A certificate is not "issued," within the meaning of a proviso in the constitution of a beneficial society to the effect that a member shall be liable for dues, etc., for the month in which his benefit certificate is "issued or dated by the supreme secretary," until it has been delivered to and accepted by the member. Logsdon v. Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Union of America, 76 Pac. 292, 34 Wash. 666.

The word "issued" in an application for insurance, reciting that the policy shall not take effect until it was signed by the secretary of the company and issued, was used as indicative of the completed signing and execution of the instrument, making it ready for delivery. Stringham v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 75 Pac. 822, 825, 44 Or. 447.

ISSUE (Noun).

See "Die Without Issue."

The use of the word "issue," in Code, § 1386, prescribing the rules of inheritance, does not limit the right of inheritance to the natural children only, as the word "issue" is there used in the same sense as the words "child" and "children." In re Winchester's Estate, 74 Pac. 10, 140 Cal. 468 (citing re Newman's Estate, 75 Cal. 219, 16 Pac. 887, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146).

The word "issue" in a will has been invariably held to mean the same prima facie as "heirs of the body." Graham v. Abbott, 57 Atl. 178, 179, 208 Pa. 68 (citing Wistar v. Scott, 105 Pa. 200, 51 Am. Rep. 197).

The phrase "their living issue" in a contract of life insurance, directing the payment of the amount of the policy at the death of the insured to his brothers and sisters or their living issue, according to the right of representation, means and refers to living lineal descendants of deceased brothers and sisters. Hemenway v. Draper, 97 N. W. 874, 91 Minn. 235.

ITEM.

An "item" means an article, an entry; anything which can form part of a detail; the particulars of an account. United States v. Young (U. S.) 128 Fed. 111, 114.

ITINERANCY.

Itinerancy, in the doctrines of the Methodist Church, means that no preacher having charge of a congregation shall remain at any one place longer than a brief period, ranging at different times from three months to three years. People v. Steele, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 397, 407.

ITS.

Where a railroad company was in possession of tracks and of the yard in which they were laid, and was engaged in switching cars on such tracks, the use of the possessive word "its," in an allegation that the company had or permitted a telegraph pole to be on the south side of its main switch track in its switch yard, does not necessarily indicate ownership in fee, as the possessive word "its" may as well designate a right by arrangement to use the track and switch yard as an absolute ownership thereof. Illinois Terminal R. Co. v. Thompson, 71 N. E. 328, 331, 210 Ill. 226.

J. P.

The letters "J. P.," following the name of a person affixed to the jurat of an affidavit, are sufficient to designate the official character of such person as a justice of the peace, and if the name is of one who is commissioned justice of the peace of the state it is immaterial that it does not appear from the face of the affidavit where the same was executed; until the contrary appears from the affidavit or otherwise the presumption would be that it was executed in the state and at such a place where such an officer would be authorized to administer such an oath. Abrams v. State (Ga.) 48 S. E. 965; Osburn v. State, Id.

JAIL.

A building used as a jail, and in which a prisoner is confined for a violation of law, is within the protection of a statute punishing jail deliveries, though it is not situated in an incorporated town, and is not the property of the county. Irvington v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 928, 929.

JAR.

Bottle-like containers of glass, used in chemical operations, and known as "Koch flasks," and certain so-called "Wolf flasks," shaped like bottles, but having two or three necks apiece, are "bottles or jars," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, 30 Stat. 156 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1633]. Elmer & Amend v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 439.

JEOPARDY.

The general rule is that the prisoner has been put in "jeopardy" when he has been put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information sufficient to sustain a conviction, and the jury has been impaneled and sworn to try the case, and the jury is discharged without sufficient cause, and without the defendant's consent; and such discharge of the jury, although improper, results in an acquittal of the defendant. Schrieber v. Clapp, 74 Pac. 316, 317, 13 Okl. 215.

Where defendants break into a house at night with intent to steal money, which they abstract from the householder's pocket, and on his awakening shoot him, the burglary and the shooting do not constitute a single transaction, out of which two offenses cannot be carved, so as to render a conviction of the shooting a bar to a prosecution for the burglary. Mann v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 80 S. W. 438, 439.

JEWEL—JEWELRY.

A watch and fob are embraced in the terms "jewels" and "ornaments," as used in Acts 1879, p. 185, c. 145, relating to the liability of the proprietor of a hotel for the keeping of any jewels and ornaments belonging to a guest. Mr. Webster defines the word "jewel" as an ornament of dress, usually made of a precious metal, having enamel or precious stones as a part of its design; but we are of the opinion that it was used by the Legislature in the common meaning attributed to it as an ornament, or useful article of value, and embraces a watch used for a timekeeper or chronometer, and in which precious stones may or may not form a part. The fob is evidently an article kept and worn both for use and ornament. Rains v. Maxwell House Co. (Tenn.) 79 S. W. 114, 117, 64 L. R. A. 470.

Women's silver hand bags or purses, used for holding money, articles of wearing apparel, etc., are not within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 434, 30 Stat. 192 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1676], for articles commonly known as "jewelry," but are dutiable as articles of silver, under paragraph 193 of said act, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, 30 Stat. 167 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1645]. Tiffany v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 398.

JOINT CAUSE OF ACTION.

Joint causes of action include causes of action against joint wrongdoers as well as causes of action against joint parties to a contract. Williamson v. Howell, 17 Ala. 830, 832.

JOINT TENANCY.

To create a "joint tenancy" there must exist unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. Where tenants in common of land made a deed directly to one of the tenants and a third person as joint tenants, it created a joint tenancy, so that the surveyor of the grantees took all the land. Colson v. Baker, 87 N. Y. Supp. 238, 239, 42 Misc. Rep. 407.

JOINTLY.

The word "jointly," in a finding that plaintiff, jointly with others, should have a perpetual right to use the waters of a ditch for irrigating purposes, means only that his right to such use is in no degree exclusive or superior to the rights of others interested therein, but that he, with the others interested, have the right together as a common right. Blankenship v. Whaley, 76 Pac. 235, 237, 142 Cal. 568.

JOINTURE.

See "Equitable Jointure."

JUDGE.

As public officer, see "Public Officer."

As used in an act relating to the taking of testimony in criminal cases which provides that when any witness is present who shall desire to have his or her evidence taken on any prosecution he shall apply to the judge of the court in which such prosecution is pending to have his or her testimony taken in writing, and thereupon the judge shall order said testimony to be taken in writing before him, etc., the word "judge" means the trial judge. State v. Jackson, 35 South. 593, 598, 111 La. 843.

The appeal to "the judge of the district court of the district," authorized by Act Sept. 18, 1888, c. 1015 (25 Stat. 479 [U. S. Comp.

St. 1901, p. 1317] § 13, where a Chinese person has been convicted before a United States commissioner of being unlawfully in the United States, is in effect an appeal to the district court, and not to the district judge as an individual; and the commissioner's transcript and other papers pertaining to the cause may therefore be filed in that court, and the final order of the judge be entered as the final order of the court. In re United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 629, 630, 194 U. S. 194, 48 L. Ed. 931.

The commission provided for by Acts 1893, p. 386, c. 231, § 13, providing that if a municipal corporation, after deciding to establish a municipal lighting plant, refuses to purchase a private plant operated by a corporation incorporated by the General Assembly, it may be compelled to do so, and a commission appointed by the superior court to adjudicate whether the plant should be purchased and what the price and conditions of sale should be, is not a court, nor its members judges, within the meaning of the Constitutional provision prescribing the mode by which judges are to be appointed. The functions of the commission are but quasi judicial. Norwich Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Norwich, 57 Atl. 746, 749, 76 Conn. 565 (citing State v. New Haven & N. Co., 43 Conn. 351; New Milford Water Co. v. Watson, 75 Conn. 237, 52 Atl. 947, 53 Atl. 57).

Justice of the Peace.

The word "judge," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 46, disqualifying a judge for certain reasons, includes a justice of the peace. Truesdell v. Winne, 90 N. Y. Supp. 155, 44 Misc. Rep. 451.

The word "judge," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1778, which provides that in an action against a corporation to recover for nonpayment of a note or other evidence of a debt due on demand at a particular time, unless defendant serves with a copy of his answer or demurrer an order of a judge directing that the issues be tried, plaintiff may take judgment as by a default after 20 days after service of the complaint, does not include a justice of the peace, since Laws 1892, c. 667, § 8, declares that the term "judge" includes every judicial officer authorized, alone or with others, to hold or preside over a court of record. Center v. Hoosick River Pulp Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 548, 549, 43 Misc. Rep. 247.

JUDGMENT.

See "Dormant Judgment"; "Estoppel by Judgment"; "Final Judgment"; "Interlocutory Judgment"; "Void Judgment."

Claim distinguished, see "Claim."

A judgment is the sentence of the law, pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction.

tion, as the result of proceedings instituted. It is a judicial act, and, to be valid, must be pronounced by the court at a time and place appointed by law, and in the form it requires. People v. Hebel (Colo.) 76 Pac. 550 (citing Cooper v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 3 Colo. 318).

An order of a recorder in the city of New Orleans, in a proceeding under an ordinance relating to juvenile vagrants for the commitment of such a person to the House of the Good Shepherd, is not a "judgment." State ex rel. Caillouet v. Marmouget, 35 South. 529, 533, 111 La. 225.

"An order of seizure and sale is not a 'judgment' for all purposes and in the full sense of the term, but it is a decree of a court in aid of the execution of an obligation which, by law, is given the effect of a judgment quoad the particular property to which it refers. It is a judgment in so far that an appeal will lie therefrom for the review of the question of the sufficiency of the evidence upon which it is based." Huber v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate, 35 South. 889, 893, 111 La. 747.

Rev. St. 1889, § 2882, defines a judgment to be the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action. A judgment is essentially different from an order dismissing an appeal from a decision of a county board disallowing a claim against the county, and such a dismissal is an order from which an appeal may be taken under section 3062. Ellis v. Barron County (Wis.) 98 N. W. 232, 233.

An order denying motions for findings and judgment on the ground that there has been a settlement of the controversy is an order striking the cause from the calendar, and is not a judgment, though such order recited the facts, and ordered and adjudged that the action was fully settled, as a judgment, as defined by Rev. St. 1898, § 2882, is the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action. Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Schowalter, 98 N. W. 940, 941, 120 Wis. 663.

An inquest of insanity held by two justices of the peace upon the alleged insanity of any person or inhabitant of their county, and their certificate that said person therein named is insane and a proper subject for treatment in the hospital for the insane, is not a judgment of a court or equivalent thereto, nor is such finding and certificate equivalent to a verdict of a jury or a finding of a court that such person is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own estate, its purpose being to establish the fact that such person is entitled to admission to a hospital for the insane for treatment. Leinss v. Weiss (Ind.) 71 N. E. 254, 255, 256.

Since the Code of Criminal Procedure requires judgment to be entered in criminal cases as a matter of course on the return of a verdict, the incompetency of a witness based on his conviction of crime cannot be established by producing only such a judgment. To show such incompetency the record of a conviction showing sentence must be produced. If that which is called the judgment in the criminal procedure of the state were, in its legal effect, the same as a judgment of conviction at common law, such judgment would be proper evidence of incompetency; but at common law the judgment was the final act of the court adjudging the guilt, and included that which is now treated separately as the sentence. It was pronounced after the court had heard what the accused could say in bar of it, and, when it had been rendered, the sanction of both the court and jury was given to the conviction. Under the statutory procedure the judgment adjudges accused to be guilty and fixes the punishment, and is merely the consequence of the verdict, and the court in rendering it finally determines nothing as to the sufficiency of the procedure and evidence to justify the conviction. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson (Tex.) 81 S. W. 4, 5.

The word "judgment," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67f, 30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450], providing that all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens obtained through legal proceedings against an insolvent within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against him shall be void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, refers only to the lien of the judgment, the judgment remaining an assignable claim against the estate. Davis v. Jewett Bros. & Jewett (S. D.) 97 N. W. 16.

A judgment of sale for whatever is due is not a judgment against the property for a definite or specific amount. The statute contemplates a judgment against the property, and an order for the sale of the same to satisfy the judgment, and the entry of a "judgment of sale" is rather an order for the enforcement of a judgment than a judgment itself. Gage v. People, 69 N. E. 80, 82, 205 Ill. 547.

JUDGMENT BOOK.

In a court it was the practice for the clerk, as each order for judgment was made, to promptly write out the judgment with a typewriter on separate sheets of paper of uniform size, to sign the judgment and affix the seal of the court, to number the sheets consecutively according to the chronological order in which the judgments were written out, and to place and securely keep these sheets in their proper order in a compact parcel in an inclosed box or case in the form of a book, labeled "judgment book," until there should be sufficient of them to make a bound volume, when they were permanently bound together, preserving the same order and same paging. The sheets as kept constituted a "judgment book," within Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, §§ 5479, 5487, 5488, which required the clerk of the district court to keep among the records of the court a judgment book in which the judgment in each case is to be entered by the clerk upon the order of the court or judge. Lynch v. Burt (U. S.) 132 Fed. 417, 426.

JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION.

A judgment by a justice, reciting that the cause coming on to be heard, plaintiff and defendant present, and the petition of the plaintiff being read by his attorney, defendant confesses judgment for the amount claimed, is a judgment by confession, and not by default. Wade v. Swope (Mo.) 81 S. W. 471, 472.

JUDGMENT ROLL.

A statement on a motion for new trial is no part of the "judgment roll," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1196, providing that the pleadings, a copy of the verdict or findings, all bills of exceptions, all orders, matters, and proceedings deemed excepted to without bill of exceptions, and a copy of any order made on demurrer, or relating to a change of parties, and a copy of the judgment, shall constitute the judgment roll. Powell v. May, 74 Pac. 80, 29 Mont. 71.

JUDICIAL ACT.

"The distinction between ministerial and judicial and other official acts seems to be that where the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment the act is ministerial, but where the act to be done involves the exercise of discretion or judgment in determining whether the duty exists it is not to be deemed merely ministerial." Burnam v. Terrell (Tex.) 78 S. W. 500, 501 (quoting Commissioner of General Land Office v. Smith, 5 Tex. 471, 479).

"To render the proceedings of special tribunals, commissioners, or municipal officers judicial in their nature, they must affect the rights of property of the citizens in a manner analogous to that in which they are affected in the proceedings of courts acting judicially. * * * Where proceedings are judicial, if no right of appeal is given certiorari will lie, but the fact that no right of appeal is given has no bearing on the question whether the proceedings are judicial in their nature." State ex rel. Grant v. Iverson (Minn.) 100 N. W. 91, 92 (quoting State ex rel. Hardy v. Clough, 64 Minn. 378, 67 N. W. 202).

Inspectors of an election, in determining what ballots shall be counted for or against any candidate or any question voted on, or what ballots shall be rejected, "act judicially." People ex rel. Haverly v. Hanes, 90 N. Y. Supp. 61, 62, 44 Misc. Rep. 475.

JUDICIAL CONTEMPT.

A judicial contempt is any willful disregard of the authority of the court, rightfully exercised. Powell v. The State, 48 Ala. 154, 156.

JUDICIAL DICTA.

"Made as argument or illustration, as pertinent to other cases as to the one on hand, and which may enlighten or convince, but which in no sense are a part of the judgment in the particular issue, not binding as a precedent, but entitled to receive the respect due to the opinion of the judge who utters them." Commonwealth v. Paine, 56 Atl. 317, 819, 207 Pa. 45.

JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

By "judicial discretion" is never intended the whim or caprice of the magistrate nor a course of judicial action inconsistent with itself in dealing with cases essentially alike. Hubbard v. Hubbard (Vt.) 58 Atl. 969, 970.

JUDICIAL OFFICER.

A justice of the peace, in disposing of any cause, civil or criminal, which has been properly brought before him, holds a court of record, and acts as a "judicial officer." McVeigh v. Ripley, 58 Atl. 701, 702, 77 Conn. 136.

JUDICIAL PROCESS.

The filing of a petition in bankruptcy is judicial process, and operates as an attachment or sequestration from that time of the property of the bankrupt for the equal benefit of all of his creditors, and as a restraint to its disposition by him. In re Smith & Shuck (U. S.) 132 Fed. 301, 303.

JURISDICTION.

See "Common-Law Jurisdiction"; "Concurrent Jurisdiction"; "Final Jurisdiction"; "Plea to the Jurisdiction."

To obtain jurisdiction of a cause three things are necessary. Black, in his work on Judgments (volume 1, § 242), said: "First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudged belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and, third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue." In St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Company v. State, 55 Ark. 200, 205, 17 S. W. 806, 807, the court said: "'Jurisdiction' is defined to be 'the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in the given case.'" In Babb v. Bruere, 23 Mo. App. 604, jurisdiction is defined to be "the power to hear and determine the particular cause." In Hope v. Blair, 105 Mo. 85, 16 S. W. 595, 24 Am. St. Rep. 366, it is said there are three essentials to jurisdiction: "First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one adjudged belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and, third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue"—thus approving and adopting the definition of "jurisdiction" given by Black. Nenzo v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 80 S. W. 24, 26, 105 Mo. App. 540.

"The power and authority constitutionally conferred upon a court or judge to pronounce the sentence of the law or to award the remedies provided by law upon a state of fact proven or admitted, referred to the tribunal for decision, and authorized by law to be the subject of investigation or action by that tribunal in favor of or against persons who present themselves or who are brought before the court in some manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient," constitutes jurisdiction. Ingram v. Fuson (Ky.) 82 S. W. 606, 607 (quoting Black, Judgm. § 215).

"Jurisdiction exists wherever there is a suit, the subject-matter of which is cognizable in a court of chancery, and parties are brought before the court whose rights in relation to such subject-matter the court may adjudicate, and the effect of such adjudication between the parties, until reversed or set aside, does not depend upon the fact that the power of the court may have been erroneously exercised in making it. If there be necessary parties wanting, whose absence may render the adjudication fruitless or ineffectual, because the rights of such parties cannot be determined, that may be good cause for arresting proceedings or dismissing the suit, but it does not deprive the court of the power to proceed." The want of necessary parties does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, but the decree will bind the parties to it until set aside in a direct proceeding. Tod v. Crisman, 99 N. W. 686, 689, 123 Iowa, 693.

The term "jurisdiction," as used in Const. art. 7, § 8, declaring that the circuit court shall have jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal, within the state, together with appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts, with power to use all writs necessary to carry into effect its orders, judgments, or decrees, is used in its broad general sense, that of judicial power. "A court may have jurisdiction of a particular subject-matter, but by settled judicial policy ought not to exercise it. Again, it may, by the settled law, established by its own practice, deemed to be as binding as the written law, have power in a constitutional sense to adjudicate disputed matters of a particular character, acting by recognized unbending principles of procedure, but not jurisdiction to adjudicate such matters in the particular way attempted." The constitutional jurisdiction of the circuit courts is substantially co-extensive with that of the English courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Chancery combined. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 99 N. W. 909, 939, 121 Wis. 127.

The word "jurisdiction," as used in Rev. St. 1887, § 4994, declaring that the writ of prohibition arrests the proceedings when they are without or in excess of the jurisdiction, means the right to hear and determine a matter, and carries with it the idea of exercising judicial or quasi judicial functions. Stein v. Morrison (Idaho) 75 Pac. 246, 256.

The words "jurisdiction," as used in the Virginia Act providing for the formation of Kentucky, and declaring that the use and navigation of the Ohio River, so far as the territory of the proposed state, or the territory which shall remain within the limits of Virginia, lies thereon, shall be free and common to the citizens of the United States, and the respective jurisdiction of Virginia, and of the proposed state, on the river as aforesaid, shall be concurrent only with the states which compose the opposite shores of the said river, is not confined to any one of the three agencies of jurisdiction, legislative, executive, or judicial. State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877.

Jurisdiction is jurisdiction in its popular sense of authority to apply the law to the acts of men. Jurisdiction is acquired by an Indiana court by service of process on the Ohio river on the Kentucky side of the low-water mark on the Indiana shore, in view of the condition contained in the Virginia Compact of 1789, § 11, declaring that the jurisdiction of the proposed state of Kentucky on the Ohio river should be concurrent only with the states which may possess the opposite shores of the river, which condition Congress assented to and adopted when it consented to the Virginia Compact by the act of February 4, 1791, admitting Kentucky to the Union. Wedding v. Meyler, 24 Sup. Ct. 322, 324, 192 U. S. 573, 48 L. Ed. 570.

JURY.

See "Trial by Jury."

JURY OF THE VICINAGE.

The term "jury of the vicinage" literally signifies of the neighborhood where a crime was committed. Commonwealth v. Jones (Ky.) 82 S. W. 643, 644.

JUST CAUSE.

"Just cause" means lawful ground. Hence, whether a man has "just cause" to desert his wife, or to refuse to support her, is a question of law to be determined by the court. State ex rel. Mioton v. Baker, 86 South. 703, 704, 112 La. 801.

JUSTICE EJECTMENT.

The proceeding commonly known as "justice ejectment," given by statute where one in possession of demised premises under a written or parol lease remains in possession, without right, after the termination of the lease by its own limitation, or after a breach of a stipulation contained therein, is available where the tenancy is created by contract, although it is created for life. Foss v. Stanton (Vt.) 57 Atl. 942.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

As judge, see "Judge."

As judicial officer, see "Judicial Officer."

The true conception indicated by the term "justice of the peace," as disclosed by our Constitution and statutes, is that of an officer having both judicial and political functions—judicial, in that he holds a court and decides matters of litigation arising between parties; political, in that he is a member of the quarterly county court, which is the governing agency or legislative body of the county—but that, in performing all of the duties pertaining to these two functions, he is, in the main, dependent upon his civil district, which creates him, which must be his home, which he cannot remove from without forfeiture of his office, and which he represents in the county legislature or county court. Grainger County v. State (Tenn.) 80 S. W. 750, 756.

JUSTIFY IT.

The words, "when the finances of the county will justify it," as used in Rev. St. c. 24, § 26, making it the duty of the county board of each county to provide a suitable courthouse, when necessary and the finances of the county will justify it, cannot be construed to mean that the county has no power to make a contract for the repair or construction of a courthouse unless it has cash in its treasury. The fifth paragraph of the section shows that "finances" include all debts and liabilities of every description, and the assets and other means of discharging the same. In passing upon the question, the county board takes into consideration everything in connection with the fiscal affairs of the county, and if, in good faith, without fraud, it determines that the finances justify the erection of the courthouse, the person with whom the contract is made to build the same is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the determination. The conclusion which the board comes to upon the subject is one which must control. Coles County v. Goehring, 70 N. E. 610, 617, 209 Ill. 142.

KEEP.

The word "keep," as used in an agreement where a master agreed with a servant to keep the latter's wages and pay better interest than a bank, does not indicate any trust relation, but indicates that the master is borrowing money. Tucker v. Linn (N. J.) 57 Atl. 1017, 1020.

The words "keep" and "maintain" are frequently used as synonymous, and a person may be convicted under an indictment for keeping and maintaining a gaming house, on proof that he was guilty of either keeping or maintaining. Bryan v. State, 47 S. E. 574, 120 Ga. 201.

KEEPING A GAMBLING HOUSE.

Gambling distinguished, see "Gambling."

KEPT FOR SALE.

Posts and poles cut by a foreign corporation, peeled and inspected where cut, and kept there to be gradually shipped away, either to a yard to await sale or directly to the consumer, as orders are received at the yard, are "kept for sale" at the place where cut, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 1040, providing that merchants' goods, wares, and commodities kept for sale shall be assessed in the district where located. Valentine-Clark Co. v. Shawano County (Wis.) 97 N. W. 915, 916.

Liquor in possession of a boarding house keeper is "kept for sale," where he keeps it to be disbursed under an agreement that boarders, who pay the regular price, should be entitled to have it to drink with their meals when called for. State v. Wenzel, 56 Atl. 918, 72 N. H. 396.

KNOWLEDGE.

See "Actual Knowledge"; "Best of the Knowledge and Belief"; "Denial of Knowledge or Information"; "Imputed Knowledge."

KNOWN VEIN.

A "known vein," within the limits of a placer, when that question is raised collaterally, is one known to exist at the time of application for patent for such placer, and to contain minerals in such quantity and quality as to justify expenditure for the purpose of extracting them. McConaghy v. Doyle (Colo.) 75 Pac. 419, 420.

LABOR.

See "By Her Own Labor"; "Separate Labor."

As property, see "Property."

LABORER.

A person under a contract of employment contemplating services mainly of work requiring mental skill or business capacity, and involving the exercise of his mental faculties, rather than work the doing of which properly would depend upon a mere physical power to perform ordinary manual labor, is not a laborer, whose wages are exempt from garnishment. Tabb v. Mallette, 47 S. E. 587, 588, 120 Ga. 97.

A Chinese person of a reputable character, who has resided in this country for 19 years, and who is the proprietor of two laundries, which he conducts, is not a laborer, in contemplation of the Chinese exclusion laws, if he labored himself; it being only incidentally. United States v. Kol Lee (U. S.) 132 Fed. 136, 137.

LABORER FOR WAGES.

The phrase "laborer for wages," in a statute giving a lien to such on agricultural products, means those who cultivate on shares and receive a portion of the crop in payment for their labor, as well as those who work for money. Betts v. Ratliff, 50 Miss. 561, 570.

LACHES.

"Laches" consists in an inexcusable delay in asserting a right. It involves negligence, and arises from a failure in duty. Without such failure there can be no laches. Allis v. Hall, 56 Atl. 637, 642, 76 Conn. 322.

The lapse of time which might induce the application of the doctrine of laches is not a determined period, and depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. One principle pervades all cases involving the defense of laches, and that is that not only must there be a seemingly necessary delay on the part of the plaintiff in bringing or prosecuting his action, but that, by reason of some change in the condition or relations of the property or parties occurring during the period of delay, it would be inequitable to permit the claim of plaintiff to be enforced. London & San Francisco Bank v. Dexter, Horton & Co. (U. S.) 128 Fed. 593, 601, 61 C. C. A. 515 (quoting Gallagher v. Cadwell, 145 U. S. 368, 12 Sup. Ct. 873, 36 L. Ed. 738; Halstead v. Grinnan, 152 U. S. 412, 14 Sup. Ct. 641, 38 L. Ed. 495; Wheeling Bridge & Terminal Co. v. Reynnann Brewing Co. [U. S.] 90 Fed. 189, 32 C. C. A. 571).

"Laches is not, like limitation, a mere matter of time, but rather a question of the inequity of granting the relief." Laches cannot be successfully invoked in aid of a publisher of an infringing article, when it does not appear that the owner of the copyrighted article had knowledge of the infringement, or that he had notice of any fact sufficient to put him on inquiry. Encyclopædia Britannica Co. v. American Newspaper Ass'n (U. S.) 130 Fed. 460, 467 (citing Gallagher v. Cadwell, 145 U. S. 368, 12 Sup. Ct. 873, 36 L. Ed. 738; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Dubuque Light & Traction Co. [U. S.] 89 Fed. 794).

LACK OF MUTUALITY.

See "Mutuality."

LAND.

See "Claim upon Land"; "Drainage of Land"; "Public Land."
Other lands, see "Other."

"Land," in its legal signification, has an indefinite extent upwards, so that by a conveyance of land all buildings, growing timber, and water erected and being thereupon shall likewise pass. Trustees of Town of Brookhaven v. Smith, 90 N. Y. Supp. 646, 650.

"The term 'land,' in statutes conferring power to condemn, is to be taken in the legal sense, and includes both the soil and buildings and other structures on it, and any and all interests therein." In assessment of damages in proceedings for condemnation of land, the appraisers should value the land taken with the buildings on it, and it will be presumed that the buildings were included in the award. Stauffer v. Cincinnati, R. & M. R. Co. (Ind.) 70 N. E. 543, 544 (quoting Lewis, Em. Dom. [2d Ed.] § 285, and citing Brocket v. Ohio & P. R. Co., 14 Pa. [2 Harris] 241, 53 Am. Dec. 534; State v. Reed, 38 N. H. 59; Mills, Em. Dom. §§ 49, 223).

The word "lands" is not coextensive with the words "tenements and hereditaments," and does not comprehend incorporeal hereditaments. In re Handley's Estate, 57 Atl. 755, 757, 208 Pa. 388 (citing 2 Jarm. Wills, 382).

Easement.

Under Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908, § 2, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, providing that the term "land" shall include, not only the land itself, but all buildings and other articles and structures and superstructures erected on or under the same, where a turnpike company did not own the fee in the land, but owned a continuing easement therein for the maintenance of the pike during the life of the company's franchise, such easement, together with the corporation's tangible property, consisting of bridges, culverts, ditches, prepared roadbeds, and structures on the soil, were taxable to it as land. In re President of Albany & B. Turnpike Road Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 1104, 1105, 94 App. Div. 509.

Mine.

The word "lands," as used in a statute governing descent and distribution, which provides that a surviving spouse shall be entitled to an estate for life in the lands of an intestate leaving issue, remainder to such issue, includes a mine open at the time of the vesting of the life estate, and such mine is, under the statute, inherited as lands by the life tenant. Lone Acre Oil Co. v. Swayne (Tex.) 78 S. W. 380, 383.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

The relation of "landlord and tenant" is that which subsists by virtue of a contract for the possession of lands at will, for a definite period, or for life. Foss v. Stanton (Vt.) 57 Atl. 942.

The reservation of rent in some form and allegiance to the title are distinguishing characteristics of a contract by which the relation of landlord and tenant exists. Andrews v. Erwin (Ky.) 78 S. W. 902, 903.

LARCENY.

Embezzlement distinguished, see "Embezzlement."

LAST PUBLICATION.

In Comp. Laws N. M. 1897, §§ 2956, 2967, relating to a publication of a notice, and requiring the last publication at least two weeks before the return day, by "last publication" the last act of making the notice public—the last insertion in a newspaper prescribed—was intended, not the last day of the period for which the publication was directed. Harrison v. Wallis, 90 N. Y. Supp. 44, 49, 44 Misc. Rep. 492.

LAST SESSION.

In a statute providing that supervisors might, at their last session before regular election, etc., "last session" means the last regular session appointed by law. It has no reference to special sessions called for some specific purpose. The "session" includes the entire sittings of the board, from the meeting on the first day till the final adjournment. Tuohy v. Chase, 30 Cal. 524, 527.

LATENT AMBIGUITY.

"A latent ambiguity in a will, which may be removed by extrinsic evidence, may arise (1) either when it names a person as the object of a gift, or a thing as subject to it, and there are two persons or things that answer such name or description; or (2) when the will contains a misdescription of the object or subject, as where there is no person or thing in existence, or, if in existence, the person is not the one intended, or the thing does not belong to the testator." Wheaton v. Pope, 97 N. W. 1046, 1048, 91 Minn. 299 (quoting Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 210, 6 Sup. Ct. 617, 29 L. Ed. 860).

LAW.

See "By-Law"; "Common Law"; "Decision Against Law"; "Error of Law"; "General Law"; "Special Law."

"An unconstitutional act is not a law. It confers no rights. It imposes no duties. It affords no protection. It creates no offense. It is in legal contemplation as inoperative as though it had never been passed." Wright v. Davis, 48 S. E. 170, 172, 120 Ga. 670 (quoting Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178).

The phrase, "which may by law be brought before him," used in a statute defining the offense of bribery, and making it a material element thereof that the offered bribe shall be on a question which may by law be brought before the person sought to be bribed in his official capacity, means a law in force at the time of the offered bribe. State v. Butler, 77 S. W. 560, 572, 178 Mo. 272.

LAW OF THE LAND.

"The phrase 'law of the land,' as used in the Bill of Rights, is not easy of definition. It does not mean any act that the Legislature may have passed, if such act does not give to one opportunity to be heard before being deprived of property, liberty, or reputation, or, having been deprived of either, does not afford a like opportunity of showing the extent of his injury and give an adequate remedy to recover therefor. Whatever the term may mean, it does mean due and orderly procedure of courts in the ascertainment of damages for injury, to the end that the injured one shall have remedy—that is, proper and adequate remedy—thus to be ascertained. To refuse hearing and remedy for an injury after its infliction is a small remove from infliction of penalty before and without hearing.” Osborn v. Leach, 47 S. E. 811, 814, 135 N. C. 623, 66 L. R. A. 648 (quoting Hanson v. Krehbiel [Kan.] 75 Pac. 1041, 64 L. R. A. 790).

To say that the law of the land or due process of law may mean the very act of the Legislature which deprives the citizen of his rights, privileges, or property leads to a simple absurdity. The Constitution would then mean that no person should be deprived of his property or rights, unless the Legislature shall pass a law to effect the wrong; and this would be throwing the restraint away. It follows that a law which by its own inherent force extinguishes rights of property, or compels their extinction without any legal proceedings whatever, comes directly in conflict with the Constitution. King v. Hatfield (U. S.) 130 Fed. 564, 579 (quoting Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. [3 Kern.] 378).

The clause, “law of the land,” in Const. art. 1, § 1, providing that no member of the state shall be disfranchised or deprived of any of his rights or privileges, unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers, means a general and public law, equally binding on every member of the community. Rosin v. Lidgerwood Mfg. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 49, 51, 89 App. Div. 245.

The expressions “due course of law” and “law of the land” do not mean any act that the Legislature may have passed, if such act does not give to one opportunity to be heard before being deprived of property, liberty, or reputation, or, having been deprived of either, does not afford a like opportunity of showing the extent of his injury and give an adequate remedy to recover therefor. Hanson v. Krehbiel (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1041, 1042, 64 L. R. A. 790.

LAW OF THE ROAD.

The custom of the road, and the law founded on it, to go to the right of the center of the road in order to safely pass, governs the case of vehicles passing on the same side of the roads and streets so wide that there is no necessity for them to turn to the right of the center line in order to pass safely. Wright v. Fleischman, 85 N. Y. Supp. 62, 41 Misc. Rep. 533.

LAWFUL.

See “Shall be Lawful.”

LAWFUL CURRENT MONEY.

Where a theft is charged, and the allegation is general that the money taken was lawful current money of the United States, the evidence must show that it was legal tender coin or legal tender currency of the United States, and the nickel is legal tender under the provisions of U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2349. Black v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 311.

LAWFUL ENTRY.

The expression that the “entry must be lawful” means, not that it must have been effected under a formal right capable of enforcement by legal proceedings, but that it must not be through any unlawful or wrongful act, upon which the mortgagee would be estopped to found a right. Stouffer v. Harlan (Kan.) 74 Pac. 610, 613, 64 L. R. A. 320.

LAWFUL HEIRS.

Devise to lawful heirs as devise to class, see “Class.”

The word “lawful,” qualifying the word “heirs,” is not sufficient per se to show an intention not to use the word “heirs” in its ordinary legal sense as a word of inheritance or of limitation. Wool v. Fleetwood (N. C.) 48 S. E. 785, 789.

The words “lawful heirs,” as used in a will whereby the testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his lawful heirs, without other or further designation as to who are intended as his beneficiaries, and directed that the same should be equally divided among his lawful heirs, share and share alike, described all the persons who, at the time of the death of the testator, answered the description of lawful heirs and were entitled to share in the residuary estate, regardless of the degree of their relationship to the testator, and resort must be had to the statute in order to determine who were the legal heirs of the testator. Mooney v. Purpus, 70 N. E. 894, 895, 70 Ohio St. 57.

LEASE.

A lease is a commutative contract. Werlein v. Janssen, 36 South. 216, 218, 112 La. 31.

The contract employed in the creation of the relation of landlord and tenant is called a “lease,” and with reference to this the parties are designated as “lessor” and “lessee.” Foss v. Stanton (Vt.) 57 Atl. 942.

A lease is “a species of contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements, either for life, or for a certain term of years, or during the pleasure of the parties.” A writing by which defendants gave plaintiff the right to enter on and take possession of a strip of their land, and construct thereon a tramway, and occupy it for a stated time, in consideration of a certain amount per year, is a lease. Asher v. Johnson (Ky.) 82 S. W. 300, 301 (quoting Bouvier).

An instrument reciting that it is agreed that a lease will be given on certain terms, and which was preceded by a letter in which different terms were proposed, and the parties subsequently agreed on still other terms, did not constitute a "lease," though it was accompanied by a payment of rent and the lessee took possession. Ver Steeg v. Becker-Moore Paint Co. (Mo.) 80 S. W. 346, 351.

Where a statute provides for the payment of a franchise tax by railroads, express companies, chair and dining car companies, etc., to the state, and also a local tax to the county, city, or taxing district, and another statute provides for the ascertainment of the franchise tax according to that proportion of the capital stock which the length of lines operated, owned, or leased in the state bears to the total mileage operated, owned, or leased, and the proportion of the tax to be paid in any locality is to be computed in the same way, a traffic arrangement by which one railroad obtains the right to use the tracks of another for a certain period of time at a certain rental, in order to obtain ingress to a terminal city, is a "lease," within the meaning of the statute and for the mileage operated under which the railroad is liable to pay a franchise tax. Jefferson County v. Board of Valuation and Assessment of Kentucky (Ky.) 78 S. W. 443, 445.

A paper cannot be considered as a "lease," where it is not signed by the lessee, does not identify the premises, or state when the term is to begin or upon what dates the rent is payable. Kuntz v. Mahrenholz, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1002, 1003.

An agreement to give a lease is not a "lease," unless followed up by occupation, which is evidence of lessee's agreement to hire. Goldberg v. Wood, 90 N. Y. Supp. 427, 428, 45 Misc. Rep. 327.

The word "lease," as used in Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1901, § 5524, providing that any telephone company authorized under the act shall have power to lease or attach to other telephone lines or exchanges by lease or purchase, does not include the power to sell all the property and franchises of a telephone company to another corporation, nor can the power to sell be necessarily implied from the grant of the expressed powers. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Evansville (U. S.) 127 Fed. 187, 193.

LEAVE.

See "Loss Through His Leaving."

Going away from a horse, beyond sight, hearing, and reasonably immediate reach, is "leaving" it, within a city ordinance declaring leaving any horse unhitched within a street a nuisance. Monroe v. Hartford St. Ry. Co., 56 Atl. 498, 500, 76 Conn. 201.

LEAVENED.

Edible wafers, raised in the making by the use of baking powder or bicarbonate of soda, are "leavened," although such agents do not produce fermentation. F. H. Leggett & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 817; Meyer & Lange v. Same, Id.

LEFT WITH.

A person being in charge of an office must be understood to have been in charge of the whole of it, and a paper placed before his eyes in a conspicuous place on the office desk therein is, in contemplation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1011, "left with a person having charge" of the office. People v. Ferris Irr. Dist., 76 Pac. 381, 142 Cal. 601.

LEGACY.

See "Demonstrative Legacy"; "General Legacy"; "Specific Legacy."
Bequest distinguished, see "Bequest."

A legacy implies a bounty, and not a payment. In re Dailey's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 538, 542, 43 Misc. Rep. 552.

Legacies are parcels of the distributable estate. Their amount may be expressed in precise figures, or they may be determinable upon an established basis of computation. Blakeslee v. Pardee, 56 Atl. 503, 505, 76 Conn. 203.

LEGAL AND SUFFICIENT FENCE.

The phrase "legal and sufficient fence," as used in Rev. St. 1883, c. 51, §§ 36, 37, requiring a railroad company to erect and maintain along the line of its road a legal and sufficient fence, means a fence sufficient to restrain and exclude any of the ordinary domestic animals from straying on that part of its track which passes through and is contiguous to the inclosure where such animals are pastured or kept; and a fence abutting a railroad, four feet in height and otherwise complying with the statute, and that will restrain horses, cows, and oxen, but will not restrain sheep, is not a legal and sufficient fence. Cotton v. Wiscasset, W. & F. R. Co., 57 Atl. 785, 786, 98 Me. 511.

LEGAL COUNTY ROAD.

In Sess. Laws 1893, p. 380, making a county liable for injuries from defects in a "legal county road," it is apparent that the Legislature only intended to provide a remedy for injuries received by a traveler on a county road or highway. Schroeder v. Multnomah County (Or.) 76 Pac. 772, 773.

LEGAL HEIRS.

My legal heirs, see "My."

LEGAL HOLIDAY.

The words "legal holidays," as used in Comp. Laws 1897, § 5395, requiring saloons to be closed on all "legal holidays," not only includes legal holidays existing at the time of the adoption of the section, but includes holidays subsequently created by the Legislature, such as Labor Day, made a holiday by the act of 1893. People v. Kriesel (Mich.) 98 N. W. 850, 851.

LEGAL INTEREST.

See "Direct Legal Interest."

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE.

The phrase "legal representatives," in its ordinary acceptation, means executors and administrators, though it may mean next of kin or descendants. Kelsay v. Eaton (Or.) 76 Pac. 770, 772.

The phrase "legal representatives" usually means executors or administrators, but it cannot, of course, mean executors and administrators only, in whatever instrument it may appear, and with reference to all the different subject-matters treated of in the multitude of varying instruments, and no matter what the plain purpose of the maker of the instrument using the phrase may be in using it. It may, in various circumstances, mean executors, administrators, heirs, legatees, assignees, and devisees, even while legatees or devisees are strangers; in short, it may mean any person or corporation taking the beneficial interest in property, real or personal. Allen v. Alliance Trust Co. (Miss.) 36 South. 285, 286.

Under a will giving legacies to relatives who shall be living or whose legal representatives shall be living at a certain time, the words "legal representatives" mean children or lineal descendants. Miller v. Metcalf, 58 Atl. 743, 745, 77 Conn. 176.

The words "legal representatives," as used in a contract for preferential rates between a railroad company and a shipper, which provided that the railroad agreed to transfer logs for such shipper and his assigns at a prescribed rate, and defined the word "assigns" as limited to the shipper's legal representatives in case of death, to his successors in the timber and lumber business in case of his retirement, and to any mill that he might build or purchase, does not include a legatee of the shipper's lumber business under his will. Sullivan v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 35 South. 694, 697, 138 Ala. 650.

On the death of a party to an action involving real estate, the heir of the deceased party must be brought in as successor, and hence a contention that the provisions of the Code of Public General Laws, providing that if a party to a suit in equity shall die before final decree, leaving heirs at law or representatives who should be made parties, it shall not be necessary to file an amended bill, do not contemplate that such proceedings should be revived by summoning in the heir, but that they mean, by using the term "legal representative," that the purchaser, and none other, in case of a sale of the land by the fraudulent vendee, should be brought in, is untenable. Sinclair v. Auxiliary Realty Co. (Md.) 57 Atl. 664, 668.

LEGAL RIGHT.

The order of deportation of a Chinese person, who has plainly violated the exclusion act, made by a court of the United States, pursuant to the acts of Congress, is not made in an ordinary justiciable case, and does not deal with "legal rights," as that expression is generally understood. It merely involves the unpretended claim to remain in this country of an individual who, against settled American policy and against the positive command of our statutes, has surreptitiously and fraudulently obtruded his unacceptable presence among our people. United States v. Fah Chung (U. S.) 132 Fed. 109, 110.

LEGATEE.

See "General Legatee"; "Residuary Legatee"; "Sole Legatee"; "Specific Legatee."

LEGISLATION.

See "Class Legislation."

LEGISLATIVE OFFICER.

Legislative officers are those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws. State v. Kelly, 77 S. W. 996, 997, 103 Mo. App. 711 (quoting Bouvier).

LEGISLATIVE POWERS.

See "Full Legislative Powers."

LEGITIMATE PURPOSE.

The term "legitimate purpose," as applied to the acts of a municipal corporation, means such a purpose as is authorized by the municipal charter. Vaughn v. Village of Green-castle, 78 S. W. 50, 51, 104 Mo. App. 206.

LESSEE.

As owner, see "Owner."

LET.

See "Agree to Let."

LET FOR HIRE.

As used in an ordinance providing for the payment of a license by owners of vehicles used or let for hire, the term "letting for hire" was intended to apply to cases where persons, the hirers, took temporary possession of the wagon and team. Swetman v. City of Covington (Ky.) 82 S. W. 386.

LETTER PATENT.

A license to keep a dramshop is not a "letter patent," which can be tested or vacated by quo warranto. Hargett v. Bell, 48 S. E. 749, 750, 134 N. C. 394.

LEVY.

All levies, see "All."

"The strict meaning of the word 'levy' is usually a seizure of the defendant's property." By the word "levy," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67f, 30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450], making void all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens obtained through legal proceedings within four months prior to the bankruptcy of an insolvent defendant, seems to include any seizure of property in the bankrupt's possession and which he claims to own, and seems to cover a seizure on a writ of replevin in a suit to recover property sold and delivered on credit under a contract which the plaintiff claims a right to rescind for fraud. In re Weinger, Bergman & Co. (U. S.) 126 Fed. 875, 877.

The word "levy," as used in constitutional and statutory provisions that the county commissioners shall levy a tax in their respective counties for the support of public schools, and that county boards shall levy an annual tax on all the property in their respective counties, to be collected at the same time and by the same officers as other taxes, excludes from the act of levying any signification of creation. The duty to levy imposed on the board is therefore purely ministerial, and only imports that it should take such action as would result in the tax being placed on the auditor's books. The boards have no power to do anything more or less than require that the tax be entered. Dickson v. Burckmyer, 46 S. E. 343, 346, 67 S. C. 526.

In our revenue laws the word "levy" is sometimes used in the sense of "raising" or "imposing," and not in the sense of "collecting" a tax by execution. In different places in these laws the boards of county commissioners are authorized to "levy," or lay, taxes, while the word "collect" is used to define the power of the county treasurers to gather in or receive money for taxes theretofore assessed by county assessors and levied by the boards. Parsons v. People (Colo.) 76 Pac. 666, 669.

LEWDNESS.

"Lewdness is lustfulness and lascivious behavior; a synonym of unchastity, sensuality, and debauchery." On a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, instructions that a house resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness was a house visited by persons of both sexes for the purpose of having sexual intercourse, or some other lewd purpose, and that lewdness was the unlawful indulgence of the animal desires, were correct. State v. Wilson (Iowa) 99 N. W. 1060, 1061.

LIABLE.

The words "probable," "likely," and "liable" are synonymous when applied to the effects of a personal injury, each dealing with reasonable probability, not with possibility, and what may probably, or is likely or liable to, be the future result of a personal injury, is competent evidence to prove what is reasonably certain in the matter. Hallum v. Village of Omro (Wis.) 99 N. W. 1051, 1054.

LIBELOUS PER SE.

A written or printed statement or article published of or concerning another, which is false, and tends to injure his reputation and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, scorn, obloquy, or shame, is "libelous per se." Woolworth v. Star Co., 90 N. Y. Supp. 147, 148, 97 App. Div. 525 (citing Triggs v. Sun Printing & Publishing Co., 179 N. Y. 144, 153, 71 N. E. 739, 742, 66 L. R. A. 612).

An article designed and calculated to exhibit plaintiff as a shallow, ridiculous, and contemptible person, dishonest and undeserving of confidence, is libelous per se. Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 867, 869.

LIBERTY.

The terms "life," "liberty," and "property" are representative terms, and intended to cover every right to which a member of the body politic is entitled under the law. These terms include the right of self-defense, freedom of speech, religious and political freedom, exemption from arbitrary arrests, and the right freely to buy and sell as others may. Indeed, they may embrace all our liberties, personal, civil, and political, including the rights to labor, to contract, to terminate contracts, and to acquire property. None of these liberties and rights can be taken away, except by due process of law. Coffeyville Vitrifed Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry (Kan.) 76 Pac. 848, 850, 66 L. R. A. 185 (citing Gillespie v. People, 188 Ill. 176, 58 N. E. 1007, 52 L. R. A. 283, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176).

The word "liberty," as used in Const. art. 2, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property except by due process of law, means not only the right to freedom from actual servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or vocation. State ex rel. Galle v. City of New Orleans (La.) 36 South. 999, 1001 (citing In re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636).

LIBERTY OF CONTRACT.

Liberty of contract does not imply liberty in a corporation or individuals to defy the national will when legally expressed; nor does it involve a right to deprive the public of the advantages of free competition in trade and commerce. The enforcement of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200], declaring illegal every combination or conspiracy in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce, and forbidding attempts to monopolize such commerce, or any part of it, does not infringe on liberty of contract. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 462, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

The "liberty of the press," guaranteed by Const. art. 1, § 7, guaranteeing to every person the liberty to speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, but holding him responsible for the abuse of that right, has never been held to mean that the publisher of a newspaper shall be any less responsible than any other person would be for publishing otherwise the same libelous matter. The contrary rule has been affirmed by the courts of this country and England with great uniformity. Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 867, 873 (citing Jones v. Townsend, 21 Fla. 431, 58 Am. Rep. 676; Sheckell v. Jackson, 64 Mass. [10 Cush.] 25; Aldrich v. Press Printing Co., 9 Minn. 138 [Gil. 123], 83 Am. Dec. 84; Root v. King [N. Y.] 7 Cow. 628; Tilson v. Robbins, 68 Me. 295, 28 Am. Rep. 50; Smart v. Blanchard, 42 N. H. 137; Foster v. Scripps, 39 Mich. 376, 33 Am. Rep. 403; Barr v. Moore, 87 Pa. 385, 30 Am. Rep. 367; Eviston v. Cramer, 47 Wis. 659, 3 N. W. 392; Edwards v. San Jose Printing & Pub. Soc., 99 Cal. 431, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70; McAllister v. Detroit Free Press, 76 Mich. 338, 43 N. W. 431, 15 Am. St. Rep. 318; Upton v. Hume, 24 Or. 420, 83 Pac. 810, 21 L. R. A. 493, 41 Am. St. Rep. 863; Smith v. Tribune Co. [U. S.] 22 Fed. Cas. 689; Davis v. Sladden, 17 Or. 259, 21 Pac. 140; Barnes v. Campbell, 59 N. H. 128, 47 Am. Rep. 183; Davis v. Duncan, 7 El. & Bl. 231; Mallory v. Pioneer-Press Co., 34 Minn. 521, 26 N. W. 904; Delaware, etc., Ins. Co. v. Crosdale [Del.] 6 Houst. 181; Palmer v. Concord, 48 N. H. 216, 97 Am. Dec. 605).

LICENSE.

As office, see "Office."

Easement distinguished, see "Easement."

The popular understanding of the word "license" undoubtedly is a permission to do something which, without a license, would not be allowable. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1020, 1021.

The word "license," as used in an ordinance requiring every person and corporation erecting and using poles on the public streets of a city to pay as a license therefor a certain sum for each pole, means the sum paid for permission to erect or maintain poles in the streets and alleys of the city, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of regulating and controlling the use of the same under the police power of the city. City of Ft. Smith v. Hunt (Ark.) 82 S. W. 163, 165, 66 L. R. A. 238.

A license confers the right to do that which, without the license, would be unlawful. Board of Com'rs of Jefferson County v. Mayr, 74 Pac. 458, 31 Colo. 173 (citing People v. Ralms, 20 Colo. 489, 39 Pac. 341).

The word "licenses," as used in the Illinois act relating to the Chicago City Railways, and providing that any deeds of transfers of rights, privileges, or franchises between railway corporations, or any two of them, and all contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings made, entered into, or given, and as made or amended by and between the common council of the city and any one or more of the railway corporations respecting the location, use, or exclusion of railways in or upon the streets, or any of them, of the city, etc., refers to the designation by the council of the streets to be occupied by the companies. Govin v. City of Chicago (U. S.) 132 Fed. 848, 857.

LICENSEE.

A person is a mere licensee where he was not on the premises by invitation expressed or implied, nor for any business connected with defendant nor in relation to any business for which the freight house in which he was injured was used, but went there of his own volition, uninvited, concerning a matter which was personal to himself in which the defendant had no interest. Means v. Southern Cal. R. Co. (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1001, 1002.

LIEN.

See "Attorney's Lien"; "Builder's Lien"; "Common-Law Lien"; "Equitable Lien"; "Mechanic's Lien"; "Vendor's Lien."

A lien is a hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge. In the nature of things, no tax or assessment can exist, so as to become a lien or incumbrance upon real estate, until the amount thereof is ascertained and determined. Gillmor v. Dale, 75 Pac. 932, 934, 27 Utah, 372.

An attachment on mesne process under the statute creates a lien. This lien does not depend upon possession. It is created by process of law, sometimes by a record of the doings of an officer, as in the case of attachments of real estate and of personal property that cannot easily be removed. Undoubtedly an attachment by trustee process gives a lien on property which will be good against bankruptcy, if more than four months old. Snyder v. Smith, 69 N. E. 1089, 1090, 185 Mass. 58.

A personal claim against a bankrupt's estate does not constitute a lien. Eason v. Garrison & Kelly (Tex.) 82 S. W. 800, 801.

LIFE.

The terms "life," "liberty," and "property" are representative terms, and intended to cover every right to which a member of the body politic is entitled under the law. These terms include the right of self-defense, freedom of speech, religious and political freedom, exemption from arbitrary arrests, and the right freely to buy and sell as others may. Indeed, they may embrace all our liberties, personal, civil, and political, including the rights to labor, to contract, to terminate contracts, and to acquire property. None of these liberties and rights can be taken away, except by due process of law. Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry (Kan.) 76 Pac. 848, 850, 66 L. R. A. 185 (citing Gillespie v. People, 188 Ill. 176, 58 N. E. 1007, 52 L. R. A. 283, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176).

LIFE INSURANCE.

Life policy as chose in action, see "Chose in Action."

Life insurance is a promise to pay a certain sum upon the death of the insured. Ellison v. Straw, 97 N. W. 168, 170, 119 Wis. 502.

LIKE KIND.

The words "like kind," as used in Code, c. 151, § 1, providing that a person who shall 8 Wds. & P.—68 keep or exhibit a gaming table commonly called A. B. C. or E. O. table, or faro bank, or keno table, or "table of like kind," etc., shall be punished, etc., are used in a broad sense, and the act forbids certain kinds of gaming, among which are faro banks and keno tables, and all other games like them. So, on a trial for unlawfully keeping and exhibiting a slot machine, it is not error to instruct the jury that if they shall believe that the slot machine described is a gaming table, and that the machine is so constructed that it offers unequal chances to the player and exhibitor, and that the unequal chances are in favor of the exhibitor, then the slot machine is a gaming table of like kind and character to A. B. C. and E. O. tables, faro bank, and keno table. State v. Gaughan (W. Va.) 48 S. E. 210, 212.

LIKELY.

Liabie synonymous, see "Liabie."

While the term "likely" has in it to a certain extent an element of probability, it is not strong enough to make proper evidence facts which are likely to occur. In an action for injuries, a medical expert cannot be asked as to whether an injury such as the plaintiff received would be "likely" to produce the condition related to the witness. Higgins v. United Traction Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 76, 77, 96 App. Div. 69.

LIMIT.

The words "limit and control," as used in Acts 1902, p. 420, c. 300, entitled "An act to limit and control the expenditure of money upon public highways" by a designated county, are sufficiently broad to cover a provision in the body of the act prohibiting the county commissioners from levying taxes on the assessable property of the county for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and repairing any highway, bridge, or public road not in whole or in part within the county; and hence the act is not in conflict with Const. art. 3, § 29, providing that every law shall express but one subject, which shall be described in its title. Commissioners of Queen Anne's County v. Commissioners of Talbot Co. (Md.) 57 Atl. 1, 3.

LIMITATION.

The word "limitation," as used in a lease for a term of years, reciting that it is subject to the conditional limitations herein stated, and stipulating in the following paragraph that the occupation of the premises by the tenant and his family as a strictly private dwelling apartment is a specific consideration for the granting of the lease, means restriction. Schwoerer v. Connolly, 88 N. Y. Supp. 818, 819, 44 Misc. Rep. 222.

LIMITATION OF A REMAINDER.

A "limitation of a remainder," strictly so called, is a clause creating or transferring an estate or interest in lands or tenements which is limited, either directly or indirectly, to take effect in possession or in enjoyment, or in both, subject, only, to any term of years or contingent interest that may intervene immediately after the regular expiration of a particular estate or freehold previously created together with it by the same instrument out of the same subject of property. Biggerstaff v. Van Pelt, 69 N. E. 804, 806, 207 Ill. 611 (citing Smith, Ex. Int. § 159).

LINE.

See "Half Section Line."

LINE TREES.

"Line trees" are "trees standing directly on the boundary between lands of adjoining owners," and are "usually considered common property, which neither may destroy without the consent of the other." Harndon v. Stultz (Iowa) 100 N. W. 329, 330 (citing Musch v. Burkhardt, 83 Iowa, 301, 48 N. W. 1025, 12 L. R. A. 484, 32 Am. St. Rep. 305).

LINSEED OIL.

Laws 1897, p. 403, c. 217, provides that no person or corporation shall manufacture or sell any linseed oil, unless the same answers a chemical test for purity recognized in the United States Pharmacopoeia, and declares that the same shall be sold under its true name and in vessels bearing proper stamps, describing it as pure linseed oil raw or pure linseed oil boiled. Laws 1901, c. 332, amends the act, and provides that no person or corporation shall manufacture linseed oil, unless the same answers to a certain described test. The amendment makes no reference to raw or boiled oil. The words "linseed oil," as used in the amendment, includes both raw and boiled oil. State v. Williams (Minn.) 100 N. W. 641, 642.

LIQUID.

See "Inflammable Liquid."

LIQUOR.

See "Furnishing Liquor"; "Intoxicating Liquor."

LIS PENDENS.

Lis pendens denotes those principles and rules of law which define and limit the operation of the common-law maxim, "Pendente lite nihil innovetur." Pending the suit nothing should be changed, if it has the effect to bring the subject-matter of the litigation within the control of the court; and to render the parties powerless to place it beyond the power of the final judgment. Powell v. National Bank of Commerce in Denver (Colo.) 74 Pac. 536, 538 (citing 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] 594, 595; Freem. Judgm. § 193).

LOCAL ACTION.

By the common law an action for the recovery of damages for injuries to land is "local," and can be brought only where the land is situated; and such is the law in most of the states of the Union. In Minnesota, an action for pecuniary damages for trespass to real estate in another state is viewed, not as relating to the real estate, but only as affording a personal remedy. It is there deemed to be transitory in its nature, and not local. Peyton v. Desmond (U. S.) 129 Fed. 1, 4, 63 O. C. A. 651.

"The distinction between local and transitory actions is as old as actions themselves, and no one has ever supposed that laws which prescribe generally where one should be sued included such suits as were local in their character, either by statute or the common law, unless it was expressly so declared. Local actions are in the nature of suits in rem, and are to be prosecuted where the thing on which they are founded is situated." A suit to enjoin a defendant from diverting. In California, the waters naturally flowing down a river having its source in that state and flowing into and through the state of Nevada, where complainant's lands are situated, he being the lowest proprietor on the river, is an action transitory in its nature, so that a court in Nevada, having acquired jurisdiction of defendant's person, had jurisdiction to try the same. Miller & Lux v. Rickey (U. S.) 127 Fed. 573, 577 (citing Casey v. Adams, 102 U. S. 66, 26 L. Ed. 52).

LOCAL AGENT.

The term "local agent," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 1223, providing for service of writs in suits against foreign corporations on any local agent within the state, means an agent at a given place or within a definite district, and an "agent for the state" is not a local agent within the state. Western Cottage Piano & Organ Co. v. Anderson (Tex.) 79 S. W. 516, 517.

LOCAL CONCERN.

The formation of towns and cities, or the change of their boundaries, is not a "local concern," of which the county court has exclusive jurisdiction, under Const. 1874, art. 7, § 28, giving to such courts exclusive original jurisdiction in all matters relating to county taxes, roads, bridges, ferries, etc.

and in every other case that may be necessary to the internal improvement and local concerns of the county. The local concerns over which the county court is given exclusive jurisdiction are those which relate specially to county affairs, such as public roads, bridges, ferries, and other matters of the kind mentioned in the section. City of Little Rock v. Town of North Little Rock (Ark.) 79 S. W. 785, 788.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENT.

A "local improvement," within the meaning of the law, is an improvement which, by reason of its being confined to a locality, enhances the value of property situated within the particular district, as distinguished from benefits diffused by it throughout the municipality. City of Butte v. School Dist. No. 1, 74 Pac. 869, 870, 29 Mont. 336.

LOCAL OPTION ELECTION.

"Local option elections" mean recurring elections, and mean recurring elections for the territory specified in Const. 1876, art. 16, § 20, as amended in 1891, providing for the submission to voters of the question whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within prescribed limits. Ex parte Mills (Tex.) 79 S. W. 555, 556.

LOCATION.

See "Placer Location."

A location is not made by taking possession alone, but by working on the ground, recording, and doing whatever else is required for that purpose by the acts of Congress and the local laws and regulations. Wright v. Lyons (Or.) 77 Pac. 81, 82 (citing Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 284, 26 L. Ed. 735).

LODGER.

One who is in the possession of apartments by virtue of a formal lease in writing, by the terms of which the absolute right of use and occupation is given to the lessee for the purpose of a dwelling for himself and family, the lessor having no right to enter except for the purpose of making repairs or alterations, and in which the lessee is designated as "tenant" and the lessor as "landlord," is not a "lodger," within the intent of Laws 1899, p. 834, c. 380, giving a lien to a lodging house keeper on the baggage and other property brought upon the premises by a lodger. Shearman v. Iroquois Hotel & Apartment Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 365, 42 Misc. Rep. 217.

LOGS OF WOOD.

Sandalwood in pieces of varying sizes, several feet long and several inches thick, to which nothing has been done beyond removing the bark and sawing the wood into lengths convenient for transportation, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 198, 30 Stat. 167 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1646], as "wood, unmanufactured, not specially provided for," but is free of duty, under the provision in paragraph 699 of said act (section 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 202 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1689]), for "logs of wood." George Lueders & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 655.

LONE ENGINE.

A "lone engine" is a locomotive not hauling any cars, except its own tender. Kielbeck v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) 97 N. W. 750.

LONG ACCOUNT.

The services of an attorney, rendered in an action or actions under a single or different retainers, which merely involves charges in connection with the various steps in the litigation, cannot be said to constitute a long account. On the contrary, the charge in each action, although the service be permissible of exhaustive itemization, is essentially a single charge respecting each action, and exceptional circumstances must be made to appear in order to remove the case from the operation of such rule. Prentice v. Huff, 90 N. Y. Supp. 780, 782.

LOSE A HAND.

The term "lose a hand," in the constitution of a fraternal benefit association, is used in its ordinary and popular sense, and does not mean that there must be a total destruction of the hand, anatomically speaking, but that the loss of the use of it for the purposes to which a hand is adapted would be a loss of it. Slisson v. Supreme Court of Honor, 78 S. W. 297, 299, 104 Mo. App. 54.

LOSING.

See "Person Losing."

LOSS.

See "Direct Loss."

LOSS OF CONSORTIUM.

The "loss of consortium" is a deprivation of the full society, affection, and assistance to which a wife is entitled. Angell v. Reynolds, 58 Atl. 625, 626, 26 R. I. 160.

LOSS THROUGH HIS LEAVING.

An agreement by a third person to become bound in a specified sum, in case an employé left his master during a certain season and the master sustained loss through his leaving, did not render the third person liable for a defalcation by the employé; for the words "sustained loss through his leaving" must be read in connection with what immediately precedes, and, when so read, they refer to the direct pecuniary loss that may be suffered as the result of the employé's leaving the employment during the period of his employment. Freeman v. Waxman, 88 N. Y. Supp. 129, 130, 43 Misc. Rep. 656.

LOST PROPERTY.

"At common law a distinction was made between lost property and treasure trove. Lost property was such as was found on the surface of the earth, and with which the owner had involuntarily parted. The presumption arising from the place of finding was that the owner had intended to abandon his property, and that it had gone back to the original stock, and therefore belonged to the finder or first taker, until the owner appeared and showed that its losing was accidental, or without an intention to abandon the property. Treasure trove, on the other hand, was money or coin found hidden or secreted in the earth or other private place; the owner being unknown. It originally belonged to the finder, if the owner was not discovered, but Blackstone says it was afterwards adjudged expedient, for the purposes of state, and particularly for the coinage, that it should go to the king; and so the rule was promulgated that property found on the surface of the earth belonged to the finder until the owner appeared, but that found hidden in the earth belonged to the king. (1 Bl. Comm. *295.) In this country the law relating to treasure trove has generally been merged into the law of the finder of lost property, and it is said that the question as to whether the English law of treasure trove obtains in any state has never been decided in America." Danielson v. Roberts, 74 Pac. 913, 914, 44 Or. 108, 65 L. R. A. 526.

LOT.

A city charter defined the term "lot," as used in connection with the establishment of assessment districts for street improvements, to mean lots shown by recorded plats of additions or subdivisions, but, if there were no such recorded plat, or if the owner had disregarded the lots as platted, the whole plat should be treated as one lot. The allotment of portions of a tract in the survey of a partition suit, and the recording of such allotments with the commissioner's deed, did not constitute a division of the lots by recorded plat, as contemplated by the charter; the allotment not having been approved by the board of public improvements, nor recorded in the platbook in the recorder's office. Collier's Estate v. Western Paying & Supply Co., 79 S. W. 947, 953, 180 Mo. 362.

LOTTERY.

See, also, "By Chance."

A financial co-operative scheme, which contemplates the creation of a fund out of enrollment fees and monthly dues, to be returned to the members at the end of a fixed period of membership in the shape of "realizations," the amount of which will depend upon the growth in membership, the plan being certain to involve a loss to every one interested as soon as the number of members ceases to increase, because of the absence of any provision for a reserve fund, is a lottery, or scheme for the distribution of money by lot or chance, within the meaning of the provisions of Rev. St. § 3929 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2686], as amended by Act Sept. 19, 1890, c. 908, 26 Stat. 466 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2686], and of section 4041 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2749], and of Act March 2, 1895, c. 191, § 4, 28 Stat. 964 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2688], empowering the Postmaster General to deny the privileges of the mails and the money order and registered letter service to persons engaged in certain prohibited enterprises. Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 796, 194 U. S. 497, 48 L. Ed. 1092.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 323, 327, defining a lottery as a scheme for the distribution of property by chance among persons who have paid a valuable consideration for the chance, and making advertising a lottery a misdemeanor, a scheme for the distribution of money and cigars among purchasers of certain brands of cigars who will estimate most closely the number of cigars of all brands on which taxes would be collected by the government during a named month is a "lottery," though the distribution does not depend exclusively on chance, and the advertising of the same is a misdemeanor. People v. Lavin, 71 N. E. 753, 179 N. Y. 164, 66 L. R. A. 601.

There can be no "lottery," in the absence of the element of chance. A trading-stamp business, consisting of the selling of checks or stamps to merchants, who give the same to their customers on purchases of goods, the number of stamps given being determined by the amount of the purchase, and the stamps, on presentation at the trading stamp store, entitling the holders to select any article from the assortment of articles, each article being plainly marked with its value in stamps, such value not being greater than the market value of the articles, is not a "lottery," within a statute denouncing lotteries, etc. State v. Shugart, 35 South. 28, 29, 138 Ala. 86, 100 Am. St. Rep. 17.

"A lottery is commonly understood as a scheme for the distribution of prizes by lot or chance, especially a gaming scheme in which one or more tickets bearing particular numbers draw prizes, and the rest of the tickets are blank. A knife rack, consisting of an inclined table, with knives stuck therein, and so arranged that rings could be thrown on them, which rings are sold to customers, who endeavor to ring the knives on the table, they being entitled to any knives rung, or on which the rings caught, is not a lottery. McRea v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 741.

Where an investment company issues bonds, numbered consecutively in the order in which applications happen to be received by the secretary, and the time of payment of the bonds, and consequently their value, depend on the number they happen to receive, the scheme is a lottery. Siver v. Guarantee Inv. Co., 81 S. W. 1098, 1100, 183 Mo. 41.

"It has been said in some of the books and by several of the courts that, while the word 'lottery' is not a technical term of the law, and to dispose of property of any kind by lottery is not an offense which has a recognized and established legal definition, and that the meaning of the word must be determined with reference to a popular sense of the mischief intended to be redressed by the statute, yet, when thus construed, it indicates a scheme for the distribution of prizes and for the obtaining of money or goods by chance. The word 'lottery' has been variously defined as a game of hazard, in which small sums are ventured for the chance of obtaining a larger value, either in money or other articles; a distribution of prizes won by lot or chance; a kind of game or hazard, wherein several lots of goods or merchandise are deposited in prizes for the benefit of the fortunate; or a sort of gaming contract, by which, for valuable consideration, one may, by favor of the lot, obtain a prize superior to the amount or value of that which he risks. Tested by any one of these approved definitions, a lottery always involves the element of chance, fortune, or hazard. It is gaming, pure and simple." City of Winston v. Beeson, 47 S. E. 457, 459, 135 N. C. 271, 65 L. R. A. 167 (citing State v. Mumford, 73 Mo. 647, 39 Am. Rep. 532; State v. Clarke, 33 N. H. 329, 334, 66 Am. Dec. 723).

LOWERMOST PORTION.

The words "beginning from the lowermost portion thereof" should be construed as meaning from the lowermost portion of the bed of stream; not from the lowest depths of some hole or sudden depression therein, but from the lowermost part of the general contour of the channel. Krause v. Oregon Iron & Steel Co. (Or.) 77 Pac. 833, 835.

LUMBER.

Slabs are not included in the material designated as "lumber and timber" in the statute giving a lien on the lumber and timber for services in cutting logs. Engl v. Hardell (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1046, 1048.

LUNACY.

The words "lunacy" and "unsound mind" have been bent out of their technical sense in some instances, a legislative construction being given thereto in harmony with the broad views of courts that they include every phase of unsound mind rendering one incapable of caring for himself or his property. In re Streiff, 97 N. W. 189, 191, 119 Wis. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 903.

LYING IN WAIT.

"Lying in wait" means hiding in ambush or concealment. It does not necessarily refer to the attitude of the body, but rather to its location, and the purpose of taking the person attacked unawares. It is the mental poise of the wild beast in quest of prey, and necessarily implies malice, premeditation, deliberation, and the willful intent. If a person, armed with a club, was hiding in the darkness with the purpose of assaulting another when unaware of danger, he was, though standing, technically "lying in wait." State v. Tyler, 97 N. W. 983, 985, 122 Iowa, 125.

MACADAMIZE.

Pave distinguished, see "Pave."

MACHINE.

See "Dangerous Machinery."

The term "machine" includes every mechanical device, or combination of mechanical powers and devices, to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result. A steel hammer of 1,500 pounds, resting in the center of the floor, within four large upright posts, with attachments to a power for the purpose of hauling it to the top of the frame and letting it drop, is a machine, within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7087, relating to the duty of an employer, and requiring that all vats, pans, saws, and machinery of every description shall be properly guarded. Green v. American Car & Foundry Co. (Ind.) 71 N. E. 268, 270 (citing Corning v. Burden, 56 U. S. [15 How.] 252, 14 L. Ed. 683).

An emery belt, used in a factory to polish metal, is a "machine," within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 70871, requiring machinery of every description in factories to be properly guarded. La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender (Ind.) 71 N. E. 922, 924.

MADE ACQUAINTED.

A certificate of acknowledgment of a married woman that she was "made acquainted" with the contents of the deed is equivalent to a certificate that the contents were made known and explained to her. Chauvin v. Wagner, 18 Mo. 531, 544.

MAIN CHANNEL.

The "main channel" of the Mississippi river means the principal navigable and navigated channel, the one customarily followed in steamboat navigation. Franzini v. Layland (Wis.) 97 N. W. 499.

MAINS.

By the word "mains," in Laws 1890, c. 566, p. 1148, § 65, providing that any owner or occupant of any premises within 100 feet of any main laid down by any gas light corporation may require it to supply him with gas, were intended those pipes through which the company distributed the gas that was designed to be taken therefrom into the buildings to be lighted. Moore v. Champlain Electric Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 37, 39, 88 App. Div. 289.

MAINTAIN.

Keep synonymous, see "Keep."

The word "maintain" ordinarily means to preserve something which is already in existence; but, considering that, by the use of the words "unless one of them chooses to let his land lie without fencing," Civ. Code, § 1301, declaring that coterminous owners are mutually bound equally to maintain the boundaries and monuments between them and the fences between them, unless one of them chooses to let his land lie without fencing, applies to land not fenced, it is comprehensive enough, in the light of the subject-matter, to include the erection, as well as the maintenance, of the fences. Hoar v. Hennessy, 74 Pac. 452, 454, 455, 29 Mont. 253.

MAINTENANCE.

Maintenance is an officious intermeddling in a suit that in no way belongs to one by assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend. It is said to be an offense against good morals, in that it keeps alive strife and perverts the remedial powers of the law into an engine of oppression. Lacey v. Davis (Iowa) 98 N. W. 366, 367 (quoting 6 Cyc. 850).

MAJORITY.

See "Requisite Majority."

Where the language of an act is "a majority of the votes cast," or "a majority of all votes cast," it means a majority of the votes cast on the question submitted; and that, whether the votes are cast at a general or special election. Territory v. Board of Trustees, 76 Pac. 165, 167, 13 Okl. 605.

The phrase "majority vote of legal voters," in Sp. Act Feb. 26, 1903, providing that it shall take effect when approved by a majority vote of the legal voters within the district, means, according to Act March 18, 1903, a majority vote of the legal voters voting. Foy v. Gardiner Water Dist., 56 Atl. 201, 202, 98 Me. 82.

MALARIA.

Malaria is "a morbid condition produced by exhalations from decaying vegetable matter in contact with moisture, giving rise to fever and ague and many other symptoms characterized by their tendency to recur at definite and usually uniform intervals." City of St. Louis v. Galt, 77 S. W. 876, 879, 179 Mo. 8, 63 L. R. A. 778 (quoting Webster Dict.).

MALICE.

See "Express Malice"; "Implied Malice"; "Universal Malice."

Probable cause distinguished, see "Probable Cause."

Malice denotes a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause. Hathaway v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 400, 402.

Malice denotes a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. Connell v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 746, 747.

In order to justify the imputation of "malice," within the rule of punitive damages, the injury must have been conceived in a spirit of mischief and partake of a criminal or wanton nature. Baxter v. Campbell (S. D.) 97 N. W. 386, 387.

"Malice, in common acceptance, means ill will against a person; but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. If I give a perfect stranger a blow likely to produce death, I do it of malice, because I do it intentionally and without just cause or excuse. If I maim cattle without knowing whose they are, if I poison a fishery without knowing the owner, I do it of malice, because it is a wrongful act and done intentionally.

If I am arraigned of felony and willfully stand mute, I am said to do it of malice, because it is intentional and without just cause or excuse. If I traduce a man, whether I know him or not, and whether I intend to do him an injury or not, I apprehend the law considers it as done of malice, because it is wrongful and intentional. It equally works an injury, whether I meant to produce an injury or not." The law will imply that degree of malice in an act of criminal conversation which is sufficient to bring a judgment for damages therefor within the exception mentioned in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 2, 30 Stat. 550 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428], declaring that judgments for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another shall be exempted from a discharge in bankruptcy. Tinker v. Colwell, 24 Sup. Ct. 505, 508, 193 U. S. 473, 48 L. Ed. 754 (quoting Bromage v. Prosser, 4 Barn. & C. 247).

In criminal law.

Malice in common acceptation means ill will against a person, but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse. Bromage v. Prosser, 10 E. C. L. 321. In law "malice" is a term of art, importing wickedness, and excluding a just cause or excuse. State v. Doyg, 2 Rich. Law, 182. There can be no doubt that malice is presumed from an intentional killing, in the absence of facts or circumstances in evidence tending to show want of malice. State v. McDaniel, 47 S. E. 384, 387, 68 S. C. 304.

"Malice" is not restricted to spite or malevolence toward the deceased in particular, but in its legal sense it is understood to mean the general malignity and recklessness of the lives and personal safety of others, which proceed from a heart void of a just sense of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Malice is implied by law from every deliberate, cruel act committed by one person against another, no matter how sudden such act may be; for the law considers that he who does a cruel act voluntarily does it maliciously. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262.

In the statute declaring it murder in the first degree for any person to purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice kill another, "malice" is not confined to ill will toward an individual, but it is intended to denote an action flowing from any wicked and corrupt motive. A thing done with a wicked mind, and attended with such circumstances as plainly indicate a heart regardless of social duties and fully bent on mischief, indicates malice, within the meaning of the law. Malice may be either expressed or implied. Express malice may appear from all the evidence and circumstances of the alleged killing. Implied malice may appear where there is no just cause or excuse of the alleged killing. State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440.

In libel and slander.

Malice, as used in cases of slander and libel, does not necessary imply actual evil intent, but rather the want or absence of any legal excuse for the speaking or publication of the injurious words. Where slanderous words are actionable per se, malice is presumed. McDonald v. Nugent, 98 N. W. 506, 508, 122 Iowa, 631.

Where words are spoken which are slanderous per se, malice is presumed; but the malice which is thus presumed is known as legal malice, as distinguished from actual or express malice, or malice in fact. In an action for slander, the absence of actual malice will not defeat the action, and the party injured may recover his actual damages; but where actual malice is charged in a complaint, and more than compensatory damages are claimed for the injury, the actual motive or intent with which the publication was made becomes an important fact from which to determine the amount of damages to be awarded. Wrege v. Jones (N. D.) 100 N. W. 705, 707.

"The term 'malice,' as employed in the definition of libel per se, is often misunderstood by the general reader, and is sometimes misapprehended by lawyers. It does not necessarily mean personal hatred or ill will toward the person at whom the libel is directed. Legal malice in the publishing of a libel is not inconsistent with honesty of purpose and good motive. * * * In other words, malice is the want of legal excuse for an act done to the injury of another. Whoever gives currency to libelous matter (not protected as being privileged) must be prepared to prove its truth, if he would avoid liability to the party injured." Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 867, 871.

In malicious prosecution.

"Malice" need not indicate anger or vindictiveness, but it imports bad faith in a malicious prosecution, or the want of sincere belief that the facts and circumstances justify the prosecution. Griswold v. Griswold, 77 Pac. 672, 673, 143 Cal. 617.

The fact that an action was commenced and prosecuted without probable cause may be considered by the jury on the question of malice. Actual malicious purpose or personal ill will is not essential to constitute the legal malice which must be shown to support an action for malicious prosecution. The malice required to support the action may be inferred by the jury from the want of probable cause. Connelly v. White, 98 N. W. 144, 145, 122 Iowa, 391.

MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

As applied to murder, "malice aforethought" is a condition of the mind which shows a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief, the existence of which is inferred from acts done or words spoken. Connell v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 746, 747.

"Malice aforethought," either expressed or implied, is manifested by the doing of an unlawful and felonious act intentionally and without legal cause or excuse. It does not imply a pre-existing hatred or enmity toward the individual injured. People v. Balkwell, 76 Pac. 1017, 1019, 143 Cal. 259.

MALICIOUS.

"The legal meaning of the term 'malicious' is the unintentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse." McNamara v. St. Louis Transit Co., 81 S. W. 880, 881, 182 Mo. 676, 66 L. R. A. 486.

The word "malicious," as ordinarily employed in criminal statutes, is the equivalent of wrongful, intentional, and without just cause or excuse; but, as used in many statutes directed against the unlawful destruction of property, it is held to have a restricted meaning peculiar to such statutes, implying that the act to which it relates must have resulted from actual ill will or revenge. The special meaning noted had its origin in England in prosecutions under the "Black Act" (St. 9 Geo. I, c. 22), enacted in 1722, so called because it was designed to repress the depredations of marauders calling themselves "blacks." The act provided that, if any person or persons shall unlawfully and maliciously kill or wound any cattle, etc., such persons shall be adjudged guilty of felony. It was held that in prosecutions under this act for injuries to cattle, in order to bring an offender within the law, the malice must be directed against the owner of the cattle, and not merely against the animal itself. In the United States most statutes prescribing a penalty for the malicious destruction of property are sufficiently like those of England to warrant the inference that they were modeled on them, and for this reason they have generally, but not always, been given the same construction. But the effect of Crimes Act, § 112 (Gen. St. 1901, § 2105), providing that every punishment and forfeiture imposed on any person maliciously committing any offense prohibited by the provision of preceding sections shall equally apply and be in force, whether the offense shall be committed from malice conceived against the owner of property in respect to which it shall be committed or otherwise, is to take from the word "malicious" the specific meaning that had been attributed to it in laws against the destruction of property, and restore it to the usual sense in which it is used in criminal statutes. State v. Boles (Kan.) 74 Pac. 630.

MALICIOUS INJURY.

See "Willful and Malicious Injury."

MALICIOUSLY.

By the word "maliciously," as used in an indictment for slander by imputing to a woman a want of chastity, is meant that the words must have been so uttered as to imply by defendant an evil intent or legal malice, or without reasonable grounds for believing that the words uttered were true. Rainwater v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 38, 39.

MANAGEMENT.

Where a ship was at the commencement of a voyage in all respects seaworthy and properly manned and supplied, damage to a sugar cargo from fresh water which escaped into the hold where the sugar was stowed while the cargo was being discharged, by reason of a valve having been improperly left open while water from the river was being pumped into the engine tank, was due to a fault in the "management" of the vessel, for which she is exempt from liability by section 3 of the Harter act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 27 Stat. 445 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2946]), providing that, if the owner of any vessel transporting merchandise or property to or from any port in the United States shall exercise due diligence to make the vessel seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied, neither the vessel, her owner or owners, agent or charterers, shall be responsible for the damage resulting in the management of the vessel. The Wildcroft (U. S.) 130 Fed. 521, 527.

MANDAMUS.

As action, see "Action."

As suit of a civil nature, see "Suit of a Civil Nature."

"The writ of mandamus is an extraordinary remedy, to be applied only under exceptional conditions, and is not to be extended beyond its well-established limits. It lies to compel the performance of a public duty, or one imposed by public authority, and for the nonperformance of which there is no other specific or adequate remedy at law, but not for the enforcement of merely private obligations, such as those arising from contracts." Lahiff v. St. Joseph's Total Abstinence & Benevolent Society, 57 Atl. 692, 693, 76 Conn. 648, 65 L. R. A. 92, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1012 (citing Hartford v. Hartford St. R. Co., 74 Conn. 194, 50 Atl. 393; Bassett v. Atwater, 65 Conn. 355, 32 Atl. 937, 32 L. R. A. 575; Tobey v. Hakes, 54 Conn. 274, 7 Atl. 551, 1 Am. St. Rep. 114; Parrott v. City of Bridgeport, 44 Conn. 180, 26 Am. Rep. 439; American Asylum for Education and Instruction of Deaf and Dumb v. Phoenix Bank, 4 Conn. 172, 10 Am. Dec. 112).

Mandamus is one of the extraordinary remedies. The writ may issue in those cases only "to compel the performance of any act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station," but "it cannot control judicial discretion." Davis v. Jewett (Kan.) 77 Pac. 704, 705.

Mandamus may not be invoked to review a judicial or quasi judicial decision. The primary object of the writ of mandamus is to compel action. It neither creates nor confers power to act, but only commands the exercise of powers already existing, when it is the duty of the person or body proceeded against to act without its agency. While it may require the performance of a purely ministerial duty in a particular manner, its command is never given to compel the discharge of a duty involving the exercise of judgment or discretion in any specified way, for that would substitute the judgment or discretion of the court issuing the writ for that of the person or persons against whom the writ was issued. People v. Matthies, 87 N. Y. S. 196, 198, 92 App. Div. 16 (citing People v. Commissioners of Land Office, 149 N. Y. 26, 43 N. E. 418).

"The province of a writ of mandamus is to afford redress where a party has a right to have anything done and has no other specific means of compelling its performance. The writ is also applicable in certain cases where a duty is imposed by statute for the benefit of an individual." State v. Charleston Light & Water Co., 47 S. E. 979, 983, 68 S. C. 540.

Mandamus is an emergency writ, and its purpose is to furnish a speedy remedy for some apparent wrong. It must be issued in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law. State v. District Court, Department No. 1, Lewis and Clarke County, 74 Pac. 498, 501, 29 Mont. 265.

"The modern writ of mandamus may be defined as a command issuing from a common-law court of competent jurisdiction, in the name of the state or sovereign, directed to some corporation, officer, or inferior court, requiring the performance of a particular duty therein specified, which duty results from the official station of the party to whom the writ is directed, or from operation of law." Milster v. City Council of Spartanburg, 47 S. E. 141, 68 S. C. 243 (quoting High. Extr. Leg. Rem. 4); State ex rel. Huebler v. Police Com'rs (Mo.) 82 S. W. 960, 962.

"Originally the writ of mandamus was a prerogative of the English crown, and issued in its name from the court of king's bench, requiring the performance of some specified duty which that court had previously determined, or at least supposed, to be consonant to right and justice. In modern times it issues as a judicial process in actions, often between private parties, in which a court of competent jurisdiction has previously adjudged or commanded the performance by the defendant therein of some specified duty, which under the law he should perform, and is the means by which such judgment or command is enforced." A Circuit Court of the United States is without jurisdiction, either original or by removal from a state court, of an action for a writ of mandamus, which is not necessary for the exercise by it of a jurisdiction which it has otherwise previously acquired; the writ of mandamus not being a suit of a civil nature at law or in equity, within the meaning of the acts of Congress creating the Circuit Courts of the United States and defining their jurisdiction. Mystic Milling Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 289, 291.

Mandamus is a legal proceeding, and a mandamus issued, after judgment against a county, to compel the levy of a tax to pay the same, is in the nature of an execution to enforce satisfaction. Carter County v. Schmalstig (U. S.) 127 Fed. 126, 127, 62 C. C. A. 78 (citing Riggs v. Johnson County, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 166, 18 L. Ed. 768; Heine v. Levee Com'rs, 89 U. S. [19 Wall.] 655, 22 L. Ed. 223.)

MANDATE.

The word "mandate," in Civ. Code, art. 2985, relating to personal mandate, whereby one person appoints another his special agent, or whereby one person gives power to another to transact for him and in his name one or several affairs, does not refer to the business of agency carried on under a charter adopted under the act of 1888. State ex rel. Le Blanc & Railey v. Michel (La.) 36 South. 869, 870.

MANSLAUGHTER.

See "Involuntary Manslaughter."

Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, either express or implied. State v. Emory (Del.) 58 Atl. 1036, 1038.

Manslaughter is defined to be the unlawful killing of another without malice, either express or implied, and without premeditation. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 253, 262.

Murder distinguished.

Manslaughter is distinguished from murder by the absence of malice as a contingent element. If, under the influence of some violent emotion, a sudden intent was formed, which on adequate provocation overwhelmed the reason of the appellant, then the killing was not murder, but manslaughter only. State v. Clark (Kan.) 77 Pac. 287, 288.

MANUFACTURE.

To manufacture is to modify or to change natural substances, so that they become articles of value or use. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Cavanaugh (Ind.) 71 N. E. 239, 241.

The process of manufacture is supposed to produce some new article by the application of skill and labor to the raw material. The broad interpretation which the courts have always given the word "manufacture" must include the construction of buildings and bridges. In re Niagara Contracting Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 782, 783.

MANUFACTURE OF OIL.

The refining process which constitutes what is called the "manufacture of oil," relating to cocoanut oil of commerce, merely removes from it the impurities due to the manner in which the kernel is handled and dried and to its partial decay. United States v. Oriental American Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 249, 251.

MANUFACTURE OF PAPER.

Paper bags with incidental printing thereon are "manufactures of paper," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 407, 30 Stat. 189 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1673]. Kraut v. United States (U. S.) 130 Fed. 392.

MANUFACTURING CORPORATION.

Manufacturing corporation within bankruptcy act, see "Engaged Principally in Manufacturing, Etc."

The Pioneer Pasteurizing Company, authorized by its articles of incorporation to engage in the business of buying, manufacturing, and dealing in milk, cream, butter, cheese, and other dairy products, and pasteurizing and treating said milk, and packing, storing, handling, and selling said products so pasteurized and treated, is not exclusively a manufacturing or mechanical corporation, within Const. art. 10, § 38, and its stockholders are therefore liable for its debts.—Meen v. Pioneer Pasteurizing Co., 97 N. W. 140, 141, 90 Minn. 501.

MANUFACTURING ESTABLISHMENT.

A sawmill at which lumber is sawed for sale on the market is a "manufacturing establishment," within Ky. St. 1903, §§ 2487, 2488, giving laborers in manufacturing establishments a lien for wages superior to that of mortgages. Graham v. Magann, Fawke Lumber Co. (Ky.) 80 S. W. 799, 800 (citing Bogard v. Tyler's Adm'r, 55 S. W. 709, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 1452).

The furnishing of electric light and power and distributing it is not manufacturing, within Pub. St. 1901, c. 55, § 11, providing that towns may, by vote, exempt for certain time from taxation any "manufacturing establishment" proposed to be erected or put in operation. Williams v. Park (N. H.) 56 Atl. 463, 464, 72 N. H. 305, 64 L. R. A. 33.

Act March 2, 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 234; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 70871; Horner's Ann. St. 1901, § 5169k), declaring that the words "manufacturing and mercantile establishments mean any mill, factory, place of trade, or other establishment where goods are manufactured, or offered for sale, is not confined in its operation to places where goods are manufactured for or offered to the public market, and a machine shop maintained by a railway company for its own repairs and the making of materials for its own use is within the statute. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Cavanaugh (Ind.) 71 N. E. 239, 241.

MANUFACTURING PURPOSE.

The production and control of electric power by mechanical means, and its adaptation for use upon a trolley system, is a "manufacturing purpose," within the meaning of section 8 of the mechanic's lien law (P. L. 1898, p. 533). Bates Mach. Co. v. Trenton & N. B. R. Co. (N. J.) 58 Atl. 935, 936; Phoenix Iron Works Co. v. Same, Id.; Henderson & Bro. v. Same, Id.

MANUFACTURING PURSUITS.

See "Engaged Principally in Manufacturing, Etc."

MARINE INSURANCE BUSINESS.

The business of issuing ordinary fire insurance policies upon boats navigating the Great Lakes and the high seas is "marine insurance business," within Laws 1895, p. 392, c. 175, relating to the organization of marine insurance companies. Dwinnell v. Minneapolis Fire & Marine Mut. Ina. Co., 97 N. W. 110, 111, 90 Minn. 383.

MARITIME CONTRACT.

A contract for repairs to be furnished to a canal boat engaged in navigating the Erie Canal and Hudson river is a maritime contract, and proceedings to enforce a lien for the repairs furnished are within the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts, though such repairs were made in dry dock. Perry v. Haines, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 10, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

A contract relating to wharfage, as understood in the laws and usages of maritime affairs, is clearly a maritime contract. The James T. Furber (U. S.) 129 Fed. 808, 810.

MARKET VALUE.

See "Actual Market Value"; "Cash Market Value."

The "market value" of merchandise imported from France, as defined in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, 26 Stat. 139 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1924], does not include the amount of certain internal revenue imposts of that country known as the "octroi tax" and the "droit de ville," which are not general in their application, but vary with the locality, and which are not collected if the merchandise is exported. United States v. R. F. Downing & Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 653.

MARKETABLE TITLE.

The books define a marketable title, as one that is not only good, but indubitable. Ormsby v. Graham, 98 N. W. 724, 727, 123 Iowa, 202 (citing Swayne v. Lyon, 67 Pa. [17 P. F. Smith] 436; Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253, 24 N. E. 195, 8 L. R. A. 591, 17 Am. St. Rep. 634; Tomlin v. McChord's Representatives, 28 Ky. [5 J. J. Marsh.] 135).

MARRIAGE.

See "Agreement to Marry."

Marriage, while from its very nature a sacred obligation, is nevertheless, in most civilized nations, a civil contract, and usually regulated by law. Upon it society may be said to be built, and out of its fruits spring social relations, and social obligation and duties, with which government is necessarily required to deal. In re De Laveaga's Estate, 75 Pac. 790, 795, 142 Cal. 158 (citing Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244).

Marriage is a civil contract, the consent of the parties to it being all that is required by natural public law. It is true that in most, if not all, of the states of the Union, there are statutes regulating the manner of forming the marriage contract, providing for the performance of ceremonies, and naming those persons who can perform the ceremonies or celebrate the rites of matrimony; but it is held in a number of the states that, in the absence of positive statutes declaring all marriages void that are not performed as directed by law, any marriage made according to the common law would be a valid marriage. Such marriage may be proved by reputation, declarations, and conduct of the parties, and other circumstances usually accompanying that relation. Edelstein v. Brown (Tex.) 80 S. W. 1027.

"Marriage is not a civil contract, except in so far as the relation is based on the agreement of the parties. It is true the statute (section 7289, Burns' Ann. St. 1901) declares marriage to be a civil contract, but the statute itself takes it out of the clause of simple contracts by providing that it may be entered into by persons under age." Elkenbury v. Burns (Ind.) 70 N. E. 837, 838.

MARRIAGEABLE WOMAN.

A woman, to be marriageable, must at the time be able to bear children to her husband, and a representation to this effect is implied in the very nature of the contract. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87, 103.

MASTER.

The master is the one who has the direction and control of the servant, and the test is whether in the particular service the servant continues liable to the direction and control of his master, or becomes subject to the party to whom he is loaned or hired. Grace & Hyde Co. v. Probst, 70 N. E. 12, 14, 208 Ill. 147 (citing Consolidated Fireworks Co. v. Kochl, 190 Ill. 145, 60 N. E. 87).

MATERIAL.

Other material, see "Other."

MATERIAL ALTERATION.

Whatever changes the legal effect of an instrument is a material alteration. "The test is, not whether an alteration increases or reduces a party's liability, but whether the instrument expresses the same contract—whether it will have the same legal effect and operation after the alteration as before." White v. Harris, 48 S. E. 41, 43, 69 S. C. 65 (quoting Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] 224).

MATERIAL DEGREE.

One of the meanings of the term material is "in an important degree" (Webster, Dict.), and this is the meaning which would properly be attached to it as used in an instruction that a passenger on a street car could not recover if she contributed to her injury in a material degree, and hence the instruction was erroneous, because importing that there might be a degree of negligence on the part of plaintiff, contributing to the injury, which would not defeat a recovery. Root v. Des Moines Ry. Co. (Iowa) 98 N. W. 291, 293, 122 Iowa, 469.

The words "material degree," in an instruction, in an action for injuries, to the effect that if the plaintiff was injured as the direct result of defendant's negligence, and was "in no manner or to any material degree negligent himself, or in no manner or to any extent contributed to his own injury," he was entitled to recover, related to the amount of care required, and not to the extent of contribution to the injury by reason of failure to exercise such care, and hence the instruction was not erroneous. Camp v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co. (Iowa) 99 N. W. 735, 738.

MATERIAL MISREPRESENTATION 7718 MATTER OF LEGAL AVOIDANCE

MATERIAL MISREPRESENTATION.

A misrepresentation, as the basis of rescission, must be material; but it can be material only when it is of such a character that, if it had not been made, the contract would not have been entered into. The misrepresentation, it is true, need not be the sole cause of the contract; but it must be of such nature, weight, and force that the court can say, "Without it the contract would not have been made." Oppenheimer v. Clunie, 75 Pac. 899, 901, 142 Cal. 313 (citing Colton v. Stanford, 82 Cal. 351, 399, 23 Pac. 16, 28, 16 Am. St. Rep. 137).

MATERIAL RIGHT.

The right of a defendant to challenge peremptorily is a material right. Betts v. United States, 132 Fed. 228, 229, 235.

MATERIALMAN.

Where complainant contracted with defendant, the owner of certain premises, to furnish mining machinery, appliances, and materials, and install the same in a mill to be erected at defendant's mines and constructed by defendant, without any other contractor, he was an original contractor, and not a "materialman," within Cutting's Comp. Laws Neb., § 3885, and therefore was entitled to 60 days within which to file his claim for a lien. Salt Lake Hardware Co. v. Chainman Mining & Electric Co. (U. S.) 128 Fed. 509, 510.

MATTER.

See "Printed Matter."

Other matter, see "Other."

Code Civ. Proc. § 46, forbidding a judge to sit or take part in the decision of a "cause or matter" in which he has been an attorney or counsel, refers only to actions or special proceedings in which a judge might take part; the word "cause" meaning a cause of action, and the word "matter" referring to some judicial proceeding which, under the Code, is included in special proceedings for the enforcement of civil rights. Keeffe v. Third Nat. Bank of Syracuse, 69 N. E. 593, 177 N. Y. 305.

MATTER IN DISPUTE.

The phrase "matter in dispute," as used in the Code of the District of Columbia (Act March 3, 1901, c. 854, § 233, 31 Stat. 1227), providing that any final judgment of the Court of Appeals may be re-examined and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States, on writ of error or appeal, in all cases in which the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of $5,000, means money, or some right the value of which can be estimated and ascertained in money, and which appears by the record to be of the requisite pecuniary value; and, assuming that the term "matter in dispute" may embrace a right to have a claim against a foreign government presented through the political department of the United States, and that the value of such a right may be gauged by the possible pecuniary injury which may be sustained if no such action is taken, it is evident that a claim for damages from the German Empire in redress of an alleged wrongful imprisonment in that country is one having a merely conjectural value. Hence the value of the matter in dispute in a proceeding to compel by mandamus the Secretary of State to seek to obtain $500,000 damages from the German Empire in redress of petitioner's alleged wrongful imprisonment while on a visit to that country does not exceed the sum of $5,000. United States v. Hay, 24 Sup. Ct. 681, 682, 194 U. S. 373, 48 L. Ed. 1025.

MATTER OF ADMINISTRATION.

The power to compel an administrator to fulfill a contract of conveyance of real estate of his intestate is a "matter of administration," within the Constitution, defining the jurisdiction of the probate court. Servis v. Beatty, 32 Miss. 52, 87.

MATTER OF LEGAL AVOIDANCE.

The term "matters of legal avoidance," as used in the statement that a recognizance is in the nature of a conditional judgment, subject only to such matters of legal avoidance as may be shown by plea, or to such matters of relief as may induce the court to remit or mitigate a forfeiture, refers to such matters as are entirely consistent with the truth of the facts stated in the record and furnish a legal excuse for the failure of the defendant to appear according to the condition of his recognizance. The sureties, for example, show, in answer to the scire facias, the death of the principal before the time for his appearance had arrived, or that he had been arrested under other process issued at the instance of the state, or that he had become insane. All pleas of this kind are not only consistent with the truth of what is averred in the record, but they are predicated on the assumption of such truth. State v. Morgan (N. C.) 48 S. E. 604, 606.

MAY.

The word "may" in statutes usually indicates that the act to which it refers is discretionary, rather than mandatory, and will be so construed, unless the context indicates a different meaning. Halfacre v. State (Tenn.) 79 S. W. 132, 133.

Whenever third persons or the public have an interest in having done that which is prescribed by the Legislature, then the act is mandatory, even though words permissive, as "may," are used, instead of words mandatory, as "shall." Lapsley v. Merchants' Bank of Jefferson City, 78 S. W. 1095, 1096, 105 Mo. App. 98.

The word "may," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 2864, providing that all or any of the issues in an action may be referred, is not used with reference to public rights or interests, or where the public or a third person have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised. So it is not an instance where by the rules of statutory construction a permissive word shall be given the mandatory significance of "must" or "shall." When a permissive word is not so used in the statute, it must be taken in its literal sense. The privilege of the statute in question is designed for the convenience of both the court and parties. Hence the statute authorizes a reference in the discretion of the court, and does not entitle a party to a reference as a matter of right. Hart v. Godkin (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1057, 1058.

Pub. St. 1882, c. 189, § 20, provides that a party desiring to have a private way laid out shall file a petition with the county commissioners. Section 25 provides that, when the premises are situated entirely in one town, the petition may be made to the selectmen, or mayor and aldermen, thereof. The word "may," in the last section, does not mean "must." Eldredge v. Norfolk County Com'rs, 70 N. E. 36, 37, 185 Mass. 186.

Code, § 5337, providing that at any time before judgment the court "may" permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn and other plea or pleas substituted, is mandatory. State v. Hortman, 97 N. W. 981, 982, 122 Iowa, 104.

The word "may," used in Code Civ. Proc. § 732, providing that any person aggrieved by waste may bring an action therefor, is not a mandatory term, except when it is construed to mean "must"; and it is never thus construed where there is nothing in the connection of the language or in the sense or policy of the provision to require an unusual interpretation. Isom v. Rex Crude Oil Co., 74 Pac. 294, 140 Cal. 678.

In Pol. Code, § 3804, requiring that any taxes paid more than once, or erroneously or illegally collected, may by order of the board of supervisors be refunded by the county treasurer, the word "may" means "shall." Stewart Law & Collection Co. v. Alameda County, 76 Pac. 481, 482, 142 Cal. 660.

The word "may," as used in Gen. St. 1894, § 5186, which provides that, where defendant is a nonresident and plaintiff proceeds by attaching his property, the action may be brought in any county where defendant has property liable to attachment, is not mandatory, and cannot be construed as meaning "must." Clements v. Utley, 98 N. W. 188, 189, 91 Minn. 352.

The word "may" is not to be construed as "must" or "shall," but merely as permissive and discretionary with the city, in an ordinance providing that the grade of alleys, not otherwise fixed, at the points of intersection with streets whose grades are established by the ordinance, shall be the same as said streets, and continuous from one street to the next, but between any two adjacent streets along the line of the alley vertical curves of grade "may" be used, when necessary to facilitate drainage or afford better access to property along the line of said alley, etc., for in interpreting statutes and ordinances the word "may" should not be construed to mean "must" or "shall," for the purpose of creating or determining the character of private rights. Kelley v. City of Cedar Falls, 99 N. W. 556, 557, 123 Iowa, 660.

The word "may" is used in a permissive, not a mandatory, sense in Mills' Ann. St. § 3162, providing that the relocater of an abandoned lode claim may sink the original shaft deeper than it was at the time of abandonment. Carlin v. Freeman (Colo.) 75 Pac. 26, 27.

MEAL.

If a single sandwich satisfies the desires of a person, it constitutes a "meal," and the keeper of a hotel has the right to serve liquors to him with such meal, under Laws 1897, p. 234, c. 312, § 81, cl. "k," providing that the keeper of a hotel, being the holder of a liquor tax certificate, may sell liquor on Sunday to his guests with their meals. In re Cullinan, 87 N. Y. Supp. 660, 662, 93 App. Div. 427.

MEANS.

See "Mechanical Means."
Any means, see "Any."
Other means, see "Other."

MEASURE.

Under a statute giving mayors of certain cities power to veto any measure passed by the board of aldermen, a mayor has no power to veto the election of a police justice by the board of aldermen, since such an election is not a measure. Rich v. McLaurin, 35 South. 337, 83 Miss. 95.

MECHANICAL CORPORATION.

The Pioneer Pasteurizing Company, authorized by its articles of incorporation to engage in the business of buying, manufacturing, and dealing in milk, cream, butter, cheese, and other dairy products, and pasteurizing and treating said milk, and packing, storing, handling, and selling said products so pasteurized and treated, is not exclusively a manufacturing or mechanical corporation, within Const. art. 10, § 38, and its stockholders are therefore liable for its debts. Meen v. Pioneer Pasteurizing Co., 97 N. W. 140, 141, 90 Minn. 501.

MECHANICAL MEANS.

The phrase "by mechanical or other means," as used in the statute making it a misdemeanor for any person not licensed to record or register, by mechanical or other means, bets or wagers on trials of speed, etc., embraces something outside the mechanical class, and covers the registration of such bets by means of the initials or private marks of the parties written on cards. State v. Villines (Mo.) 81 S. W. 212, 213.

MECHANIC'S LIEN.

A mechanic's lien is at most only a tentative charge against the property it purports to bind, and is liable to be defeated for lack of technical sufficiency, as well as by showing that the indebtedness or some considerable part thereof is not owing. Beebe v. Redward, 77 Pac. 1052, 1055, 35 Wash. 615.

"A mechanic's lien on chattels, as on real estate, is simply a security for the payment of a debt. Without indebtedness to the mechanic there can be no lien. * * * The lien is commensurate with the amount due." Tenney v. Anderson Water, Light & Power Co., 48 S. E. 457, 458, 69 S. C. 430 (quoting Phillips, Mech. Liens, § 493).

A mechanic's lien is purely a statutory creation, and can only be maintained by a substantial observance or compliance with the provisions of the statute. Whatever is made necessary to the existence of the lien must be performed, or the attempt to create it will be futile. A substantial adherence to the terms of the statute in the notice of lien is indispensable. Russell v. Hayner, 130 Fed. 90, 92 (citing Phillips, Mech. Liens [3d Ed.] § 9).

MEDICINAL PREPARATION.

The expression "medicinal preparations," as used in Tariff Act March 3, 1883, c. 121, Schedule A, 22 Stat. 494, means such articles as are of use, or believed by the prescriber or user fairly and honestly to be of use, in curing or alleviating, or palliating or preventing, some disease or affection of the human frame. Dodge & Olcott v. United States (U. S.) 130 Fed. 624, 625; Lueders v. Same, Id.

MEMBER.

See "Active Member."

Of Congress.

"When we speak of a member of Congress, we refer to one who is a component part of the Senate or House of Representatives; one who is in office—not out of office; one who is sharing the responsibilities and privileges of membership." The words "member of Congress," as used in the first provision of Rev. St. § 1781 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1212], making it a criminal offense for a member of Congress, or any officer or agent of the government, to agree to receive or receive a bribe for procuring or aiding to procure for another any contract, office, or place from the government, do not include a person elected to the office of Senator of the United States until he has been accepted as member by the Senate of the United States and has assumed the duties of the office. United States v. Dietrich (U. S.) 126 Fed. 676, 678, 681.

Of police force.

The chief of police of a city is a "member of the police force" of the city, and amenable to an order established by the board of police examiners, created by the charter of the city, providing that no member of the police force should be permitted to be a delegate to any caucus or take part in any political canvass. Brownell v. Russell (Vt.) 57 Atl. 103, 104.

MEMBERSHIP.

See "Certain Ascertained Membership."

MEMORANDUM.

A mere indorsement of the name of the owner of property on the check given by a prospective purchaser for earnest money is not a note or memorandum in writing, as required by the statute of frauds (2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 [2d Ed.] p. 1997). Koenig v. Dohm, 70 N. E. 1061, 1064, 209 Ill. 468.

MEMORY.

See "Sound Mind and Memory."

MENTALLY INCOMPETENT.

The term "mentally incompetent to have the charge and management of his property," within the statute relating to the appointment of guardians, means mental incapability to do so. In re Streiff, 97 N. W. 189, 191, 119 Wis. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 903 (citing In re Leonard's Estate, 95 Mich. 295, 54 N. W. 1082).

MERCANTILE PURSUITS.

See "Engaged Principally in Manufacturing, Etc."

MERCHANDISE.

The word "merchandise," defined in Rev. St. § 2768 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1861], as including goods, wares, and chattels of every description capable of being imported, is sufficiently broad to include placer gold. Six Parcels of Placer Gold v. United States (Ariz.) 76 Pac. 473, 475.

MERCHANT.

The term "merchant" is defined by Act Cong. May 5, 1892, c. 60, 27 Stat. 25 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1319], as amended by Act Nov. 3, 1893, c. 14, 28 Stat. 7 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1322], as a person engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, which business is conducted in his name, and who, during the time he claims to be engaged as a merchant, does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant. The names of any of the partners need not appear in the company name under which a Chinese grocery is actually conducted at a fixed place of business, in order to constitute them merchants within the meaning of the definition. Tom Hong v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 517, 519, 193 U. S. 517, 48 L. Ed. 772.

"Merchant" is defined by Webster, Dict. as "one who traffics on a large scale, especially with foreign countries; a trafficker; a trader; * * * one who keeps a store or shop for the sale of goods; a shopkeeper." A merchant has also been defined as "one whose business is to buy and sell merchandise; one who buys to sell again, who does both, not incidentally or occasionally, but habitually, as a business." An itinerant optician, who merely prescribes and collects for spectacles, and has his orders filled and charged to him by a supply house, is not a merchant. City of Waukon v. Fisk (Iowa) 100 N. W. 475, 476 (quoting Jewel v. Trustees of Sumner Tp., 113 Iowa, 47, 49, 84 N. W. 973).

A "merchant" is one engaged in the business of buying commercial commodities and selling them again for the sake of profit. He is one who traffics or carries on trade, especially on a large scale; one who buys goods to sell again, and any one who is engaged in the purchase or sale of goods; a trafficker; a trader. Under Code, § 700, giving to cities and towns the power to define by ordinance who shall be considered transient merchants, and to regulate, license, and tax their sales, a city may impose a license fee on one engaged in taking orders for goods on his own account, and subsequently having the orders filled by a wholesale house, and the goods shipped to him for delivery; he paying the wholesale price and collecting the retail price from his customers. City of Cedar Falls v. Gentzler, 99 N. W. 561, 562, 123 Iowa, 670.

MERITS.

An order granting a change of venue in a civil action involves the merits, and is appealable, under Rev. Codes 1899, § 5626, providing that an order is appealable when it involves the merits of an action or some part thereof. Robertson Lumber Co. v. Jones (N. D.) 99 N. W. 1082 (citing White v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 5 Dak. 508, 41 N. W. 730).

METAL.

See "Composition Metal."

METALS UNWROUGHT.

Certain alloys of iron and mineral substances known as ferrochrome, ferrotungsten, ferromolybdenum, and ferrovanadium, are dutiable as "metals unwrought," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 183, 30 Stat. 166 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1645], but are dutiable at the rate applicable to ferromanganese, enumerated in paragraph 122 of said act (30 Stat. 159 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1636]). United States v. Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 576.

MILLING IN TRANSIT.

"Milling in transit" refers to cases where freight is shipped a long distance, and the carrier will at his own cost defray the expense of its change in form en route, because of the easier handling in the more compact shape. Under Laws 1899, p. 801, c. 164, § 13, providing that any carrier charging one person more than another for the same service is guilty of discrimination, a railroad company carrying raw material to factories cannot charge a factory which agrees to ship the manufactured product by the same road less for the same service than it charges a factory which will make no such agreement; the carrier not being in a position to justify under "milling in transit." Hilton Lumber Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (N. C.) 48 S. E. 813, 816.

MINE.

As land, see "Land."

MINERAL.

Sand, according to the circumstances, may or may not be a mineral, in the commercial sense intended by Act May 8, 1876 (P. L. 142), providing that, if any person or corporation shall dig minerals in the land of another without the consent of the owner, he shall be liable for double the value thereof. Hendler v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 58 Atl. 488, 489, 209 Pa. 263.

MINING CLAIM.

As property, see "Property."

MINISTERIAL ACT.

A ministerial act may perhaps be defined to be one which a person performs in a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to or the exercise of his own judgment upon the propriety of the act done. Bair v. Struck, 74 Pac. 69, 71, 29 Mont. 45, 63 L. R. A. 481 (citing Throop, Pub. Off. § 537).

MINISTERIAL OFFICER.

The clerk of a court is essentially a ministerial officer. He has nothing to do with the character or purpose of papers which are tendered to him to be filed. When suit is ordered or process directed to be issued, it is his duty to comply, if the party is prima facie entitled to it, and for failure to do so he is liable for any loss; the measure of his liability being the damages which have resulted therefrom. In an action on the official bond of a clerk of the circuit court for refusal to issue a summons, the plaintiff must state, in his declaration, enough to show that he had a good cause of action against the parties whom he desired to sue. He cannot simply claim as damages the amount for which he wanted to bring suit. Any declaration or complaint which does nothing more is demurrable. United States v. Bell (U. S.) 127 Fed. 1002, 1003 (citing 7 Cyc. 196).

MISCARRIAGE.

See "Debt, Default, or Miscarriage of Another."

MISCONDUCT.

After the jury is sworn, misconduct on the part of an individual juror is misconduct of the jury. State v. Mott, 74 Pac. 728, 730, 29 Mont. 292.

MISDELIVERY.

Misdelivery of goods is the same as a total failure to deliver them at all, and is deemed a conversion of the property by the carrier. Leaving goods at the wrong place may constitute a misdelivery and conversion of them, as well as delivering them to the wrong person. Cleveland, O., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. C. & A. Potts & Co. (Ind.) 71 N. E. 685, 689 (citing Elliott, Railroads, § 1526; Railroad Co. v. O'Donnell, 49 Ohio St. 489, 32 N. E. 476; Perkins v. Smith, 1 Wils. 328; Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Adams, 49 Tex. 748, 30 Am. Rep. 116; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. White, 69 Ky. [6 Bush] 251; Claffin v. Boston & L. R. Co., 89 Mass. [7 Allen] 841).

MISDEMEANOR.

A contempt proceeding is classified as a misdemeanor, and not as a felony. Bullock Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 105, 107, 63 C. O. A. 607.

The offense of having in possession and selling counterfeit trade-marks and labels, in violation of Pen. Code, § 364, subd. 4, is a "misdemeanor," and hence defendants, acting in concert in the commission of such offense, may be properly tried together. People v. Strauss, 88 N. Y. Supp. 40, 43, 94 App. Div. 453.

MISREPRESENTATION.

See "Material Misrepresentation."

MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The term "Mississippi river," used in the enabling act (Act Cong. Aug. 6, 1846, c. 89, § 9 Stat. 56) descriptive of the boundary between Wisconsin and Minnesota, applies to the broad expanse of water flowing in a generally southerly direction, known at the date of such act as such river, not any bayou upon either side thereof. Franzini v. Layland (Wis.) 97 N. W. 499, 501.

MISTAKE.

Impression equivalent, see "Impression."

The code provision that the court may at any time permit a pleading or mistake in any other respect to be amended authorizes the substitution of a sufficient appeal bond in an election contest, where the bond given has failed to comply with the statutory requirements. Galloway v. Bradburn (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1013, 1016.

MISTAKE OF FACT.

"Mistake of fact," for which a contract may be avoided, is defined in Civ. Code, § 1577, to be "an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract." White v. Stevenson, 77 Pac. 828, 830, 144 Cal. 104.

MITER BOX.

A miter box is a rough three-sided box, without top or ends, into the two upright sides of which slits are sawed at the proper angle. Metzler v. McKenzie, 76 Pac. 114, 115, 34 Wash. 470.

MITIGATE.

Extenuate synonymous, see "Extenuate."

MIXED TRAIN.

A train consisting of four freight cars and a passenger coach is a "mixed train." Holland v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 79 S. W. 508, 509, 105 Mo. App. 117.

MODE.

The examination of a party before trial, authorized by Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 870, cannot be required by a federal Circuit Court sitting in that state, by virtue of the declaration of Act March 9, 1892, c. 14, 27 Stat. 7 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 664], that, in addition to the mode of taking the depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the federal District and Circuit Courts, it shall be lawful to take the depositions or testimony of witnesses in the mode prescribed by the laws of the state in which the courts are held. "Mode" usually means the manner in which a thing is done, and this act relates to the manner of taking 'depositions and testimony,' which the title treats as equivalent terms, and which may be so regarded so far as the question before us is concerned. But it is contended that the word 'mode,' as used in the act, has a broader significance, and embraces the production of evidence, thereby qualifying section 861, Rev. St. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661], which prescribes the mode of proof. We cannot concur in this view." Hanks Dental Ass'n v. International Tooth Crown Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 700, 702, 194 U. S. 303, 48 L. Ed. 989.

MODEL OF IMPROVEMENT.

Exact models of steamships of improved design, showing the details of the vessels, valued at about $1,000 each, and intended for exhibition in steamship offices, are models of improvements in the art of shipbuilding, and are free of duty under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 616, 30 Stat. 199 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1685], covering "models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts." Boas v. United States (U. S.) 128 Fed. 470.
8 Wds. & P.—59

MODIFY.

The word "modify," as used in a corporate charter, providing that, upon the report of commissioners to appraise property which the corporation seeks to acquire as a right of way, the judge of the district court shall confirm the report, modify it, or refer it back to the present or new commissioners, does not give the court authority to increase the amount found by the commissioners. Louisiana Western R. Co. v. Crossman's Heirs, 35 South. 784, 785, 111 La. 611.

MOMENTARILY UNCONTROLLED.

Generally it may be said that the event sought to be described by the phrase "momentarily uncontrolled" is wholly inconsistent with a condition where a horse is moving along the road in the course of a struggle for mastery. It is substantially limited to those spasmodic movements which often occur while the horse is generally within the control of his driver, but where the particular movement is so quick and unexpected that it and its results can take place before efforts to control can be exerted. A horse shied to one side, and then at a gallop ran forward 60 to 90 feet, the driver all the time pulling back on the lines, so that the horse was drawing the vehicle by the bit and resisting the efforts to stop him, till a defect in the highway was reached and an accident occurred. The horse could not be held to have been only "momentarily uncontrolled," within the law as to liability of a municipality for defects in highways. Ehleiter v. City of Milwaukee, 98 N. W. 934, 935, 121 Wis. 85, 66 L. R. A. 915.

MONEY.

See "Bond for the Payment of Money"; "Condemnation Money"; "Lawful Current Money."

MONEY AT INTEREST.

The phrase "money at interest" includes all forms of interest-bearing securities, whether represented by bonds, notes, or otherwise, unless the contrary appears from the assessment itself. Sweetsir v. Chandler, 56 Atl. 584, 586, 98 Me. 145.

MONEY LENT.

Money deposited in a bank in New York at interest and subject to check constitutes "money lent" to the banker, within Civ. Code La., art. 3538 (3503), requiring actions for the payment of money lent to be brought within three years. Schinotti v. Whitney (U. S.) 130 Fed. 780, 781 (quoting Morse, Banks, § 298).

MONEY OF THE UNITED STATES.

See "Current Money of the United States."

MONEY ORDER.

Pay check synonymous, see "Pay-Check."

MONEYED BUSINESS.

The expressions "moneyed business" or "moneyed man" are often used, and in their common acceptation and generally understood meaning are not applied solely to the business of handling and loaning money, or to a man whose property merely consists of money. A person is commonly referred to as a moneyed man because of his large possessions, yet those possessions may consist exclusively of real estate. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (Tex.) 80 S. W. 544, 553.

MONEYED CORPORATION.

The term "moneyed corporation" is defined in 1 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 593, § 51, to mean every corporation having banking powers, or having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or authorized by law to make insurances, and is defined by the New York act of 1890 (Laws 1890, c. 563) to be one formed under or subject to the banking or the insurance law. A Kansas trust company, empowered to receive deposits and to loan money on real estate and personal security, is a "moneyed corporation," within this definition and within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 394, prescribing a three-year limitation for actions to enforce stockholders' liabilities. Platt v. Willmot, 24 Sup. Ct. 542, 545, 193 U. S. 602, 48 L. Ed. 809.

The expression "moneyed corporation," in Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, art. 5063, providing for the taxation of all personal estate of moneyed corporations, means all classes of corporations organized and created for business purposes, as distinguishable from public or charitable or other corporations which are exempted by law from taxation. The Legislature evidently did not intend to use it in the restrictive sense, as applied only to corporations that dealt exclusively in money. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 544, 553.

MONEYED MAN.

See "Moneyed Business."

MONOMANIA.

The term "monomania" implies "partial insanity, and excludes the idea of any sort of ratiocination as to the particular subject to which the partial insanity relates. Monomania cannot be implied because a person takes a narrow, or prejudiced, or utterly illogical view of a particular subject. It is not the result of any conclusion. The person does not arrive at his conviction because of any attempt either at reasoning or investigation. The partial insanity is the offspring of a disordered intellect." The conclusion that a testator was a monomaniac is not warranted by the bare circumstance that, actuated by a spirit of resentment against his wife, he disinherited her in his will, for the sole reason that she had interfered with him in carrying out his deliberate choice to lead an immoral and dissolute life. Bohler v. Hicks, 48 S. E. 306, 307, 120 Ga. 800.

MONTH.

A month is a definite period of time, commencing on the 1st day thereof, and ending on the 28th, 29th, 30th, or 31st day. Derby v. Dancey, 36 South. 795, 796, 112 La. 891.

MORAL CERTAINTY.

Moral certainty is that degree of proof which the law requires of moral evidence. Moral certainty is described as a state of impression produced by facts in which a reasonable mind feels a sort of coercion or necessity to act in accordance with it. It is also declared to be a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. People v. Lew Fook, 75 Pac. 183, 141 Cal. 548.

MORAL OBLIGATION.

A moral obligation on the part of the state must have something more substantial than legislation obnoxious to the fundamental law to rest upon; something more for a foundation or starting point than a statute which is itself immoral. A moral obligation can never be deemed to rest upon the people of the state to discharge a contract made by the Legislature in direct violation of the Constitution. Minnesota Sugar Co. v. Iverson, 97 N. W. 454, 457, 91 Minn. 30 (citing Adsit v. Osmun, 84 Mich. 420, 48 N. W. 81, 11 L. R. A. 534).

MORTGAGE.

At common law a mortgage was a conditional conveyance to secure the payment of money or the performance of some act, to be void upon such payment or performance. By more modern law and under the statutes of many states a mortgage is a mere lien upon land. Its dominant attribute is security, but nevertheless it must be regarded as "both a lien in equity and a conveyance at law." United States v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 546, 547, 193 U. S. 651, 48 L. Ed. 830 (citing Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1191).

"Under Georgia law the word 'mortgage' is used in a double sense. Sometimes it refers to a mortgage which creates a lien, and at other times as passing title as a security for the debt. An instrument containing a defeasance clause describing the debt, and showing on its face that it is intended as security, is a mortgage, and passes no title. A writing in the form of an absolute bill of sale, but in fact intended only as security for a debt, conveys title, but is treated as an equitable mortgage." Denton v. Shields, 48 S. E. 423, 120 Ga. 1076.

A mortgage itself does not create or alienate an estate in real property, but is a mere security for the payment of a debt or the discharge of an obligation. Mueller v. Renkes (Mont.) 77 Pac. 512, 513.

One of the essentials of a mortgage is the existence of an indebtedness, payment of which the mortgage is designed to secure. An instrument, in form a conditional bill of sale, is not made a mortgage by reason of the fact that it contains a provision that the instrument shall be void if the grantors pay a certain sum of money by a certain day. Smith v. Hope (Fla.) 35 South. 865, 866.

The word "mortgage," as used in Const. art. 13, § 4, providing that a mortgage by which a debt is secured shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in property affected thereby, has reference to mortgages on realty alone, an employment of the word countenanced even in legal usage, where "mortgage" is generally employed and meant to apply to the creation of liens upon real estate, while like liens upon personalty are designated as "chattel mortgages." Bank of Woodland v. Pierce (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1012, 1013.

MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION.

The expression "mortgagee in possession" has been adopted by the courts and law writers as a convenient phrase to describe the condition of a mortgagee, who is in possession of mortgaged premises under such circumstances as to make the satisfaction of his lien a prerequisite to his being dispossessed, even in jurisdictions where the mortgage itself can confer no possessory right, either before or after default. Stouffer v. Harlan (Kan.) 74 Pac. 610, 611, 64 L. R. A. 320.

MORTGAGOR.

See "Creditors of the Mortgagor."

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

A motion for a new trial is, in this state, a statutory remedy, and can only be invoked in the manner, within the time, and upon the grounds provided in the statute. The losing party must pursue the requirements of the statute, or else he cannot avail himself of the remedy. State v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 74 Pac. 414, 415, 29 Mont. 176.

MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

A motion for nonsuit is a general one, and only challenges the general sufficiency of the evidence; that is, says, in effect, there is a total failure of evidence. Upon a motion of this kind the only question raised is whether there is any evidence tending to prove the crime charged, not whether the evidence falls in some particular matters. State v. Eubank, 74 Pac. 378, 33 Wash. 293 (citing State v. Hyde, 22 Wash. 551, 61 Pac. 719).

MOTION FOR VERDICT.

A motion for verdict is considered in law as in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, and on a motion for a verdict the province of the court is not to weigh the evidence and ascertain where the preponderance is, but it is limited to a determination as to the existence of evidence from which, if true, it may be reasonably inferred that the fact affirmed exists, excluding the effect of all modifying or contrary evidence. Bass v. Rublee (Vt.) 57 Atl. 965, 966.

MOTIVE.

Intent distinguished, see "Intent."

MUCK BAR.

"'Muck bar' is more advanced than pig iron, for it is the product of pig iron after its conversion into wrought iron in the puddling furnace. But to make muck bar the wrought iron is rolled through a set of rolls. This rolled iron comes from the rolls in bar form. * * * Knight's Mechanical Dictionary defines 'muck bar' as 'bar iron which has passed once through the rolls.'" Moorehead Bros. & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 127 Fed. 779.

MULTIFARIOUS.

A bill is generally understood to be multifarious when distinct and independent matters are improperly joined in one bill, and thereby confounded, as, for example, where several perfectly distinct and unconnected matters against one defendant are united in one bill. Baumgartner v. Bradt, 69 N. E. 912, 913, 207 Ill. 345.

MULTIPHASE SYSTEM.

Technically the "multiphase system," as used in the transmission of electric power, consists of the use of two or more alternate currents of equal period, but differing in phase. Harrison v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry. (Mich.) 100 N. W. 451, 452.

MUNICIPAL.

The term "municipal," as commonly used, is appropriately applied to all corporations exercising governmental functions, either general or special. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Escondido Irr. Dist., 77 Pac. 937, 938, 144 Cal. 329.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIR.

The power to impose a license tax for revenue purposes, granted by the state to a municipality for municipal purposes, became a "municipal affair," within Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that cities and their charters shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, except in municipal affairs, and the Legislature was without authority to withdraw or modify such power. Ex parte Braun, 74 Pac. 780, 783, 141 Cal. 204.

A provision in a charter authorizing a municipality to impose and collect a license tax for purposes of municipal revenue is a "municipal affair," and within the proper scope of a municipal charter. Ex parte Jackson, 77 Pac. 457, 460, 143 Cal. 564.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

A municipal corporation is a subordinate branch of the domestic government of the state. It is instituted for public purposes only, and has none of the peculiar qualities and characteristics of a trading corporation, instituted for the purpose of private gain, except that of acting in a corporate capacity. Its objects, its responsibilities, and its powers are different. As a local governmental institution it exists for the benefit of the people within its corporate limits. The Legislature invests it with such powers as it deems adequate to the ends to be accomplished. State v. Butler, 77 S. W. 560, 570, 178 Mo. 272 (quoting Nashville v. Ray, 86 U. S. [19 Wall.] 468, 475, 22 L. Ed. 164).

A municipal corporation is a subordinate subdivision of the state government. It derives its existence, powers, and privileges from the state. State v. City of Aberdeen, 74 Pac. 1022, 1023, 34 Wash. 61.

A municipal corporation proper is created mainly for the interest, advantage, and convenience of the locality and its people. People v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 172, 31 Colo. 369 (citing 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 23).

Municipal corporations are instrumentalities of the state for the more convenient administration of local affairs, and for that purpose are invested with certain legislative powers. Wolff v. City of Denver (Colo.) 77 Pac. 364, 365 (citing Lewis v. Denver City Waterworks Co., 19 Colo. 236, 34 Pac. 993, 41 Am. St. Rep. 248).

A municipal corporation, in the machinery of the state, is a mere agency. It possesses no inherent and independent authority to create rights in others which affect the public interests. Rhinehart v. Redfield, 87 N. Y. Supp. 789, 791, 93 App. Div. 410.

MUNICIPAL OFFICER.

Judges of city courts, organized by Rev. St. 1899, c. 87, § 240, are municipal officers, within Const. art. 9, § 11, providing that the fees, salary, or compensation of no municipal officer elected or appointed for a definite term shall be increased or diminished during the term. Wolf v. Hope, 70 N. E. 1082, 1087, 210 Ill. 50.

A private policeman or watchman employed by a private corporation, who is paid by the corporation and who may be discharged by it, is not a municipal officer, so as to make his wages exempt from garnishment, notwithstanding the fact that he was empowered to make arrests and subject to the supervision and control of the city police department. Tabb v. Mallette, 47 S. E. 587, 588, 120 Ga. 97.

MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE.

A municipal ordinance is a local law, affecting the property, rights, and liberty of citizens, who are entitled to know at what time and under what circumstances it acquires that status. Mayor and Board of Trustees of Town of New Iberia v. Moss Hotel Co., 36 South. 552, 553, 112 La. 525.

MURDER.

See "Assault with Intent to Murder." Manslaughter distinguished, see "Manslaughter."

Murder is where a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully kills any human being under the peace of the state, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. The chief characteristic of this crime, distinguishing it from manslaughter and every other kind of homicide, and therefore indispensably necessary to be proved, is malice preconceived or aforethought. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262.

The crime of murder is the unlawful killing of a human creature in being with malice aforethought, either express or implied. If the killing is proved, it must be also proved that it was done with malice, either express or implied, before the person charged can be convicted of murder; but such malice may be implied from any unlawful act, such as in itself denotes a wicked heart fatally bent on mischief, or a reckless disregard of human life. The deliberate selection of a deadly weapon has been held to be evidence of malice, and where malice exists, together with the killing, the crime of murder is complete. State v. Scott (Del.) 57 Atl. 534, 535.

MURDER IN FIRST DEGREE.

Willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, without any motive appearing at all, is murder in the first degree. State v. Jaggers (N. J.) 58 Atl. 1014, 1015.

To constitute murder in the first degree it is not essential that there should be any appreciable space of time between the intent to kill and the act of killing; i. e., any interval "capable of being appreciated or duly estimated." The intent to kill must be formed deliberately and with premeditation; but, when so formed, there need be no appreciable space of time between the intent and the act. People v. Suesser, 75 Pac. 1093, 1097, 142 Cal. 354.

If a person inflicts upon another a fatal wound, intending thereby to cause that other's death, and such intention is effected, there being no attending circumstances rendering the homicide justifiable or excusable, such person is guilty of murder in the first degree. Cupps v. State (Wis.) 97 N. W. 210.

If a person takes the life of another by an act naturally calculated to produce that result, in the absence of any explanatory circumstance or circumstances rendering the homicide excusable or justifiable, or criminal in some degree less than the highest, or creating a reasonable doubt in regard to one of such contingencies, the law presumes that he intended the result effected, and he is guilty of murder in the first degree. Cupps v. State (Wis.) 97 N. W. 210.

MURDER IN SECOND DEGREE

Murder in the second degree is where there is no such deliberate mind and formed design to take life, but where, nevertheless, the killing is malicious and without justification or excuse, without any provocation, or without sufficient provocation to reduce the homicide to the grade of manslaughter. State v. Emory (Del.) 58 Atl. 1036, 1038.

MUTILATE.

"Mutilate" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as follows: "To cut off or deprive of a limb or essential part of, as an animal body; maim; cut or break off, or otherwise remove any part of, as a statue; disfigure; to retrench, remove, expunge, or delete an essential or material part of, so as to render incomplete or imperfect, as a literary composition; as to mutilate a speech." The main idea of such a definition is the removal of an essential part, so that the whole is rendered imperfect. A railroad ticket is not mutilated, within the meaning of a stipulation on the face thereof that it should not be good for passage if mutilated in any way, where both pieces are presented to the conductor at the same time, and it is apparent that they are parts of the same ticket, and that together they form the entire ticket. Young v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 47 S. E. 556, 120 Ga. 25, 65 L. R. A. 436.

MUTUALITY.

A contract is void for lack of "mutuality" where there is no consideration for the promise of one party to furnish or sell so much of the commodity as the other may want, except the promise of the other to take and pay for so much of the commodity as he may want, and there is no agreement that he shall want any quantity whatever, and no method exists by which it can be determined whether he will want any of the commodity, or what quantity he will want. Higbie v. Rust, 71 N. E. 1010, 1011, 211 Ill. 333.

An engagement lacks "mutuality" where one party is bound and the other is not; for example, where one offers to supply another with such goods of a certain kind as he may choose to order or may wish during a certain time, and the other accepts the offer. In such case, there is no consideration for the promise or offer; for the promisee has not bound himself to anything and has incurred no legal liability at all. Steinwender-Stoffregen Coffee Co. v. F. T. Guenther Grocery Co. (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1170, 1171 (citing 7 Cyc. 327).

MY.

All my property, see "All."

My farm.

A devise of "my farm" includes, not only the testator's homestead, but also other outlying lots, which had been used by the testator in carrying on the business of farming for years before he wrote his will, and which had been referred to in business transactions as his farm. Scoville v. Mason, 57 Atl. 114, 115, 76 Conn. 459.

My legal heirs.

A clause in a will providing for the division of property among "my legal heirs" refers to the next of kin and legal heirs of the testator, and does not include the next of kin or legal heirs of his wife. Miller v. Metcalf, 58 Atl. 743, 744, 77 Conn. 176.

My moneys, bonds, etc.

A bequest to a hospital of "my moneys, bonds, notes, and money in savings bank" included railroad stock and scrip, when considered in the light of the other provisions and the general construction of testator's will, which provided for the payment of all testator's debts and two small legacies, then disposed of testator's live stock, household furniture, and land to the hospital, which left to be disposed of merely notes, bonds, money in savings bank, and the railroad stock and scrip; the stock and scrip being avails of the bonds, and the testator's evident intention being to dispose of the bulk of his whole estate to the hospital. Scoville v. Mason, 57 Atl. 114, 115, 76 Conn. 459.

NARROW.

See, also, "Galloon."

The word "narrow," as used in the definition of "galloon" as a "narrow, tapelike fabric used for binding hats, shoes, etc.," is a relative term of varying meanings. It is easy to conceive of a tapelike fabric so narrow as to come within the definition, and equally easy to conceive of one so wide that it must fall without it. There is nothing in the dictionary which indicates just where the dividing line occurs. Certain woven cotton articles, from 1 to 2½ inches wide, chiefly used as hat bands for trimming men's hats, are not galloons, under Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, § 1, Schedule I, par. 263, 23 Stat. 529. United States v. Walter H. Graef & Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 688, 689, 62 O. C. A. 414.

NATURAL STATE.

See "Arrowroot in Its Natural State."

NAVIGABLE.

A stream which in its natural state can be practicably used for the floating of shingle bolts to market is a navigable stream. Monroe Mill Co. v. Menzel, 77 Pac. 813, 815, 35 Wash. 487.

The navigability of a stream is shown where it appears that, a great many years previously, boats navigated it at certain seasons of the year, and there is no evidence that its condition has changed. Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal & Land Co., 75 Pac. 770, 771, 142 Cal. 208, 100 Am. St. Rep. 115.

A navigable stream is a highway open to the use of all. State v. Charleston Light & Water Co., 47 S. E. 979, 983, 68 S. C. 540.

"If a stream is 'navigable in fact, it is navigable in law.' Gould, Waters (3d Ed.) § 67. The capability of being used for purposes of trade and travel in the usual and ordinary mode is the test, and not the extent and manner of such use. * * * Navigability cannot be affected by the conditions on the adjacent land, such as there being a large town on the shore, with numerous streets and wharves, or whether * * * one riparian owner has a monopoly of the land, with no public road to the water, thus cutting off access to the land. It is the navigability of the water that is the test." State v. Twiford (N. C.) 48 S. E. 586, 587.

A slough emptying into the sea, which during the ebb and flow of the tide is navigable for scows and for rafting and booming logs, is a navigable stream. Dawson v. McMillan, 75 Pac. 807, 808, 34 Wash. 269.

NAVIGABLE WATER OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Erie Canal, which, though lying wholly within the state of New York, forms a part of a continuous highway for interstate and foreign commerce by connecting Lake Erie with the Hudson river, is a navigable water of the United States, as contradistinguished from a navigable water of the state. Perry v. Haines, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 11, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

NAVIGATION.

Navigation is defined by Bouvier as whatever relates to traversing the sea in ships; the art of ascertaining the geographical position of a ship and directing its course. The construction of a dock, while it may be useful to individuals engaged in navigation, is not involved in the public right of navigation as understood by the law. Trustees of Town of Brookhaven v. Smith, 90 N. Y. Supp. 646, 651.

NECESSARILY INCLUDED.

To be "necessarily included" in the offense charged, the lesser offense must not only be part of the greater in fact, but it must be embraced within the legal definition of the greater as a part thereof. People v. Kerrick, 77 Pac. 711, 712, 144 Cal. 48.

NECESSARY.

The word "necessary," as used in Rev. St. 1898, c. 48, providing for the taxation of railroads according to gross profits, and section 1038, subd. 14, declaring that all the track, right of way, depot grounds, and buildings, machine shops, rolling stock, and all other property necessarily used in operating any railroad, shall be exempt from taxation for any purpose, except special assessments for local improvements, means neither inevitable nor merely convenient or profitable, but refers to a stage of utility or materiality to the general business of a common carrier less than the first and greater than the latter of such expressions. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co. v. Douglas County (Wis.) 99 N. W. 1030, 1031.

The word "necessary," as used in Rev. St. c. 34, § 26, making it the duty of the county board of each county to provide a suitable courthouse when "necessary" and the finances of the county will justify it, "is not to be interpreted as referring to such measures as are absolutely and indispensably necessary, but as including all appropriate means which are conducive or are adapted to the end to be accomplished, and which in the judgment of the board will most advantageously effect it." Coles County v. Goehring, 70 N. E. 610, 617, 209 Ill. 142.

NECESSARY EXPENSES.

Any and all necessary expenses, see "Any."

NECESSARY IMPLICATION.

"Necessary implication means, not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of an intention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be imposed. Galloway v. Durham (Ky.) 81 S. W. 659, 660 (quoting 1 Ves. & B. 468).

NECESSARY PARTY.

See "Not a Necessary Party."

NECESSITY.

See "Work of Necessity."

NEGATIVE PREGNANT.

A denial that the defendants are indebted to plaintiff in the precise sum charged in the petition, and that the use and occupation of the premises is worth the sum mentioned in the petition, is a "negative pregnant," and is no denial at all; and where such a pleading is filed by way of an answer the allegations of the petition are treated as admitted. Jackson v. Green, 74 Pac. 502, 503, 13 Okl. 314.

Where a plaintiff alleges that he is and has been for the last 10 years the owner and in possession of land, an answer denying that plaintiff is and has been for the last 10 years the owner and in possession of the land, is in form a "negative pregnant." J. I. Porter Lumber Co. v. Hill (Ark.) 77 S. W. 905, 906.

A finding by a jury that a sheriff had not neglected and failed to present and have approved his official bond as sheriff, and take the oath of office, within the time prescribed by law, amounts to a "negative pregnant," and should be treated as an admission of the implied fact. State v. Box (Tex.) 78 S. W. 982, 984.

NEGLECT.

The word "neglect," as used in Rev. St. Idaho, § 4100, providing that, when a person's death is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs and personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, stands in the same category with wrongful act, and implies some omission of duty. The death of a free passenger on a railway train, not due to the omission on the part of the railway company of any duty owing to deceased, cannot be considered as caused by the neglect of the railroad company, and hence the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased cannot maintain an action under the section. Northern P. R. Co. v. Adams, 24 Sup. Ct. 408, 409, 192 U. S. 440, 48 L. Ed. 513.

NEGLIGENCE.

See "Actionable Negligence"; "Contributory Negligence"; "Gross Negligence"; "Hazardous Negligence"; "Ordinary Negligence"; "Wanton Negligence."

Negligence is the absence of care, according to the circumstances. Martin v. City of Williamsport, 57 Atl. 1063, 208 Pa. 590; Drinkwater v. Quaker City Cooperage Co., 57 Atl. 1107, 208 Pa. 649.

The simplest definition of negligence is absence of due care under the circumstances. Nord v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. (Mont.) 75 Pac. 681, 684.

Negligence implies a failure to do something which duty or prudence requires should have been done. Gill v. Fugate (Ky.) 78 S. W. 188, 191.

Negligence is the failure to do something that the doer in the exercise of ordinary care should have done. Shemwell v. Owensboro & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 78 S. W. 448, 449.

Negligence is a failure to do what reasonable and prudent persons would ordinarily have done under the circumstances and situations. L. W. Pomerene Co. v. White (Neb.)

97 N. W. 232, 233 (citing Omaha St. Ry. Co. v. Craig, 39 Neb. 601, 58 N. W. 209).

Negligence is the failure to exercise such care as ordinarily prudent persons exercise under like or similar circumstances. Kentucky & I. Bridge & R. Co. v. Shrader (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1094, 1095.

"Negligence is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do, provided, of course, that the party whose conduct is in question is already in a situation that brings him under the duty of taking care." Northern P. R. Co. v. Adams, 24 Sup. Ct. 408, 409, 192 U. S. 440, 48 L. Ed. 513 (quoting Pollock, Torts, p. 355, quoting from Baron Alderson in Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 11 Exch. 784).

Negligence in a legal sense is a failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another person, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. While the obligation to exercise care in the conduct of one's business varies under different circumstances, there always remains the duty to exercise such reasonable care as should be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence under like circumstances. Szymanski v. Blumenthal (Del.) 56 Atl. 674, 675 (citing Tully v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. [Del.] 2 Pennewill, 537, 47 Atl. 1019, 82 Am. St. Rep. 425).

Negligence is the doing of something which under the circumstances a reasonable person would not do, or the omission to do something, in the discharge of a legal duty, which under the circumstances a reasonable person would do, and which act of commission or omission, as a natural consequence directly following, produces damages to another. Williams v. Belmont Coal & Coke Co. (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 802, 804 (quoting Washington v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 17 W. Va. 190).

Negligence is the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person, under the existing circumstances, would not have done. The duty is dictated and measured by the exigencies of the occasion. Klenk v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 76 Pac. 214, 215, 27 Utah, 428.

Negligence is the want of ordinary care, or such care as persons of average prudence would exercise under the same circumstances. A mere error in judgment is not necessarily negligence. Carney v. Concord St. Ry. Co., 57 Atl. 218, 222, 72 N. H. 364.

An essential ingredient to any conception of negligence is that it involves the violation of some legal duty which one person owes another—a duty to take care for the safety of the person or property of the other. This duty may be assumed by contract, or it may be imposed by implication of law. Phoenix Light & Fuel Co. v. Bennett (Ariz.) 74 Pac. 48, 50, 63 L. R. A. 219.

Negligence has been termed the want of ordinary care; that is, the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under similar circumstances. It has been termed the failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. Di Prisco v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 57 Atl. 906, 909.

Negligence is not a thing, but a relation. "The word 'negligence' implies a duty to use due diligence, and such a duty may be owed to one person, and not to another." Boston & M. R. R. v. Sargent, 57 Atl. 688, 691, 72 N. H. 455 (quoting Mowbray v. Merryweather [1895] 2 Q. B. Div. 640, 647).

There can be no negligence where there is no legal duty. Cumberland Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Martin's Adm'r (Ky.) 77 S. W. 718.

An act done willingly and on full information is not done negligently. Negligence is the result of inattention or oversight. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works (Mo.) 80 S. W. 292, 296.

An essential ingredient of any conception of the law of negligence is that it involves the violation of a legal duty which one person owes another, the duty to take care for the safety or property of the other; and the converse proposition is that, where there is no legal duty to exercise care, there can be no actionable negligence. Saylor v. Parsons, 98 N. W. 500, 502, 122 Iowa, 679, 64 L. R. A. 542 (quoting Thomp. Neg. § 3).

Negligence consists in doing or permitting an act by which a legal duty or obligation has been violated. Glaser v. Rothschild (Mo.) 80 S. W. 332, 334 (citing Sweeny v. Old Colony & N. R. Co., 92 Mass. [10 Allen] 372, 87 Am. Dec. 644).

Negligence and carelessness are generally esteemed as not only not willfulness, but rather the opposite. Schooler v. Harrington, 81 S. W. 468, 469, 106 Mo. App. 607 (following Gibeline v. Smith, 80 S. W. 961, 106 Mo. App. 545).

Negligence, when applied to a railroad company and its employes and servants while receiving and transporting passengers, means the failure to use that degree of care which very cautious, prudent, and competent persons usually exercise. St. John v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 80 S. W. 235, 236.

Negligence of a railroad company, whereby fire is communicated to adjacent premises, may consist in not being provided with the best appliances to prevent the unnecessary escape of fire from its locomotives, in not keeping such appliances in repair, in not keeping its right of way free from combustible material, in operating its locomotives so as to unnecessarily scatter fire, and in not arresting the spread of fire after it has been set by its engines from its negligence on its right of way. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fort (Tenn.) 80 S. W. 429, 434 (citing Thomp. Neg.).

The question of negligence is determinable by what an ordinarily prudent person would have done under the same or similar circumstances. If a person of ordinary prudence, standing in the place of an engineer, would have kept a lookout and discovered the burning bridge in time to have stopped the engine or slackened its speed, so that plaintiff, the fireman, could have alighted with reasonable safety before reaching the bridge, the failure of the engineer to do what such person of ordinary prudence would have done would constitute negligence. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Keaveney (Tex.) 80 S. W. 387, 389.

NEGLIGENT OPERATION.

Negligent operation is the failure to use the proper means at hand in a proper and careful way as persons of ordinary prudence do under like conditions for their own safety. Central Coal & Iron Co. v. Pearce (Ky.) 80 S. W. 449, 450.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

A negotiable instrument is one that is simple, certain, and unconditional, and is so defined by the law merchant. It has always been held, both at the common law and by the decisions of most states, that any instrument which does not come within this definition should not be construed to be a negotiable instrument. Randolph v. Hudson, 74 Pac. 946, 948, 12 Okl. 516.

NEITHER PARTY, ETC.

The entry of "Neither party, no further action, same cause," means that by agreement neither party further appears in court in that suit, and it also involves a stipulation that the plaintiff shall maintain no further action for the same cause. The plaintiff's cause of action is extinguished. Gendron v. Hovey, 56 Ati. 523, 98 Me. 139.

NET PROFITS.

Net profits may be construed to mean what is left after deducting from the selling price the actual cost price, together with all expenses incidental to the procurement of the property. Cooke v. Cain, 77 Pac. 682-684, 35 Wash. 353.

NEW BILL.

If the amendment or substituted bill presents a measure that has no relation to the bill as originally introduced, it cannot stand, for it is in substance a new measure or bill. If the substitute has a clear relation to the subject of the original bill, it can be said to be germane, and will not be treated as a new bill. A bill to provide for a board of county auditors for a designated county was introduced and referred to a committee. The committee reported the bill, with a substitute identically like the original bill, except that another county was substituted for that of the county mentioned in the original bill. Under the definition this change made the substitute a new bill. People v. Loomis (Mich.) 98 N. W. 262, 265.

NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

The expression "new cause of action" can be taken, when used on the subject of amendment, as intending nothing more than a new right or claim arising out of the same transaction. If it were not so—that is, if the new cause of action was one arising out of a wholly different transaction from that laid in the complaint—then it would constitute what we have sometimes designated as an entirely new cause of action, and one which could not be introduced into the complaint by amendment, if objected to. Identity of transaction is therefore the basis for the introduction by way of amendment of counts on new claims or rights arising out of the same. Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 36 South. 707, 709, 139 Ala. 578.

NEW STRUCTURE.

Where the owner of a building remodeled and reconstructed internally, and also reconstructed with new material some or all of its walls, so as to substantially enhance the value of the premises, such new parts and the remodeling and improvements of the old may be returned by the assessor as "new structures," within Rev. St. 1892, § 2753, requiring the assessor to make and return a list of all new structures of any kind. Lewis v. State, 69 N. E. 980, 982, 69 Ohio St. 473.

NEW TRIAL.

See "Motion for New Trial."

NEWSPAPER.

A "newspaper" is defined as a publication issued at regular stated intervals, containing, among other things, the current news or news of the day. A publication printed daily, except Sundays and legal holidays, and devoted to the dissemination of news on a great variety of topics of interest to the general reader, but giving special prominence to legal news, including the proceedings in the Supreme Court of the state and of the local courts sitting in the state, is a newspaper. Puget Sound Pub. Co. v. Times Printing Co., 74 Pac. 802, 804, 33 Wash. 551 (citing 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] p. 533).

A weekly publication, printed and circulated in a city, containing the current news and matters of general interest, as well as the local happenings, is a "newspaper," within the meaning of the statute requiring the publication of city ordinances, although its circulation may be very limited. Kansas City v. Overton (Kan.) 75 Pac. 549, 550.

NEXT FRIEND.

The guardian and next friend, in conducting a civil action, are a "species of attorney, whose duty it is to bring the rights of the infant to the notice of the court," and the authority of each is limited to the proceeding in which he is appointed. Williams v. Cleaveland, 58 Atl. 850, 853, 76 Conn. 428.

NEXT HIGHEST BIDDER.

The phrase "next highest bidder," as used in Act Cal. March 11, 1901, relating to the granting of a street railway franchise by a municipality to the next highest bidder on the failure of a successful bidder to make the requisite deposit within a specified time, refers to bids already made, and not to a bid or bids to be made. It expresses the relation between bids in existence—those already made and pending before the council. It is only in comparison with the next highest of those that the words have significance. Pacific Electric R. Co. v. Los Angeles, 24 Sup. Ct. 586, 589, 194 U. S. 112, 48 L. Ed. 896.

NEXT OF KIN.

"The term 'next of kin' is used to signify the relatives of a person, sometimes in the sense of nearest blood relatives and at other times in the sense of relatives entitled to take under the statute of distribution." Graham v. Whitridge (Md.) 57 Atl. 609, 617, 66 L. R. A. 408, Id., 58 Atl. 36, 66 L. R. A. 408 (citing 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 537).

The words "next of kin," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2643, relating to letters of administration with will annexed, where there is no executor qualified to act, and providing in subdivision 3 that where the residuary, principal, or specified legatee, or the guardian of a minor, entitled to letters, either do not exist or will not accept administration, letters shall issue to one or more of the next of kin, must be limited to such of the next of kin as are entitled to share in the unbequeathed assets of the estate, and who are therefore persons interested therein; and a person having no such right is to be excluded. In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 559, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

It is only as to the adopting parent that the adopted child is made heir or next of kin by the statute, Comp. Laws 1897, § 8780, providing that an adopted child shall become the heir at law of the person adopting it; and the adopted child, therefore, is not heir by right of representation of the kindred of the person who adopted it. Van Derlyn v. Mack (Mich.) 100 N. W. 278, 280, 66 L. R. A. 437 (quoting Helms v. Elliott, 14 S. W. 930, 89 Tenn. 446, 10 L. R. A. 535).

NEXT OF KINDRED.

The words "next of kindred," as used in a will limiting a remainder on a trust estate after the beneficiary's death to her next of kindred, include the beneficiary's nephew and niece in preference to her grandnephews and grandnieces. Graham v. Whitridge (Md.) 57 Atl. 609, 617, 66 L. R. A. 408; Id., 58 Atl. 36, 66 L. R. A. 408.

NO CAUSE OF ACTION.

The direction of a verdict of "no cause of action" at the close of plaintiff's proof, on motion for nonsuit on the ground of failure to prove absence of contributory negligence, is equivalent to a nonsuit because of insufficiency of the evidence, and not because of the insufficiency of the complaint. Romaine v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 248, 249, 91 App. Div. 1.

NO FURTHER ACTION.

See "Neither Party, Etc."

NOMINAL DAMAGES.

"Nominal damages are a small and trivial sum, awarded for a technical injury, due to a violation or invasion of some legal right, and as a consequence of which some damages must be awarded to determine the right. They are not given as an equivalent for the wrong, but in recognition of a technical injury. There need be no actual damage, however small. They are called nominal damages, in contradistinction to actual, substantial, or compensatory damages. They are damages in name only, not in fact. They have been described as a peg on which to hang costs; but they are still recognized as the subject of a substantial legal claim, and the party is entitled to them if he can show any injury to his right. If he establishes a cause of action—that is, an injury in its technical sense—and fails to show any damage, or damage, he can recover nominal damages.” Chaffin v. Fries Mfg. & Power Co., 47 S. E. 226, 228, 135 N. C. 95.

NOMINATION.

See “Party Nomination.”

NONJOINER OF PARTIES.

“A nonjoinder, or, as expressed in the Code, ‘a defect, of parties plaintiff or defendant,’ means sufficient parties, and has no application to a case of too many parties, or the joining of a person having no interest in the litigation.” Mader v. Plano Mfg. Co. (S. D.) 97 N. W. 843, 845.

NONPECUNIARY DAMAGES.

Nonpecuniary damages are those the amount of which cannot be determined by any known rule, but depend upon the enlightened judgment of an impartial court or jury. In this class are included damages for pain, suffering, loss of reputation, impairment of faculties, etc. L. W. Pomerene Co. v. White (Neb.) 97 N. W. 232, 234.

NONRESIDENT.

The words “nonresidents of that estate,” as used in Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, and Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 508, 509], providing that any suit of a civil nature at law or in equity, of which the Circuit Courts of the United States are given jurisdiction, may be removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the proper district, by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state, are equivalent to the words “not being citizens of that state.” Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 789, 791 (citing Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 151 U. S. 676, 677, 14 Sup. Ct. 533, 38 L. Ed. 311).

NONSUIT.

See “Motion for Nonsuit.”

Retraxit distinguished, see “Retraxit.”

NOON.

The word “noon” in an insurance policy means noon by sun time. Meier v. Phoenix Ins. Co., decision of lower court of Ohio, affirmed in the Supreme Court on an equal division, and unreported. See 32 Ins. Law J. 192.

In construing a policy of insurance on a vessel, ending at “noon” of a certain date, it is held that the parties must be considered as regarding the meridian of the place where the contract is made, unless some other one is mentioned in it. Walker v. Protection Ins. Co., 29 Me. 317, 321.

NORTH RIVER.

The words “North river,” as used in a marine policy on a scow, containing the following provision: “Warranted by the assured to be employed exclusively in the freighting business, and to navigate only the waters of the bay and harbor of New York, the North and East rivers, and inland waters of New Jersey”—cannot be extended by construction to include tributaries of the Hudson in the state of New York, and there can be no recovery under the policy for an injury to the scow received while she was lying in a dock in Rondout Creek, 2½ miles from the Hudson. Hastorf v. Greenwich Ins. Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 122, 124.

NOT A NECESSARY PARTY.

The term “not a necessary party” means that the suit can proceed just as well without him, and in that event, if his presence has the effect to hinder or burden the case, he may be dropped. Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 893, 178 Mo. 528.

NOTE.

See “Action on a Note”; “Promissory Note.”

As property, see “Property.”

NOTICE.

See “Actual Notice”; “Constructive Notice”; “Immediate Notice”; “Requisite Notice.”

Actual knowledge synonymous, see “Actual Knowledge.”

Citation distinguished, see “Citation.”

The word “notice” means actual notice, in Pub. St. 1882, c. 144, § 9, providing that, when an account of a trustee is settled in the absence of a person adversely interested and without notice to him, such account may be opened on the application of such person. Parker v. Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 71 N. E. 806, 807, 186 Mass. 393.

NOVATION.

A novation is the substitution of one obligation for another. Tilden v. Gordon & Co., 74 Pac. 1016, 1017, 34 Wash. 92.

A novation requires the creation of new contractual relations, as well as the extinguishment of old. There must be the consent of all the parties to the substitution, resulting in the extinction of the old obligation and the creation of a valid new one. Held v. Caldwell-Easton Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 954, 955, 97 App. Div. 301.

NOW DUE AND PAYABLE.

The allegation of a counterclaim, that plaintiff's indebtedness is "now due and payable," even treated as a statement of fact, does not show that the counterclaim existed at the time of the commencement of the action, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 438. Provident Mut. Building Loan Ass'n v. Davis, 76 Pac. 1034, 1035, 143 Cal. 253.

NOXIOUS POTION OR SUBSTANCE.

"Noxious" means "hurtful, harmful, baneful, pernicious, destructive." "Potion" means "draught used as a liquid, medicine, or dose" (Webster, Dict.). "Poison" has been defined as "any substance which, when applied to the body externally, or in any way introduced into the system, without acting mechanically, but by its own inherent qualities, is capable of destroying life" (Beck, Med. Jur.), and "as a substance having an inherent deleterious property, which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life" (Wharton & Stillé). The term "noxious potion or substance" is a broader term than "poison." "Poison" would not include powdered glass or boiling water, while "noxious potion or substance" would not only embrace poisons, but the latter. As used in a statute inflicting a punishment on any one mingling "any other noxious potion or substance with any drug, food, or medicine, with intent to kill or injure any person," the word "potion" applies to some hurtful or baneful liquid; and the words "noxious substance" means some solid of hurtful or baneful character. The phrase "noxious potion or substance" means some character of poison. Runnels v. State (Tex.) 77 S. W. 458, 460.

NUISANCE.

"Anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage to another, or his property, may constitute a nuisance." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Anderson (Tex.) 81 S. W. 781, 787 (quoting Burditt v. Swenson, 17 Tex. 489, 501, 67 Am. Dec. 665).

A nuisance is defined as an unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use of one's own property to the annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or damage of another. Pritchard v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 225, 226, 92 App. Div. 178.

"'Nuisance,' in its largest sense, signifies anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. It is either public, annoying all the parties in the community, or it is private, injuriously affecting the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of an individual" (Blackstone). "A 'nuisance,' in the ordinary sense in which the word is used, is anything that produces an annoyance, anything that disturbs one or is offensive; but in legal phraseology it is applied to that class of wrongs that arise from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, real or personal, or from his own improper, indecent, or unlawful personal conduct, working an obstruction of or injury to a right of another or of the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt that the law will presume a consequent damage. Indeed, it may be stated as a general proposition that every enjoyment by one of his own property, which violates the right of another in an essential degree, is a nuisance, and actionable as such at the suit of the party injured thereby. While it is true that every person has and may exercise exclusive dominion over his own property of every description, and has a right to enjoy it in all the ways and for all the purposes in which such property is usually enjoyed, yet this is subject to the qualification that his use and enjoyment of it must be reasonable, and such as will not prejudicially affect the rights of others." Baker v. McDaniel, 77 S. W. 531, 537, 178 Mo. 447 (quoting Wood, Nuis.).

"The term nuisance has a well-defined legal meaning. A thing cannot be declared a nuisance which is in fact not a nuisance." Boyd v. Board of Councilmen (Ky.) 77 S. W. 669, 673.

"What is a nuisance is a relative question oftener than it is an abstract fact. Blackstone was wise in not attempting an explicit and invariable definition, and in confining himself to general terms. He said a nuisance is 'anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage.'" City of St. Louis v. Galt, 77 S. W. 876, 879, 179 Mo. 8, 63 L. R. A. 778.

"The test of nuisance is not injury and damage simply, but injury and damage resulting from the violation of the legal right of another. There is no nuisance, however much of injury and damage may ensue; but, if a right is violated, there is an actionable nuisance, even though no actual damage results therefrom. Powell v. Brookfield Pressed Brick & Tile Mfg. Co., 78 S. W. 646, 647, 104 Mo. App. 713 (quoting Wood, Nuis. 1015).

"Under the statutes anything which produces noxious exhalations, offensive smells, or other annoyances, injurious to the health, comfort, or property of individuals, is a nuisance. It is not necessary that these odors be deleterious to health. It is sufficient if they offend the senses in such a manner as to produce actual discomfort." Rhoades v. Cook, 98 N. W. 122, 123, 122 Iowa, 336.

NULL

The terms "null" and "void" are used interchangeably. "Void" is defined as having no legal force, entirely null, incapable of confirmation or ratification; and "null" is defined as of no legal or binding force or validity, of no efficacy, invalid, void, nugatory, useless, or of no account or significance. Forrester & MacGinniss v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 74 Pac. 1088, 1091, 29 Mont. 397 (citing Standard Dict.).

O. K.

"O. K." may have no title to be classed as elegant English, but in the business life of this country it has for many years been in common use, and has acquired a meaning which is not at all obscure or uncertain. Webster's International Dictionary defines it as "all correct." The Century Dictionary gives its meaning as "all right; correct; now commonly used as an indorsement, as on a bill." It is neither more nor less than a brief, but expressive, certificate of the correctness of the bill or claim on which it is indorsed. Hence mere "O. K." indorsements on bills by architects are a sufficient compliance with a contract for the erection of a building requiring an estimate to be given by the architect for 85 per cent. of work and materials, and providing that payments shall be made on written certificates of the architects, without designating any particular form of certificate. Getchell & Martin Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Petterson & Sampson (Iowa) 100 N. W. 550, 554.

OATH.

The word "oath" does not necessarily imply perjury, for an oath may be taken outside of judicial proceedings, or by other lawful authority, and, although false, would not be perjury, but only false swearing. United States v. Howard (U. S.) 132 Fed. 325, 338.

OBITER DICTA.

"Made 'by the way,' and without argument or consideration." Commonwealth v. Paine, 56 Atl. 317, 319, 207 Pa. 45.

OBJECT.

"The object of an action is the relief demanded; the recovery of damages or the land or personality sued for; the restraint or other relief demanded." Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. (N. C.) 48 S. E. 642, 643.

OBLIGATION.

See "Moral Obligation"; "Pecuniary Obligation."

A loan to the owner of a homestead, to pay a note due for the purchase money of the homestead, the lender taking the owner's note, with an indorsement of a third person thereon to whom he looks for payment, is not an "obligation," within a constitutional exception rendering a homestead liable for an obligation contracted for the purchase thereof. Wilhelm v. Locklar (Fla.) 35 South. 6.

OBSCENE.

The word "obscene," when used, as in the statute, to describe the character of a book, pamphlet, or paper, means containing immodest and indecent matter, the reading whereof would have a tendency to deprave and corrupt the minds of those into whose hands the publication might fall, whose minds are open to such immoral influences. United States v. Moore (U. S.) 129 Fed. 159, 161 (citing United States v. Clark [U. S.] 88 Fed. 732).

A remark to a married woman: "Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?" will not sustain a conviction for using obscene and vulgar language in the presence of a female, where there is nothing in the evidence to indicate that the remark was intended to convey an obscene and vulgar meaning. Roberts v. State, 47 S. E. 511, 512, 120 Ga. 177.

OBSERVE.

The word "observe" is defined to mean "to notice with care; to be on the watch respecting." An employé has the right to assume that a machine is safe, and is chargeable with notice of dangers or defects that are plain and obvious to view, but is not bound to make an inspection to ascertain if the machine is free from defects; that is, he is not required "to take notice with care" and "to be on the watch" for defects or imperfections, which would be implied from the use of the word "observe" in an instruction that the law required him to be observing, and that his failure to observe what he should have observed would defeat a recovery. Rock Island Sash & Door Works v. Pohlman, 71 N. E. 428, 430, 210 Ill. 133.

OBTAIN.

"Obtain" means "to get hold of by effort," "to get possession of," or "to have in possession." On an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses, it appeared that defendant, in Pennsylvania, to establish a financial credit, made written statements to a company in New York, which relied on the same, and accepted his order for goods, and delivered them to a carrier, and they were received in Pennsylvania by the person making the order. Held that, such statements being false and fraudulent, defendant was guilty of "obtaining" goods in Pennsylvania under false pretenses. Commonwealth v. Schmunk, 56 Atl. 1088, 1089, 207 Pa. 544, 99 Am. St. Rep. 801.

OCCUPANCY — OCCUPATION — OCCUPY.

See "Action for Use and Occupation"; "Actual Occupancy"; "Ready for Occupancy"; "Unoccupied."

"Occupancy" does not necessarily include residence. Webster defines "occupancy" as "the act of taking or holding possession," and an "occupant" as "one who occupies or takes possession; one who has the actual use or possession, or is in possession of a thing." Twiggs v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 75 Pac. 729, 731, 27 Utah, 241.

The word "occupation," as used in a statute providing that every contract or agreement for the leasing, rent, and occupation of buildings, not in writing, shall be a tenancy from month to month, terminable only by a month's written notice, does not mean a mere possession of premises by any one who happens to be in them or get in them, but means an occupation pursuant to an agreement between the owner and the occupier, sufficient to create the relation of landlord and tenant. Permission of a landlord to a tenant, on moving out, to leave boxes in the building for a few days, on the understanding that the tenant would turn the premises over clean and in good condition, is not such an occupation. Sterling v. Helmann (Mo.) 82 S. W. 539, 540.

"Occupied" implies actual possession, not constructive possession. A testator gave to his housekeeper for life the use of certain premises occupied by him. A portion of the premises was at the time of his death occupied by him as a residence, and a portion by a bank paying a monthly rental. The housekeeper acquired the use of the portion of the premises occupied as a residence only. In re Handley's Estate, 57 Atl. 755, 757, 208 Pa. 388.

Under White's Ann. Pen. Code, arts. 839a, 845a, 845b, declaring that the term "private residence" shall be construed to be any building or room occupied and actually used at the time of the offense by any person or persons as a place of residence, it is not necessary that the family be personally present at the very time it is burglarized, in order to constitute the offense of burglary of a private residence. It is sufficient, if it is actually used at the time as a private residence, though at the time it was burglarized the family was temporarily absent. Handy v. State (Tex.) 80 S. W. 526.

OCCUPATION.

The application for a life policy stated that assured's occupation was "dealer in pumps and well supplies." The policy stipulated that enumerated occupations, such as "blasting, mining, and handling or transporting of inflammable or explosive substances" were risks not assumed by the insurer during the first year. The assured died within the year by reason of an explosion during an attempt to blow out a well casing with dynamite in the course of his designated business. The risk of using the dynamite did not constitute a risk not assumed by the insurer; the stipulation in the policy relating to an occupation different from that named in the application as assured's occupation. Mortensen v. Central Life Assur. Ass'n (Iowa) 99 N. W. 1059.

OCCUPIED BY ITS TRACKS.

The phrase "occupied by its tracks," in Pub. St. 1882, c. 113, §§ 32, 33, requiring every street railway company to keep in repair the paving of the portion of the street occupied by its tracks, refers to the rails and the space between them over which the cars pass. City of Boston v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 71 N. E. 295, 186 Mass. 274.

OFFENSE.

See "Same Offense"; "Second Offense."

The term "offense," as used in Rev. St. §§ 4304-20a, 4304-20b, which provide for an election in any municipality to determine whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be permitted, and which declare that whoever shall sell where sales are prohibited shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and which prescribe the punishment for the first offense and for a second offense, embraces the entire charge, though there may be a number of counts, and means a conviction. Hence an affidavit charging three separate sales to different persons on the same day, without alleging a previous conviction, is in legal effect a charge of a first offense only. Carey v. State, 70 N. E. 955, 956, 70 Ohio St. 121.

OFFER.

To support a conviction for a violation of a statute punishing every person who shall corrupt or attempt to corrupt a juror, by offering to give any gift with intent to bias the juror, it is not necessary to prove an actual tender of the gift offered as a bribe, so as to enable the juror to at once accept or reject the same. Evidence showing a proposal or a willingness to give a bribe to bias the juror's verdict is sufficient. State v. Woodard, 81 S. W. 857, 861, 182 Mo. 391.

OFFICE.

See "Continuance in Office"; "Public Office."

A license to keep a dramshop is not an "office," which can be tested or vacated by quo warranto. Hargett v. Bell, 46 S. E. 749, 750, 134 N. C. 394.

OFFICER.

See "City Officer"; "Judicial Officer"; "Legislative Officer"; "Ministerial Officer"; "Municipal Officer"; "Peace Officer"; "Public Officer"; "Salaried Officer"; "State Officer."

An "officer" is defined to be "one who is lawfully invested with an office." State v. Kelly, 77 S. W. 996, 997, 103 Mo. App. 711 (quoting Bouvier, Law Dict.).

The word "officer," as used in Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, p. 109, c. 466, § 255, providing that the corporation counsel shall be the attorney for the city and each and every officer, and shall conduct all the law business in which the city is interested, and shall be the legal adviser of the mayor and city boards and officers, and shall furnish them such advice and legal assistance as may be required, clearly related to those officers who were on the same general footing as the mayor, city boards, and officers, etc., and not to the subordinate officers. Donahue v. Keeshan, 87 N. Y. Supp. 144, 147, 91 App. Div. 602.

Under Rev. St. 1889, § 5777, declaring the term "officers" to include any person holding any situation under the city government or any of its departments, with an annual salary or for a definite term of office, a person appointed to perform certain engineering duties with regard to sewers in a city of the third class, for no definite term, and to receive a per diem wage, is not an "officer," entitled to perform such work under section 5848, requiring the same to be performed by a city engineer or other officer. Weesner v. Central Nat. Bank, 80 S. W. 819, 820, 106 Mo. App. 668.

Inspector of buildings.

St. Louis City Charter, art. 4, § 43, defines the term "officers" to include "all persons holding any situation under the city government or its departments, with an annual salary or for a definite term." An inspector to assist the commissioner of public buildings in the inspection of private buildings in the course of erection is an officer. Magner v. City of St. Louis, 78 S. W. 782, 784, 179 Mo. 495.

School trustee.

A school trustee is an "officer," within the meaning of the word as used in a constitutional provision that all officers shall take a prescribed oath before entering on the duties of their office. Buchanan v. Graham (Tex.) 81 S. W. 1237, 1239.

OFFICER DE FACTO.

See "De Facto."

OFFICER OF THE COURT.

Bailiffs and criers of the federal courts, appointed to attend the same, as authorized by Rev. St. § 715 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 579], though not constitutional officers, are "officers of the court." United States v. McCabe (U. S.) 129 Fed. 708.

OFFICIAL SURVEY.

An "official survey," under St. 1890, §§ 1734, 1735, must show distinctly of what piece of land it is a survey, at whose request it was made, what owners were notified and present at the date of the survey, and the name of the chairman; and if such essentials are omitted it cannot be treated as an official survey. Watkins v. Havighorst, 74 Pac. 318, 319, 13 Okl. 128.

OIL.

See "Linseed Oil"; "Manufacture of Oil."

OIL DEPOT.

See "Negligent Operation."

Any warehouse or place where oils are stored in large quantities is a depot within the meaning of a statute imposing a tax on "oil depots," wherein petroleum or other oils are stored in bulk or tank. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1020, 1022.

OLEOMARGARINE.

"Oleomargarine is a manufactured product made of oleo oil, neutral lard, milk and cream, and pure butter, although pure butter is not used in all grades, and butter and milk and cream and other coloring matter is evidently used for the purpose of giving it the semblance of the true dairy product." State v. Armour Packing Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 59, 60.

ON.

In calling for the Ohio river as the northern boundary of a magisterial district which bordered on it, the designation of the beginning point as "on the Ohio river" means that the district line begins in the line of the county on its northern shore. Commonwealth v. Louisville & E. Packet Co. (Ky.) 80 S. W. 154, 155.

ON OR ABOUT.

The words "on or about," in an indictment alleging that defendant "did, on or about the 1st day of April, 1901," commit the offense charged, do not render the month and the year, as well as the day, uncertain. The meaning of the language to the general understanding is that the time of the crime was near the 1st day of April in the year 1901. There is no uncertainty as to the year. The words "April, 1901," mean April in the year 1901, and no resource of ingenuity can make them mean anything else. An averment in this language is of a time within the year, and if any day within the year may be proved the allegation is sufficient. An averment of time in an indictment is a matter of form, not generally material, and, in view of Rev. St. § 1025 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 720], which provides that no indictment shall be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect in matter of form only, as well as under the Oregon statute, adopted by rule in the federal courts in that state, which provides that the precise time need not be stated, an indictment alleging the time of commission of the offense as on or about a day named is sufficient, except in cases where the time is an ingredient of the offense. United States v. McKinley (U. S.) 127 Fed. 168, 171.

ONE DWELLING HOUSE.

The words "one dwelling house," as used in a conveyance of land declaring that the grantee shall not occupy the premises, except for one dwelling house to each lot, are used in the sense in which the words are ordinarily used. A building planned and designed for two or more dwellings cannot properly be described as one dwelling house. A building designed and planned for two families, one to occupy the ground floor and one the second floor, each to have a separate entrance, violates the restriction in the conveyance. Harris v. Roraback (Mich.) 100 N. W. 391, 392.

OPEN COURT.

An "open court" contemplates the presence of the judge and the clerk of the court, or a duly qualified deputy, the regular opening and closing of the court, and the presence of the clerk's docket, upon which should be entered, under the eye of the court, the successive steps taken in open court in each case. Hays v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Md.) 58 Atl. 439, 441.

OPENED.

The word "opened," as used with reference to streets and public places, refers to the time when the city becomes vested with the title to the land on which the street or avenue is to run. But it was not used in that sense in Laws 1895, p. 2037, c. 106, § 2, relating to the discontinuing and closing of streets, and providing that the contiguous street bounding the plot or square wherein is situated the land sought to be closed and occupied has been opened; but the purpose of the act was to substitute one system of the public highways for another by opening new streets and closing old ones, and it was not intended to physically close the streets of one system without providing something to take their places. Johnson & Co. v. Cox, 86 N. Y. Supp. 601, 603, 42 Misc. Rep. 801.

OPENLY.

An answer setting up that a waste ditch was used continuously, openly, peaceably, etc., sufficiently shows that the use was not clandestine, as the word "openly" sufficiently shows that fact. Abbott v. Pond (Wash.) 76 Pac. 60, 142 Cal. 393.

OPERATING.

Where railroad employes were transporting ballast on a push car for repair of a track, and had to remove the car from the track between trips and replace it on the track, they were "operating the car" within a statute providing that a railroad company shall be liable for injuries to a servant, in operating a car, through the negligent act of any other servant. Seery v. Gulf, O. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 77 S. W. 950, 951.

In Gen. Laws 1899, p. 214, c. 125, § 1, providing that whenever freight, baggage, or other property has been transported over two or more railroads operating any part of their roads in this state and having an agent in this state, or operated by any assignee, trustee, or receiver of such railways, suit for loss or damages thereto may be brought against any one or all of such railroad corporations, the term "operating any part of their roads in this state" means that such corporations are engaged in the transportation of freight, baggage, or other property within the state. Where the undisputed evidence showed that a railway track did not extend into the state, and that the company was not engaged in the transportation of any freight, baggage, or other property within the limits of the state, but, in the course of business between it and another railroad company as connecting lines, the engines and cars of each road reciprocally passed over the boundary line of the states of Texas and Arkansas, in no sense could it be said that such interchange of business is within the term "operating any part of their roads within this state." St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. J. H. White & Co. (Tex.) 80 S. W. 77, 79.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

The term "opposite party," as used in a statute providing for the reversal of a decree entered on a bill taken for confessed, and requiring reasonable notice to the opposite party of the motion to reverse, does not mean only the plaintiff, but any party to the suit, who has an interest in upholding the decree sought to be reversed, whose pecuniary or profiting interest would be prejudiced by reversal. It means opposite in interest. Morrison & Co. v. Leach (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 237, 238.

OPTION.

Contract of sale distinguished, see "Contract of Sale."

"An option conveys no title to the thing sold, but creates rights in personam, which may be again sold or assigned by the vendee." Womack v. Coleman (Minn.) 100 N. W. 9, 11.

While an option to purchase, if based upon a sufficient consideration, binds the party granting it, it is not a contract of purchase, but simply a contract granting to the holder of the option the privilege of purchasing, and binds the party by whom it is given to sell and convey the property involved, upon the acceptance of the option, in accordance with the terms, and the compliance on the part of the acceptor with its requirements. Tilton v. Sterling Coal & Coke Co. (Utah) 77 Pac. 758, 760.

OR.

The use of the disjunctive "or" in "where goods, wares or merchandise are manufactured or offered for sale," means either where they are manufactured, or where they are offered for sale. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Cavanaugh (Ind.) 71 N. E. 239, 242.

The disjunctive "or," in an allegation that the death of a servant was caused by the negligence of the officials or some one of the employes of defendant, and especially by the negligence of the employes of defendant or its officers, indicates that the words "officers," "officials," and "employes" meant the same thing—co-employes or fellow servants of deceased. State v. Chesapeake Beach Ry. Co. (Md.) 56 Atl. 385, 386.

The meaning of the term "proper party," as used in the phrase "is not a proper or necessary party," is not so clear as the meaning of the term "not a necessary party." The word "or" may be used in two forms. In one it corresponds to "either," and in that sense the term "proper or necessary" would mean either proper or necessary; that is, one or the other. In the other form it means to express the same thing alternatively in different words. In that sense, the term "not proper or necessary" would imply that it was not proper; that is, not necessary. Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 893, 178 Mo. 528.

ORDER.

See "Good Order"; "Taking Orders." Warrant synonymous, see "Warrant."

An order of the probate court discharging an order upon the executrix to show cause 8 Wds. & P.—60 why the homestead devised by the will of the testate should not be sold to pay debts of the estate is an "order refusing to direct the sale of real estate," within the meaning of subdivision 3, § 4665, Gen. St. 1894, and such order can be reviewed by appeal only, and not upon certiorari. In re Wilson's Estate, 97 N. W. 647, 91 Minn. 115; Dee v. Wilson, Id.

ORDER OF COURT.

The expression "orders of court" has been treated as covering not only orders of the courts in session, but orders of the absent judges. United States v. McCabe (U. S.) 129 Fed. 708, 711.

ORDINANCE.

See "Criminal Ordinance"; "Municipal Ordinance."

ORDINARY CARE.

Due care distinguished, see "Due Care."

The mere exercise of one's best judgment is not necessarily ordinary care. Men of average prudence sometimes arrive at erroneous conclusions from a heedless or careless consideration of the subject before them, or from want of ordinary care in other respects. Carney v. Concord St. Ry. Co., 57 Atl. 218, 222, 72 N. H. 364.

No rule can be formulated fixing definitely the standard of ordinary care. "Every attempt to do it has resulted in failure. What is ordinary care in one case might be the grossest negligence in another." Kube v. St. Louis Transit Co., 78 S. W. 55, 59, 103 Mo. App. 582 (quoting Frick v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co., 75 Mo. 595).

The term "ordinary or reasonable care," applied to the conduct of a child, means such care as may reasonably be expected of children of similar age, judgment, and experience under similar circumstances. Rohloff v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 58 Atl. 5, 7, 76 Conn. 689.

There is a want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff only when, under all of the circumstances and surroundings of the case, he has done, or omitted to do, something which "an ordinarily careful and prudent person," in a like situation as the plaintiff, would not have done, or omitted to do, and which was the efficient and proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. Hone v. Mammoth Min. Co., 75 Pac. 381, 383, 27 Utah, 168.

"Ordinary care exercised by those who make a business of using electricity for profit to prevent injury to others therefrom requires much greater precaution in its use than where the element used is of a less dangerous character. As there is greater danger and hazard in the use of electricity, there must be a corresponding exercise of skill and attention in avoiding injury to another to constitute what the law terms 'ordinary care.'" Commonwealth Electric Co. v. Melville, 70 N. E. 1052, 1053, 210 Ill. 70.

"The term 'ordinary care and diligence,' when applied to the management of electric railway cars in motion, must be understood to import all the care, circumspection, prudence, and discretion which the particular circumstances of the place or occasion require of the servants of the * * * company, and this will be increased or diminished as the ordinary liability to danger and accident and to do injury to others is increased or diminished in the movement and operation of such cars." Di Prisco v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 57 Atl. 906, 909 (citing Tully v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. [Del.] 3 Pennwlll, 455. 50 Atl. 95).

ORDINARY DOCILITY.

Sheep are domestic animals of ordinary docility, within the rule that railroads must fence against "all domestic animals of ordinary docility." Cotton v. Wiscasset, W. & F. R. Co. (Me.) 57 Atl. 785, 786, 98 Me. 511.

ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE.

Ordinary negligence is the omission to exercise ordinary care—that degree of care generally exercised by an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances. Cummings v. Wichita R. & Light Co. (Kan.) 74 Pac. 1104, 1105.

ORDINARY REPAIRS.

The replacing of a dozy or rotten round in a 40-foot extension ladder used in the business of an electric light company is not such ordinary repairs as a workman is usually expected to make, in the absence of proof that the defective condition of the round was known to the servant. Twombly v. Consolidated Electric Light Co., 57 Atl. 85, 87, 98 Me. 353, 64 L. R. A. 551.

ORE.

See "Extra Good Ore."

ORGANIZED TOWN.

An incorporated village is an "organized town" within the statute requiring a duplicate of the auditor's notice of the meeting of the county board of commissioners to pass on the petition of the judge of the county seat to be posted, 10 days before such meeting, in a public place in each organized town of the county. Tucker v. Board of Com'rs of Lincoln County, 97 N. W. 103, 104, 90 Minn. 406.

ORIGINAL APPLICATION.

The "original application," as used in Rev. St. § 4897 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3386], providing that a second application may be made within two years after the allowance of original application, means the first application. Western Electric Instrument Co. v. Empire Electric Instrument Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 90, 91.

ORIGINAL ENTRIES.

See "Book of Original Entries."

ORIGINAL UNDERTAKING.

If no other person is liable for the same debt for which the undertaking is made, although another person may be liable for a distinct debt which is the measure of the one in question, the undertaking is an original one. Jolley v. Walker's Adm'ra, 26 Ala. 690, 702.

ORNAMENT.

A watch and fob are embraced in the terms "jewels" and "ornaments," as used in Act 1879, p. 185, c. 145, relating to the liability of the proprietor of a hotel for the keeping of any jewels and ornaments belonging to a guest. Mr. Webster defines the word "jewel" as an ornament of dress, usually made of a precious metal, having enamel or precious stones as a part of its design; but we are of the opinion that it was used by the Legislature in the common meaning attributed to it as an ornament or useful article of value, and embraces a watch used for a timekeeper or chronometer, and in which precious stones may or may not form a part. The fob is evidently an article kept and worn both for use and ornament. Rains v. Maxwell House Co. (Tenn.) 79 S. W. 114, 117, 64 L. R. A. 470.

ORNAMENTAL FEATHERS.

Peacock feathers in a crude condition, used in that state for ornamental purposes, are dutiable under the provision in paragraph 425, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 191 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1675], for "ornamental feathers," and not under that in the same paragraph for "feathers crude." George Silva & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 127 Fed. 781.

ORPHAN ASYLUM—ORPHANAGE.

Lexicographers are not unanimous, but lean toward a meaning for "orphanage" or "orphan asylum" suggesting destitution of those relieved, rather than a profit-seeking enterprise. Standard Dict. "Orphanage." "An institution for the care of destitute orphans; orphan asylum." Cent. Dict. "Orphanage." "An institution or home for orphans; orphan asylum; an asylum or home for destitute orphan children." Webst. Dict. "Orphanage." "An institution or asylum for the care of orphans." Id. "Asylum." "An institution for the protection or relief of some class of destitute, unfortunate, or afflicted persons." Baker v. State (Wis.) 97 N. W. 568, 569.

OTHER.

See "Any Other."

Other accidental or natural causes.

Testator recited that having in mind the many catastrophes resulting from the action of the elements, and the great suffering, etc., caused by the destruction of life and property by storms, floods, fires, and other accidental and natural causes, etc., he devised the remainder of his estate to trustees to invest and pay the income for the charitable purpose of relieving the wants, distress, and suffering arising from such causes, and for the purpose of aiding such persons as the trustees deemed advisable who were victims of such accidents and catastrophes, and enjoining the trustees to select subjects worthy of assistance, and to use the fund for the greatest possible benefit to suffering humanity. In determining whether there was a sufficiently definite designation of beneficiaries, the court said: "Can it be doubted that the testator intended by the word 'such' to limit the relief to sufferers from some causes, accidents, or catastrophes, as distinguished from others not within his mental category? We think not. Certainly he intended that some causes, some accidents and catastrophes, should be excluded from those whose victims were to be the subjects of the annual expenditures of the income of this fund. If so, then is it not possible for the court to find some line of differentiation, which was in the mind of the testator, with sufficient certainty and definiteness to enable it to decide, in any concrete instance of expenditure or proposed expenditure, whether it is authorized? We are convinced that it is possible. Obviously the purchase of food for the homeless victims of the New Richmond cyclone would be justified. We think it equally obvious that expenditure to aid the cure of consumptives or inebriates would be forbidden to the trustees. Whether famine sufferers of a drouth-stricken region might be relieved, would perhaps be a question of more doubt than either of the other two, for they would not be victims of storm, fire, or flood. The inquiry, therefore, would be whether drouth would be a 'natural cause' so similar in character or results to those specified that we must conclude that the testator had it in mind in enlarging the field otherwise limited by the three expressed causes. We must presume that he had in mind a class of causes illustrated by the three named, though not strictly confined to them, but similar enough to be within the same general conception of possible suffering which he desired to relieve. Such is the unavoidable force and significance of the words used." Kronshage v. Varrell (Wis.) 97 N. W. 928, 929.

Other animal.

The words "or other animal," in New York Sanitary Code, § 195, providing that no person owning a stable or other premises shall keep therein any dog or other animal which shall by noise disturb any person in the vicinity, applies to animals ejusdem generis, and does not apply to horses kept in stables. People v. Edelstein, 86 N. Y. Supp. 861, 91 App. Div. 447.

The words "other animals," as used in a contract for the shipment of live stock that the value for which the carrier should be liable in case of loss should not exceed for a horse or mule $100, cattle $30 each, other animals at $5 each, include hogs. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Stone & Haslett (Tenn.) 79 S. W. 1031, 1038, 65 L. R. A. 298.

Other borate material.

The enumeration in paragraph 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 152 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1627], of "other borate material," refers only to borate materials found in nature in a raw condition, such as the "borates of lime or soda" included in the same provision, and does not embrace borate of manganese or bormangan, which is a manufactured article made from manganese and borates of lime or soda, and which is held to be dutiable as a chemical compound or salt under paragraph 3 of said act, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1627]. Hempstead v. Thomas (U. S.) 129 Fed. 907, 908.

Other building.

An awning in front of a building extending 13 feet from the house line to the curb, supported by five posts and covered with a roof of transparent glass, is not covered by the words "dwelling house or other building" in a deed providing that the front line of any messuages, dwelling houses, or other buildings shall recede eight feet from the street line. Olcott v. Sheppard, Knapp & Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 201, 202, 96 App. Div. 281.

Other causes.

The words "other causes," as used in a contract of sale of a specified number of cars daily of furnace coke during a specified period of time, subject to strikes, accidents, or other causes, relate to shortage of cars, and hence a shortage of cars is a legal excuse for nondelivery. Hatfield v. Thomas Iron Co., 57 Atl. 950, 953, 208 Pa. 478.

Other circumstances.

The "other circumstances" referred to in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 872, 882, requiring that the affidavit to take the testimony of a witness shall show that the witness is about to depart from the state or is sick, or that some other special circumstances exist requiring his examination in advance, means such as will make the presence and evidence of the witness at the trial doubtful and uncertain as bearing on the probability of his future attendance. W. P. Davis Mach. Co. v. Robinson, 85 N. Y. Supp. 574, 575, 42 Misc. Rep. 52.

Other disability.

The nondeclaration of the result of an election for Governor is not a disability of the Governor such as is meant by Const. § 16, art. 7, providing that, in case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, or "other disability" of the Governor, the president of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed. It is simply non-action or incomplete action by the agencies of the law assigned to vest the title in the candidate. It is not like insanity. Conviction of the officer for crime, continued absence, or other disability connected with the person of the Governor, death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, or resignation would produce a vacancy, and it would seem that the language "or other disability" means something of a different character from those cases named—something attaching to the person of the Governor and disabling him; and this construction seems confirmed by the after language of the section, providing that "the president of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability is removed," thus using the words "vacancy" and "disability" as meaning different things; "vacancy" referring to death, conviction, failing to qualify, and resignation, but "disability" referring to something relating to the person, and for the time being disabling him, notwithstanding the use of the word "other." Carr v. Wilson, 9 S. E. 31, 35, 32 W. Va. 419, 8 L. R. A. 64.

Other duties.

The general words "other duties," in Const. art. 13, § 11, requiring that the board of equalization shall perform such other duties as may be required by law, must be restricted to mean other duties of general character, with duties indicated in the previous provision to be performed by the board. State v. Eldredge, 76 Pac. 337, 340, 27 Utah, 477.

Other lands.

The phrase "owner of other lands," used in Rev. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4218fff, permitting owners of other lands contiguous to school lands, or within a radius of five miles thereof, to buy such school lands, which article is a part of the act of 1897 which permitted a settler to buy four sections of school land in all, provided not more than two were classed as agricultural lands, does not include the owner of a lot or lots in town, but applies only to persons engaged in agricultural or stockraising pursuits. Conn v. Terrell (Tex.) 80 S. W. 608, 609.

Other matter or thing.

The general words "or other matter or thing," in Rev. St. § 1782 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1212], prohibiting a United States senator from receiving compensation for rendering services to any person in relation to any proceeding, contract, etc., or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party, were intended to cover kindred subjects, like preliminary examinations and inquiries necessary to enable the government, acting through one of its departments, to determine whether a proceeding should be instituted, a charge or accusation made, or an arrest ordered, or whether a contract or claim should be made. United States v. Burton (U. S.) 131 Fed. 552, 556.

Other means.

The phrase "by mechanical or other means," as used in the statute making it a misdemeanor for any person, not licensed, to record or register, by mechanical or other means, bets or wagers on trials of speed, etc., embraces something outside the mechanical class, and covers the registration of such bets by means of the initials or private marks of the parties written on cards. State v. Villines (Mo.) 81 S. W. 212, 213.

Other reasonable cause.

The words "for other reasonable cause," as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 815, which provides that courts of common pleas may grant new trial for mispleading or discovery of new evidence, or want of actual notice of suit to any defendant, or of a reasonable opportunity to appear and defend, when a just defense, in whole or in part, exists, or for other reasonable cause, according to the usual rules in such cases, should be construed to mean causes of the same general character as those specified, and hence the section did not authorize the granting of a new trial on the ground that, by reason of the death of the trial judge before filing findings, the plaintiff was precluded from reviewing errors of law, alleged to exist in the judgment, on an appeal. Ethells v. Wainwright, 57 Atl. 121, 124, 76 Conn. 534.

Other roads.

The phrase "other roads," as used in Acts 1895, p. 174, c. 82, granting the board of county commissioners power to purchase toll roads, and declaring that when conveyed the roads shall be free and shall be kept in repair as provided by law for the repair of other roads, must be construed as meaning other free roads of the class or kind to which those purchased would belong when conveyed to the county. State ex rel. Shanks v. Board of Com'rs of Carroll County (Ind.) 70 N. E. 138, 142, 162 Ind. 183.

Other structure.

The phrase "other structure," in 71 Ohio Laws, p. 168, § 1, providing that any person who shall perform labor or furnish machinery or materials for erecting, altering, repairing, or removing any house, mill, manufactory, or other building, fixture, bridge, or other structure, by virtue of a contract with the owner or owners, shall have a lien to secure the payment of the same, must be limited to improvements on the same class as those specifically named, and cannot be extended so as to include a railroad. Rutherford v. Cincinnati & P. R. Co., 35 Ohio St. 559, 563.

OTHER INSURANCE.

Where the insured, at the time of applying for insurance, informed the company's agent that there was a certain amount of insurance on the property, and that additional insurance was desired, and the company issued additional insurance, the continuation of the existing insurance, either by renewals of policies, already thereon, or by substituting other policies, was not "other insurance," within the company's policy, stipulating that it should be void if the insured should thereafter procure other insurance. Lewis v. Guardian Fire & Life Assur. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 525, 98 App. Div. 157.

OUR CHILDREN.

The phrase "our children," in a will giving and bequeathing to testator's wife all his property, "to hold and dispose of as she may think best for the welfare of herself and our children," and suggesting that a son be given at his maturity whatever sum is necessary to make his property equal to the other son's property at his majority, and providing that in case of further issue the same rule to apply, embraces an after-born child, and an after-born child is included with the children living at the date of the will in the benefit, if any, of the provisions for the children. Kidder's Ex'rs v. Kidder (N. J.) 56 Atl. 154.

OUT OF THE STATE.

A foreign corporation is "out of the state," within Gen. St. 1901, § 4449, providing that when a cause of action accrues against a person, if he be out of the state, the period limited for the commencement of the action shall not begin to run until he comes into the state. Williams v. Metropolitan St. Ry. (Kan.) 74 Pac. 600, 602, 64 L. R. A. 794.

OUTSTANDING LEGAL TITLE.

An outstanding mortgage or deed of trust, without entry of foreclosure, though the condition has been broken, is not such an "outstanding legal title" as will defeat a recovery in an action of ejectment; but where such mortgage or deed of trust has been foreclosed, and the legal title has been transmitted to a purchaser at the foreclosure sale, such title constitutes an outstanding title which will defeat ejectment, even between third persons not claiming thereunder. Benton Land Co. v. Zeitler, 81 S. W. 193, 197, 182 Mo. 251.

OVER THE WHOLE LINE OF ITS ROAD.

In a statute regulating the additional charges of way freight over through freight, the words "over the line of its road" mean, and only mean, freight which is taken on at one terminus and discharged at the other, and do not mean the pro rata allowance which may fall to the road in question under the disposition of the products of transportation of through freights proper—those freights which, in their transit, pass over more than one railroad, and merely traverse this road as a stage in a more extended shipment. Mobile & M. Ry. Co. v. Steiner, 61 Ala. 559, 597.

OVERT ACT.

An overt act essential to establish an attempt to commit a crime is an act done to carry out the intention, and it must be such as would naturally effect that result unless prevented by some extraneous cause. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 790, 178 N. Y. 274.

OWN.

There is no substantial difference between the meaning of the words "possess" and "own." They are equivalents in common speech, and according to all the lexicographers. Thomas v. Blair, 35 South. 811, 813, 111 La. 678.

"Own," as an adjective, means "peculiar, proper, exclusive, particular, individual, private, and as indicative of possession." In certifying the acknowledgment of a woman, the officer stated that she acknowledged the same to be her own act and deed. The use of the word does nothing more than indicate that the signing of the deed was her act in compliance with the statute. It does not convey the idea that she had willingly signed, and the certificate was not a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring that the wife should acknowledge the instrument to be her act and deed, should declare that she had freely and willingly signed and sealed it, and that she wished not to retract. Tiemann v. Cobb (Tex.) 80 S. W. 250, 251 (citing Cent. Dict. in verb "Own").

OWNER.

See "Riparian Owner."

The word "owner," standing alone, signifies absolute power, or owner in fee simple, not a qualified or limited estate in the land. Phillips v. Hardenburg, 80 S. W. 891, 895, 181 Mo. 463.

The word "owner," as used in Act June 4, 1897, c. 2, § 1, 30 Stat. 34 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1541], providing that, in cases in which a tract covered by an unperfected bona fide claim or by a patent is included within the limits of a public forest reservation, the settler or owner thereof may relinquish the tract to the government, and select in lieu thereof a tract of vacant land open to settlement not exceeding in area the tract covered by his claim or patent, refers only to one who holds both the legal and equitable title to the patented land. United States v. Hyde (U. S.) 132 Fed. 545, 548.

By the expression "the owner of the house for the time being," as used in Act April 10, 1849, § 4 (P. L. 600), providing that in all conveyances the right to compensation for a party wall shall pass to the purchaser, unless otherwise expressed, and the owner of the house for the time being shall have all the remedies with respect to such party wall as he may have in relation to the house to which it is attached, must be understood the owner when the wall is injured. The obvious intent of the act is to give the right of compensation to the person who is injured. The injury arises from the use of the wall in the construction of an adjoining building. Until such use there is no injury. Lea v. Jones, 57 Atl. 1113, 209 Pa. 22.

Agent.

In a city charter authorizing the city to require "owners" of dangerous buildings to remove the same at their own expense, while it may be convenient, in the exercise of the power granted by the provisions of the charter, to extend the application of the term to agents of the owners, it is not a reasonably necessary incident to the express power granted, which confines it to the owners. The rule is that it not only must be reasonably incident to the express powers granted or convenient for the exercise of such power, but it must be essential and indispensable to the purposes to be accomplished by the corporation. City of St. Louis v. J. E. Kalme & Bro. Real Estate Co., 79 S. W. 140, 142, 180 Mo. 309.

Creditor secured by deed of trust.

Creditors secured by a deed of trust are not owners of land within the meaning of an act providing that the owners shall be given notice and opportunity to be heard before assessments for improvements are levied against the property. City of Richmond v. Williams, 47 S. E. 844, 845, 102 Va. 733.

Lessee.

The word "owner," as used in Civ. Code, §§ 542-544, providing that, when the owner of any tract of land abutting on a railroad constructs a fence about it on all sides except along the railroad, it shall be the duty of the railroad company to construct a fence along its right of way, means the owner of the fee, and does not include a lessee. Crary v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. D.) 100 N. W. 18, 19.

Of import.

One having full dominion over property, with a right to sell or otherwise dispose of it without accountability to any one, may be considered the "owner" within Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 5, 26 Stat. 132 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1889], requiring that, "whenever merchandise imported into the United States is entered by invoice, one of the following declarations, according to the nature of the case, shall be filed with the collector of the port at the time of entry by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent," etc., and hence he might properly make the required declaration. United States v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds (U. S.) 132 Fed. 579.

Of street.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 3358, the word "owner" is defined as including all persons having any estate, interest, or easement in the property to be taken. In proceedings to condemn property in a public street, the fee of which was in a private individual for the erection and maintenance of a telephone system, neither the municipality nor its board of trustees has, as such, any estate, interest, or easement in the property sought to be taken, and they were in no sense "owners" of the property within the meaning of that term as used in the statute. New Union Telephone Co. v. Marsh, 89 N. Y. Supp. 79, 82, 98 App. Div. 122.

Of vessel.

The word "owner," as used in the statute creating a lien on vessels, does not include a charterer. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5953, providing that all steamers, vessels, etc., are liable for the nonperformance or malperformance of any contract for the transportation of passengers or property between places within the state, or to or from places within the state, made by their respective owners, masters, agents, or assignees, does not create a lien on the vessel for breach of contract of affreightment made by her charterer. Guffey v. Alaska & P. S. S. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 271, 279 (citing The C. W. Moore [U. S.] 107 Fed. 957).

P. N. R.

A physician's prescription which does not state that intoxicating liquor prescribed is a necessary remedy is not a prescription within a statute prohibiting the sale of liquors by pharmacists, except on a prescription stating that such liquor is "prescribed as a necessary remedy," although it contains the letters "P. N. R." State v. Manning (Mo.) 81 S. W. 223, 225.

PACKAGE.

See "Cumbersome Package."

PAPER.

See "Manufacture of Paper."

PAPER ENVELOPES, PLAIN.

Pieces of paper cut into shapes ready to be made into envelopes, known as "flat envelopes," are not "paper envelopes, plain," within paragraph 309, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, 30 Stat. 188 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1672]. Hunter v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 894, 895.

PARCHESI.

The word "Parchesi" cannot be monopolized in the United States as a trade-mark for a game introduced from India, where it had long been known by a name similar in sound. Selchow v. Chaffee & Selchow Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 996, 997.

PARDON.

A pardon is a remission of guilt. State v. Lewis, 35 South. 816, 817, 111 La. 693 (citing Territory v. Richardson, 9 Okl. 579, 60 Pac. 244, 49 L. R. A. 440).

PARK.

A park is a place for the resort of the public for recreation, air, and light. Village of Riverside v. MacLain, 71 N. E. 408, 414, 210 Ill. 308, 66 L. R. A. 288.

A "park" is defined in the Century Dictionary as a piece of ground set apart and maintained for public use, and laid out in such a way as to afford pleasure to the eye, as well as opportunity for open-air recreation. The term "park" is not applicable to private inclosures enjoyed by a few, nor to a game and fish preserve. Commonwealth v. Hazen, 56 Atl. 263, 265, 207 Pa. 52.

PARKING.

The term "parking," as used in Code, § 792, providing that cities shall have power to improve any street by parking the same or any part thereof, is incapable of any plausible definition which does not involve the idea of beautifying those portions of the street not necessarily occupied by walks and roadways. Hence the parking need not be confined to that part of a street between the lot line and the driveway, but the driveway may be divided by a strip of parking along the center line. Downing v. City of Des Moines (Iowa) 99 N. W. 1060, 1067.

PAROL DEMURRER.

At common law, when the heir was sued at law upon a specialty obligation of the ancestor chargeable upon the inheritance, he might pray that "the parol demurrer"—that is to say, that the pleadings or proceedings be stayed till he should attain his majority. This privilege was based on feudal reasons, and was confined to heirs. It did not extend to devisees. Plasket v. Beeby, 4 East, 490. The privilege was not merely on account of the inability of the infant heir to defend himself by reason of his infancy, but from an absolute deficiency of funds, arising out of the nature of the feudal tenures. For during the subsistence of wardships the estate of the heir in chivalry was during his minority in the hands of the guardian in chivalry, who had the whole profits. How the privilege came to be extended at common law to other heirs is lost in antiquity. The rule remained in England and the older states, greatly modified by statutory provision, however, long after the policy on which it was founded became obsolete, and now the parol demurrer has been abolished by statute in England, New York, and probably other states. Joyce v. McAvoy, 31 Cal. 273, 280, 89 Am. Dec. 172 (citing Whart. Law Dict. 558; 2 Kent, Comm. 245, note "b").

PART.

See "Child's Part."

Any part of, see "Any."

PART PERFORMANCE.

While the phrase "part performance" is commonly used as a short and convenient statement of the general ground upon which verbal agreements regarding real estate are enforced, yet the whole doctrine rests upon the principle of fraud, and proceeds upon the idea that the party has so changed his situation on the faith of the oral agreement that it would be a fraud upon him to permit the other party to defeat the agreement by setting up the statute. Hence the term "part performance" falls far short of expressing the whole doctrine and theory of courts of equity in this matter. The change of situation necessary to create this equitable estoppel must, of course, have been made in reliance upon and in pursuance of the oral agreement, and so connected with the performance of the contract that from the nature of the case the defendant should understand it was done in reliance upon his agreement. Borrow v. Borrow, 76 Pac. 305, 307, 34 Wash. 684.

Payment of a part, or even of the whole, of the purchase money, under an oral agreement for the sale of land, is not an act of "part performance" to take the contract out of the statute of frauds. Cooper v. Colson (N. J.) 58 Atl. 387.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS.

"Mere presence at the scene of the perpetration of the crime does not render a person particeps criminis. To constitute him a party to the criminal act, there must be not only presence upon the scene, but an actual participation and aiding and abetting in the crime committed." The failure of a spectator to interfere does not make him a participant in the crime. It is a circumstance to be considered with the other evidence in determining whether he was present as an aider and abettor. State v. Fox (N. J.) 57 Atl. 270.

PARTICULARS.

See "Bill of Particulars."

PARTITION.

As proceeding in rem, see "In Rem."

PARTITION IN KIND.

A "partition in kind" is but a transfer of the interest of the co-owners to one of the co-owners. It is but a sale of such interest to a co-owner, and this the law permits. If a co-owner can sell to a perfect stranger his interest in the property, subject to the usufruct, or may mortgage it, and thus have such interest sold for him at judicial sale, how much greater reason is there that co-owners may partition the property among themselves! The result obtained in either instance is the same—a transfer of the interest of the co-owner to another. Maguire v. Fluker, 36 South. 231, 238, 112 La. 76.

PARTNERS.

The phrase "partners," etc., following the names of the defendants to an action, is simply descriptive, and does not make the firm, as such, a party to the action. Bastian v. Adams (Neb.) 97 N. W. 231.

PARTNERSHIP.

The ultimate and conclusive test of a partnership is the co-ownership of the profits of a business. If there is community of profits, a partnership follows. When it appears that the parties are not joint owners in the business, or that one alone is principal and the other receives his share as compensation, it is not a partnership. Altgelt v. Alamo Nat. Bank (Tex.) 79 S. W. 582, 586 (citing Buzard v. Bank of Greenville, 67 Tex. 83, 84, 2 S. W. 54, 60 Am. Rep. 7; Bates, Partn. § 86; George, Partn. § 9).

"The requisites of a partnership are that the parties must have joined together to carry on a trade or venture for their common benefit, each contributing property or services, and having a community of interest in the profits." The Virginia Pilot Association is an unincorporated association of pilots, formed for the purpose of controlling and regulating the business of its members, and through them, in effect, act by joint co-operation in performing their duties as pilots. The association elects officers, leases offices, owns property, including the pilot boats used, assigns its members to service in turn, and collects all pilotage fees earned by them, which are paid into bank to its credit, and divided between the members after payment of the expenses of the association. The members of the association were partners, and jointly liable for the negligent performance by one of its members of his duties as a pilot. Donald v. Guy (U. S.) 127 Fed. 228, 232 (quoting Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 36 L. Ed. 835).

Seven persons associated themselves together to manufacture cheese at a factory owned by three of them, who received a certain sum for the use of the factory. The association adopted no name, and was known by several different names. All expenses of manufacture and sale were to be deducted from the proceeds of the sale of the product, and the balance divided in proportion to the amount of milk furnished by the parties. The association constituted a partnership. Sullivan v. Sullivan (Wis.) 99 N. W. 1022, 1025 (citing 22 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law [2d Ed.] 13; Ellsworth v. Tartt, 26 Ala. 733, 62 Am. Dec. 749).

The community of a husband and wife is not a partnership. Well v. Jacobs' Estate, 85 South. 599, 604, 111 La. 357.

PARTY.

"Where the word 'party' occurs in the statute relating to nominations (for public office), it should be construed to mean a number of persons united in the manner usual to the then existing political parties." A party—that is, an organized political party—cannot have at the same time more than one candidate for the same county office. State v. Metcalf (S. D.) 100 N. W. 923, 924.

In practice.

The words "the party recovering a judgment," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 916 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 684], providing that "the party recovering a judgment in any common law cause in any Circuit or District Court shall be entitled to similar remedies" on the same as are provided in like causes by the laws of the state in which such court is held, include the government. Allen v. Clark (U. S.) 126 Fed. 738, 740, 62 O. C. A. 58 (citing Green v. United States, 76 U. S. [9 Wall.] 655, 19 L. Ed. 806; Fink v. O'Neill, 106 U. S. 272, 1 Sup. Ct. 325, 27 L. Ed. 196).

The term "party," as employed in Const. art. 4, § 8, and Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 75, § 102, providing that in all suits or actions at law, on suggestion in writing under oath of either of the parties to the proceedings that such party cannot have a fair and impartial trial, the court shall direct the record to be transmitted to some other court, when applied to civil actions, must be taken in a collective and representative sense, and joint defendants cannot remove a cause without the consent of all their co-defendants. Baltimore County Com'rs v. United Rys. & Electric Co. (Md.) 57 Atl. 675, 676.

In Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 1406, § 48, providing that in all civil actions each party shall be entitled to a challenge of three jurors without showing cause for such challenge, the word "party" includes all persons, plaintiff or defendant, however numerous they may be, and all persons, plaintiff or defendant, are entitled in the aggregate to but three peremptory challenges. Illinois, I. & M. R. Co. v. Freeman, 71 N. E. 444, 446, 210 Ill. 270.

An officer of a corporation litigant is not a "party" within B. & C. Comp. § 843, providing that if either party request it the judge may exclude from the courtroom any witness of the adverse party not at the time under examination, especially where no showing is made that he possessed any special information or knowledge concerning the case on trial which would render it necessary that he should remain in the courtroom to protect the interests of the defendant. Trotter v. Town of Stayton (Or.) 77 Pac. 395, 396.

An officer of a domestic corporation is a "party" for the purpose of verifying a pleading, within Code Civ. Proc. § 525, subd. 1, providing for verification by a party, by an officer of a domestic corporation, or by an agent or attorney of a foreign corporation having knowledge of the facts. Henry v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 525, 526, 43 Misc. Rep. 589.

One by intervening in opposition to the application of a receiver appointed in an action, to make a certain expenditure, and by consenting to the order settling the receiver's account, does not become a party to the action, or any other special and collateral proceeding therein other than that in which he intervenes. In re Elliott (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1109, 1112.

PARTY NOMINATION.

Party nominations are made by large masses of people, organized as parties, holding caucuses and conventions. In re Smith, 85 N. Y. Supp. 14.

PASS.

The term "pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state," in the collateral inheritance tax law (Acts 1896, p. 38, No. 46), imposing a tax on all property which shall "pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state," means to pass by virtue of the law governing intestate or testate succession, and, as the succession of debts due to a decedent domiciled within the state from nonresidents of the state is governed by the state of the residence of the debtors, the act does not impose a tax on such debts. Miller v. Wilbur (Vt.) 56 Atl. 280, 281.

PASSABLE HIGHWAY.

Where a part of a consideration of a deed was an agreement by the grantee to open a "passable highway" for public utility, the width of the highway not being specified, the parties contemplated that the way should be suitable to the particular locality. Vanatta v. Waterhouse (Ind.) 71 N. E. 159, 160.

PASSAGE.

While an act of the Legislature is passed when it is approved by the Governor, the decisions are uniform in holding that the language "at the time of the passage of the act" means when the act takes effect. Mills v. State Board of Osteopathic Registration and Examination (Mich.) 98 N. W. 19.

PASSENGER.

A passenger is one who travels in some public conveyance by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with the carrier, as payment of fare, or that which is accepted as an equivalent therefor. Where an employé accompanies live stock in transit, and his transportation has been included in the price paid by the owner, he is a "passenger" within Act April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58), which relieves a railroad company from liability for injuries received by any person not a passenger, and, being a passenger, he cannot at the same time be an employé or a quasi employé within the provisions of the act. Rowdin v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 57 Atl. 1125, 1126, 208 Pa. 623 (quoting Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256).

A person becomes a passenger on a street car by contract, express or implied. He may become one in attempting to get on a car at a place provided for that purpose, and where people are expected to take passage, though his attempt fails. But a man does not become a passenger by making such an attempt at a place where he is not expected, and when the carmen are ignorant of his presence. The case differs from that of a man who, by license of a defendant, was at a place so usually occupied by persons that the defendant was under the duty of looking out for his welfare. McCarty v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 80 S. W. 7, 8, 105 Mo. App. 596 (citing Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co., 161 Mass. 298, 37 N. E. 165, 24 L. R. A. 521; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Jennings, 190 Ill. 478, 60 N. E. 818, 54 L. R. A. 827).

A passenger may become such without a contract, even against the will of the carrier. The carrier has no right to refuse a passenger without sufficient reasons, and such reasons so rarely occur, and are so exceptional, as to vary the general rule too slightly for practical consideration. A person riding on a pass void under a statute, is a passenger. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co., 47 S. E. 765, 767, 135 N. C. 682.

The mere silent acquiescence of the conductor in a person's riding on an engine did not make him a passenger, and he did not become a passenger on the train merely because he went to the station for that purpose. But where one goes to a railway station at a reasonable time before the departure of a train, for the purpose of traveling thereon, he may be regarded as a passenger in so far as it may relate to an injury received through the negligence or carelessness of the company while in or about the station or attempting to board the train. Radley v. Columbia R. Co., 75 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 332.

An express messenger, while riding in a railway car in the performance of the duties of his employment, is not a passenger, nor does the railroad company occupy the relation of common carrier toward him, but of a private carrier only, and there is no public policy which forbids the parties from contracting for its exemption from liability for negligence in the carrying of such messenger; and a contract with the express company by which the messenger, as a condition of his employment, assumes all risk of injury while so riding, and one between the express and railroad companies by which the former agrees to hold the latter indemnified against claims for injuries to its employes, whether arising from negligence or otherwise, are valid and effective to prevent a messenger injured in collision due to the negligence of railroad employes from recovering therefor against the railroad company. Long v. Lehigh Valley Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 870, 873 (citing Blair v. Erie Ry. Co., 66 N. Y. 313, 23 Am. Rep. 55).

PASSENGER FROM A FOREIGN PORT.

An unmarried woman, a native of Porto Rico, who was an inhabitant of that island at the time of its cession to the United States by the treaty with Spain, is not, on her arrival at the port of New York from Porto Rico, a passenger from a foreign port, but is a passenger from territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. Gonzales v. Williams, 24 Sup. Ct. 177, 181, 192 U. S. 1, 48 L. Ed. 317.

PASSENGER TICKET.

As contract, see "Contract."

PATENT.

See "Letter Patent."

The patent of a lode claim confirms the original location, with the right of exclusive possession, and conveys title to the tract covered by the location, together with all veins, lodes, and ledges which have their apex therein; whereas the patent to a placer claim, while confirming the original location and conveying title to the placer ground, does not necessarily convey the title to all veins, lodes, and ledges within its area. A patent of a placer claim will not convey the title to a known vein or lode within its area, unless that vein or lode is specifically applied and paid for. Clipper Min. Co. v. Ell Mining & Land Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 632, 635, 194 U. S. 220, 48 L. Ed. 944.

PATENTING.

The word "patenting," as used in Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 389) § 6, providing that on the completion of allotments to lands to Indians, "and the patenting of the lands to said allottees," each and every member of the respective bands or tribes of Indians to whom allotments have been made shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the state or territory in which they may reside, means the preliminary patent that is issued as soon as the allotment is made. United States v. Kiya (U. S.) 126 Fed. 879, 881.

PATIENT.

Where a physician is called to treat a patient against his will, the latter becomes a patient by operation of law, and any information which is acquired by the physician in order to enable him to act is acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, within Code Civ. Proc. § 834, and is privileged. Meyer v. Supreme Lodge K. P. (N. Y.) 70 N. E. 111, 112, 178 N. Y. 63, 64 L. R. A. 839.

PAVE.

The term "pave," in its generic sense, means to place some substance on the street so as to form an artificial roadway or wearing surface, which shall change the natural condition of the street. The word is much more comprehensive than the term "macadamize," but it embraces all that the term "macadamize" covers. Ross v. Kendall (Mo.) 61 S. W. 1107, 1109, 183 Mo. 338.

PAY CHECK.

The terms "pay check" and "money order" mean practically the same thing. Barnes v. State (Fla.) 35 South. 227, 228.

PAYABLE.

See "Now Due and Payable."

PAYMENT.

See "Bond for the Payment of Money"; "Direct Payment of Money"; "Voluntary Payment."

Payment involves more than the passing of money, or its accepted equivalent, from one to another. The acceptance of money or other thing of value, in satisfaction of a debt, or in exchange for labor, goods, or other commodity, will be a payment, where it was so intended by the payor. Generally, there must be something shown in addition to the mere passing of money from one to the other. Galbraith v. Starks (Ky.) 79 S. W. 1191, 1192.

In Laws 1899, p. 1593, c. 712, § 46, providing that if, when a street railway franchise tax is due, the company has paid to a city for its use, under any agreement therefor or under any statute requiring the same, any sum based on a percentage of gross earnings or any other income, or any license tax, or any sum on account of the special franchise, "which payment was in the nature of a tax," all amounts so paid shall be deducted from the franchise tax, the term "payment" includes all the sums designated, so that the right to the deduction in each case depends on whether it is in the nature of a tax. Heerwagen v. Crosstown St. Ry. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 218, 90 App. Div. 275.

PEACE OFFICER.

A policeman is a peace officer, and has the right without a warrant to arrest for an offense against a municipal ordinance, happening in his presence. Springer v. State (Ga.) 48 S. E. 907, 908.

PEACEABLE POSSESSION.

"Peaceable possession," in the statute authorizing the maintenance of a bill to quiet title to real property where complainant is in peaceable possession of the lands, is not a possession which is peaceable as to third persons, but only peaceable as to the defendant, and, as to the defendant, that it is a possession undisturbed by any act of the defendant in or upon the locus in quo for which the defendant would be suable in an action by which the title to the property could be determined. Bradley v. McPherson (N. J.) 59 Atl. 105, 106.

PECUNIARY DAMAGES.

Pecuniary damages are those which can be accurately estimated as loss of wages, cost of medical attendance, etc. L. W. Pomerene Co. v. White (Neb.) 97 N. W. 232, 234.

PECUNIARY OBLIGATION.

A silver certificate issued by the United States is a "pecuniary obligation" or security of the government and an article of value within Rev. St. U. S. § 5467 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3691], subjecting to punishment any person employed in any department of the postal service who shall secrete any letter containing any note, bond, certificate of stock, or other pecuniary obligation or security of the government. Bromberger v. United States (U. S.) 128 Fed. 846, 851, 63 C. O. A. 76.

PEDDLER.

The word "peddler" in its ordinary sense means a traveling trader; one who travels about retailing small wares. In re Watson (S. D.) 97 N. W. 463, 466 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

The word "peddler," as used in a municipal ordinance providing that no person shall exercise the vocation of a peddler within the municipality without first paying an annual license, includes one peddling the produce of his own farm or garden, as well as one peddling farm or garden products which he has purchased from others. State v. Jensen (Minn.) 100 N. W. 644, 645.

Peddling is the occupation of an itinerant peddler of goods, who sells and delivers the identical goods he carries with him. It is not the business of selling by sample and taking the order for goods to be thereafter delivered, and to be paid for, wholly or in part, upon their subsequent delivery. Neither a person exhibiting a sample of a range, nor a person making delivery of such ranges, after their sale, in the original packages, are peddlers, within the meaning of a provision in the revenue law that any person carrying a wagon, cart, or buggy, or traveling on foot, for the purpose of exhibiting or delivering any wares or merchandise, shall be considered a peddler, and imposing a license tax. Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Campen, 47 S. E. 658, 664, 135 N. C. 506.

PENAL ACTION.

An action under section 7 of the Anti-Trust Law, Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 210 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3202], providing that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by the act may sue therefor in any Circuit Court of the United States, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, is not a "penal action" within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 1047 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 727], prescribing a limitation of five years for a suit or prosecution for any penalty or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, accruing under the laws of the United States. But the action is one for the enforcement of a civil remedy given by statute for a private injury, compensatory in its purpose and effect. City of Atlanta v. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works (U. S.) 127 Fed. 23, 29, 61 C. C. A. 387, 64 L. R. A. 721.

PENALTY.

Proceeding to recover penalty as civil action, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

A penalty is a sum of money which the law exacts the payment of by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited, or omitting to do some act which is required to be done. The imposition of a fine or imprisonment is not in any legal sense a penalty. People v. Sloan, 90 N. Y. Supp. 762, 763 (citing Village of Lancaster v. Richardson [N. Y.] 4 Lans. 136).

PENDING.

See, also, "Suit Pending."

An action is deemed to be pending until the time for appeal has passed. Grannis v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 77 Pac. 647, 649, 143 Cal. 630.

PEON.

See "Condition of Peonage."

A "peon" is defined as "a debtor held by his creditor in a qualified servitude to work out the debt." The involuntary servitude prohibited by the federal Constitution is a personal servitude. An unwilling servitude enforced by the stronger to collect a debt is to reduce the victim to the condition of a peon, and logically to a condition of peonage. United States v. McClellan (U. S.) 127 Fed. 971, 976 (quoting Black, Law Dict.).

PER SE.

See "Libelous Per Se"; "Slander Per Se."

PERCOLATING WATER.

Percolating waters may either be rain waters which are slowly infiltrating through the soil, or they may be waters seeping through the banks or bed of a stream, which have so far left the bed and other waters as to have lost their character as part of the flow. Montecito Valley Water Co. v. City of Santa Barbara (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1113, 1116 (citing Vineland Irr. Dist. v. Azusa Irr. Co., 126 Cal. 486, 58 Pac. 1057, 46 L. R. A. 820).

PERFECT INSTRUMENT.

Instruments are said to become "perfect" on registration being had or on noting for registration, because they are then good as to all the world from that time. Wilkins v. McCorkle (Tenn.) 80 S. W. 834, 837.

PERFECT OWNERSHIP.

Ownership is "perfect" when it is perpetual. Where a claim against a city was assigned to a person in payment of a debt due him, and on further condition and consideration that he should devote the balance to be collected pro tanto to the payment of the debts due to the assignor's other creditors in whose favor to that extent such person bound himself by written contracts, as to such proportion of the claim as was needed to pay the debt due to such person his ownership was perfect, being perpetual and unincumbered by conditions. Sintes v. Commerford, 36 South. 656, 659, 112 La. 706.

PERFECT TITLE.

"A perfect title is one which shows the absolute right of possession and of property in a particular person." Henderson v. Beatty (Iowa) 99 N. W. 716, 718 (citing Wilcox Lumber Co. v. Bullock, 109 Ga. 532, 35 S. E. 52).

PERFORMANCE.

See "Part Performance."

PERIOD.

See "Such Period."

PERIODICAL.

"A periodical, as ordinarily understood, is a publication appearing at stated intervals, each number of which contains a variety of original articles by different authors, devoted either to general literature, or some special branch of learning, or to a special class of subjects. Ordinarily each number is incomplete in itself, and indicates a relation with prior or subsequent numbers of the same series. It implies a continuity of literary character, a connection between the different numbers of the series in the nature of the articles appearing in them, whether they be successive chapters of the same story or novel, or essays upon subjects pertaining to general literature. If, for instance, one number were devoted to law, another to medicine, another to religion, another to music, another to painting, etc., the publication could not be considered as a periodical, as there is no connection between the subjects and no literary continuity. It could scarcely be supposed that ordinary readers would subscribe to a publication devoted to such an extensive range of subjects. A book is readily distinguishable from a periodical, not only because it usually has a more substantial binding (although this is by no means essential), but, in fact, that it ordinarily contains a story, essay, or poem, or a collection of such by the same author, although even this is by no means universal, as books frequently contain articles by different authors. Books are not often issued periodically, and, if so, their periodicity is not an element of their character." Books complete in themselves are not, because published at stated intervals and in consecutive numbers, "periodical publications," within Act March 3, 1879, c. 180, § 10, 20 Stat. 359 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2646], declaring that mailable matter of the second class shall embrace all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals. Houghton v. Payne, 24 Sup. Ct. 590, 592, 194 U. S. 88, 48 L. Ed. 888.

The refusal by the Postmaster General to admit to the mails, as a periodical publication entitled to second-class rates, a monthly musical publication, each issue of which is complete in itself, treating of the works of a single master musician, with a greater portion of its pages devoted to specimens of his genius, is not so clearly an erroneous exercise of his discretion as to call for interference by the courts. Bates & Guild Co. v. Payne, 24 Sup. Ct. 595, 194 U. S. 106, 48 L. Ed. 894.

PERJURY.

Perjury is the willful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath, or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in an affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion being known to such witness to be false, and being intended by him to mislead the court, jury, or person holding the proceeding. Herring v. State, 46 S. E. 876, 879, 119 Ga. 709 (quoting Wharton on Crim. Law).

Etymologically, the signification of the word "perjury" is the false swearing upon oath lawfully administered in some judicial proceeding. United States v. Howard (U. S.) 132 Fed. 325, 338 (citing Worcester, Dict.; 2 Bouv. Dict. tit. "Perjury").

PERMANENT ABODE.

A permanent abode is a home which a party may leave as interest or whim may dictate, but which he has no present intent to abandon. Sullivan v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. (Mich.) 98 N. W. 756, 760, 64 L. R. A. 673 (citing Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 170).

PERMANENT EMPLOYMENT.

"Permanent employment" means employment for an indefinite time, which may be severed by either party. The term "permanent employment," as used in a contract whereby a corporation agreed to give an attorney permanent employment as counsel if he would render certain services and the scheme involved should prove a success, is satisfied by his employment thereafter for the period of a year at a fixed salary. Sullivan v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. (Mich.) 98 N. W. 756, 760, 64 L. R. A. 673 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

PERMIT.

The word "permit" means to resign; to allow; to suffer; to put up with; not to prohibit. Murphy v. Roney (Ky.) 82 S. W. 396, 398.

A debtor who does not pay a lawful debt when due, upon which the creditor obtains a judgment against him and levies on his property, "suffers and permits" the creditor to obtain a preference, through legal proceedings, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3, subd. 3, cl. a, 30 Stat. 546, 547 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3422]. Bogen & Trummel v. Protter (U. S.) 129 Fed. 533.

PERPETUITY.

Remainders created by the will of a life tenant under a power of appointment to the descendants of persons who were themselves not in esse when the grantor of the power died and his will conferring it took effect are in violation of the rule against perpetuities, for the period fixed and prescribed by law for the future vesting of an estate is a life or lives in being at the time of its commencement, and 21 years and a fraction of a year beyond, to cover the period of gestation; and where property is rendered inalienable, or its vesting is deferred for a longer period, the law denounces the devise or grant as a perpetuity and declares it void. Graham v. Whitridge (Md.) 57 Atl. 609, 611, 66 L. R. A. 408.

A devise of a life estate, and, after the death of the life tenant, to his widow and children, is not a "perpetuity," under Ky. St. § 2360, as the remainder must vest within 21 years after a life in being; but a conveyance of a life estate after the death of the life tenant, to go to his children until the youngest reaches the age of 25 years, when the estate is to be divided, is a perpetuity. Johnson's Trustee v. Johnson (Ky.) 79 S. W. 293, 294; Johnson v. Merritt, Id.

A provision in a will for the deposit of money in bank, the interest to be used to keep testator's burial lot in good condition yearly, creates a perpetuity, in violation of a constitutional prohibition thereof. McIlvain v. Hockaday (Tex.) 81 S. W. 54, 55.

PERSON.

All persons, see "All."

Any other person, see "Any Other."

Any person, see "Any."

Corporation.

A city ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful for any engineer, conductor, or other "person" to run or permit to be run on any railroad track within the limits of the city any locomotive engine, car, or train at a greater speed than eight miles per hour applies to railroad corporations operating railroads within the city. Southern R. Co. v. Jones (Ind.) 71 N. E. 275.

A corporation is included in the term "person" as used in the statutes. Goldzier v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 88 N. Y. Supp. 214, 215, 43 Misc. Rep. 667 (citing Scharmann & Sons v. De Palo, 72 N. Y. Supp. 1008, 66 App. Div. 29).

The word "persons," in Mills' Ann. St. § 413, providing that any person who shall employ a child under 14 years of age in a mill shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, applies to corporations as well as to natural persons. Overland Cotton Mill Co. v. People (Colo.) 75 Pac. 924, 925.

The expression "person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423], providing that any natural person, except a wage-earner, or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, and any corporation principally engaged in manufacturing, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, applies only to natural persons, and not to corporations. In re Lake Jackson Sugar Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 640, 643.

County.

Each organized county is a body corporate, and as such deemed to be a "person," within Const. art. 6, § 2, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Harris v. Stearns (S. D.) 97 N. W. 361, 362.

Estate.

A "person" includes a corporation and a joint-stock company, but it does not include an estate, or where an action is brought by the representative of an estate or trust as such; for the estate or the trust, and not the person who represents it, is really the party. Cole v. Manson, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1011, 42 Misc. Rep. 149.

PERSON INTERESTED.

See "Interested."

PERSON LOSING.

All those who have lost more than they have won during a sitting by playing at cards are "persons losing," within the meaning of Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 38, § 132, which provides that any person who shall at any time or sitting by playing at cards lose to any person so playing any money amounting to $10, and shall pay the same, may sue and recover the money by action in assumpsit. Zellers v. White, 70 N. E. 669, 672, 208 Ill. 518, 100 Am. St. Rep. 243.

PERSONAL INJURY.

See, also, "Injury to the Person."

The words "personal injuries," as used in Laws 1886, c. 572, p. 801, relating to actions against municipal corporations for damages for personal injuries, includes injuries resulting in death. Orapo v. City of Syracuse, 90 N. Y. Supp. 553, 555.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Personal property is the right or interest which a person has in things personal. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 97, 111 La. 982.

At common law fixed and movable machinery are alike regarded as personal property. Commissioners of Anne Arundel County v. Baltimore Sugar Refining Co. (Md.) 58 Atl. 211, 212.

Mirrors resting on mantels or slabs, and secured at the top by iron spikes driven into the wall, through which screws were driven into the mirror frames, which had been treated by the owners both of the personal property and the realty as personal property, are held to be "personal property," although the frames were painted in the same style as the woodwork of the room. Cranston v. Beck (N. J.) 56 Atl. 121.

Shares of stock in a corporation are personal property belonging to the respective shareholders, and are within the scope and operation of Const. art. 3, § 51, which declares that the personal property of residents in the state shall be subject to taxation in the county or city where the resident bona fide resides for the greater part of the year for which the tax may be levied, and not elsewhere, except goods and chattels permanently located, which shall be taxed in the city or county where they are so located. City of Baltimore v. Allegany County Com'rs (Md.) 57 Atl. 632, 636.

Rev. St. Ohio 1890-92, § 2731, providing that "all property, whether real or personal, in this state, * * * and all money, credits, investments and bonds, stocks and otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation," when construed in connection with the related sections, which require the listing for taxation of property held by trustees or agents for others, includes, and subjects to taxation as "personal property," every form of such property having a situs in the state, including such forms as money, credits, bonds, or stocks, whether such situs is given by reason of the residence of the owner in the state, in which case such forms of property are taxed without regard to the place of their deposit, or whether by reason of their being held within the state by an agent of a nonresident owner; and municipal bonds deposited with the state superintendent of insurance by a foreign insurance company for the protection of Ohio policy holders, as required by section 3660, are taxable, and when not returned by either the company or the superintendent of insurance may properly be listed by the auditor of the county in which they are held. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto v. Halliday (U. S.) 126 Fed. 257, 265, 61 C. C. A. 271.

A suit in equity in a federal circuit court, to enjoin the further prosecution therein of an action at law against complainant, on a promissory note, by a citizen and resident of the state in which the suit is brought, and to have such note canceled and delivered up to complainant, on the ground that it was one obtained by fraud, is one to enforce an equitable claim to "personal property" within the district, within the meaning of the judiciary act of March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 8, 18 Stat. 472 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 513], and the court is authorized by an order made thereunder to bring in the nonresident payee of the note, who is alleged in the bill to have or claim some interest therein, the note being personal property. Manning v. Berdan (U. S.) 132 Fed. 382, 383.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE.

The words "personal representatives," as used in a statute relative to the foreclosure of mortgages by advertisement, which requires notice to be served upon the mortgagor or his personal representatives, means executors or administrators, and not heirs or devisees. Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College, 46 S. E. 253, 260, 54 W. Va. 32.

The words "heirs" and "personal representatives," as used in 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4828, providing that, when the death of a person is caused by any injury received from the wrongful act of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action, include only the widow and children of the deceased person, and do not authorize an action by the mother for the wrongful death of her unmarried adult son, on whom she was dependent. Manning v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 75 Pac. 994, 84 Wash. 406.

PERSONAL SERVITUDE.

The involuntary servitude prohibited by the federal Constitution is a "personal servitude," and this "consists in the subjection of one person to another. If it consists in the right of property which a person exercises over another, it is slavery. When the subjection of one person to another is not slavery, it consists simply in the right of requiring of another what he is bound to do or not to do. This right arises from all kinds of contracts or quasi contracts." United States v. McClellan (U. S.) 127 Fed. 971, 978 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 986).

PETITION.

The word "petition," as used in a statute relating to the granting of liquor licenses, means a request by eligible citizens to a county court to grant a dramshop license to a designated applicant to keep a dramshop in a designated locality. A blank form of petition, not addressed to any court, and failing to designate the town where the signers are residents, or to ask for the granting of a license to any person, the signers' names being appended to blank books, circulated independent of the blank form, is insufficient. State ex rel. Marbury v. Tulloch (Mo.) 82 S. W. 645, 646.

PHYSICAL IMPOSSIBILITY.

"Physical impossibility," when applied to the ability of a party to perform his contract, means "practical impossibility according to the state of knowledge and of the day." One who signed on April 28th a contract to convey land on April 23d of the same year is not bound because of the impossibility of performance of such contract. Le Roy v. Jacobosky, 48 S. E. 798, 801 (quoting 9 Cyc. 326).

PHYSICIAN.

See "County Physician"; "Traveling Physician."

"The relation of physician and patient (so far as Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prohibiting the disclosure by a physician of professional information, unless waived by the patient, is concerned) springs from the fact of professional treatment, independent of the causes which led to such treatment." Meyer v. Supreme Lodge K. P., 70 N. E. 111, 112, 178 N. Y. 63, 64 L. R. A. 839.

PICKING.

Picking at one may mean mere innocent amusement, and it may not tend to show anything criminal. Where, on a prosecution for rape, defendant denied that he was intimate with prosecutrix, and denied that while in the tent of a certain person he had been reproved for his conduct with prosecutrix, it was error subsequently to permit the husband of such person to testify for the state that he and his wife were in their tent, and that defendant was then talking to the girl, and that he kept "picking at her," and that witness' wife then said that she did not want any such conduct in the tent, and that if there had to be anything of the kind between defendant and prosecutrix she did not want defendant there any more; the phrase "picking at her" being indefinite, and the remarks of witness' wife probably indicating to the jury that the conduct of defendant was indecent. Denton v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 560, 561.

PIER.

See "Public Pier."

A pier is a structure extending from the solid land out into the water to afford convenient passage for persons and property to and from vessels along side of the pier. Its use is thus shown to be essentially the same as that of a way, and it bears to the vessels moored beside it relations similar to those which a way bears to contiguous places. A pier may also be, as a way, either public or private, and when the state granted the right to build piers on this land the right covered public as well as private piers. Borough of Seabright v. Allgor, 56 Atl. 287, 288, 69 N. J. Law, 641.

PISTOL

As deadly weapon, see "Deadly Weapon."

The furnishing of a Stevens 32-caliber rifle by a father to his minor son was not an offense, within Rev. St. 1898, § 4397, prohibiting any person from giving any "pistol or revolver" to a minor. Taylor v. Seil (Wis.) 97 N. W. 498.

PLACE.

See "Public Place"; "Suspicious Place." Any place, see "Any."

The word "place," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 7605, providing that all places where intoxicating liquors are sold in violation of law shall be common nuisances, means the particular place, room, or apartment wherein the liquor was kept for sale or sold in violation of law. Where a boarder at a hotel kept intoxicating liquor in his bedroom, and on three or four occasions sold liquor to persons in the hotel, but without the knowledge or consent of the owner of the building, or of the proprietor thereof, the hotel could not be adjudged a common nuisance, and the particular place or room where the liquor was kept or sold could only be adjudged a nuisance and abated, on its being particularly identified in the proofs. State ex rel. Kelly v. Nelson (N. D.) 99 N. W. 1077, 1078.

The word "place," as used in a plat showing a pond with trees, which had not been planted about it, should be construed as meaning "park"; it being perfectly clear that the donors intended that the space should be used for a pleasure ground for the public. Fessler v. Town of Union (N. J.) 56 Atl. 272, 276.

The words "time and place," in Gen. St. 1902, § 1130, requiring a description in the notice of the time and place of the occurrence of the injury, means a statement of the day and hour when, and a description of the locality where, the person injured received the direct injury to his person or property from the defendant's negligent act, as nearly as these facts can be given. Peck v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 58 Atl. 757, 758, 77 Conn. 161.

PLACER GOLD.

As merchandise, see "Merchandise."

PLACER LOCATION.

"A placer location is not a location of lodes or veins underneath the surface, but is simply a claim of a tract or parcel of ground for the sake of loose deposits of mineral upon or near the surface. A lode or vein may be known to exist at the time of the placer location or not known until long after the patent therefor has been issued. There being no necessary connection between the placer and the vein, Congress * * * has provided that in an application for a placer patent the applicant shall include any vein or lode of which he has possession, and that if he does not make such inclusion the omission is to be taken as a conclusive declaration that he has no right of possession of such vein or lode. If, however, no vein or lode within the placer claim is known to exist at the time the patent is issued, then the patentee takes title to any which may be subsequently discovered." Clipper Min. Co. v. Eli Mining & Land Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 632, 635, 194 U. S. 220, 48 L. Ed. 944.

PLAIN.

See "Paper Envelopes, Plain."

PLANS.

Plans may be important, or even necessary, to indicate the methods to be followed and the results to be accomplished in carrying out a building contract. But there is a distinction between them and specifications that provide for the kinds, quality, and quantity of materials to be used and the work to be done, and the time and manner of doing it, without which the contract would be incomplete and ineffective. They are not in the same sense nor to the same extent an integral part of the contract. Their office is rather to illustrate and explain what is to be done. In order to sustain a mechanic's lien, specifications which are expressly made a part of the contract, or are referred to as a part thereof, must be filed with the contract; but the plans of the work, not being, like the specifications, an integral part of the contract, need not be filed. Knelly v. Horwath, 57 Atl. 957, 958, 208 Pa. 487.

PLANT.

The word "plant" in Code 1896, § 1749, declaring that a master is liable for any injury to his servant caused by any defect in the ways, works, machinery, or plant, comprises whatever apparatus, fixtures, or tools a master uses in his business. Any injury resulting to an employé from the negligence of the employer, or of another employé intrusted by the common master with the duty of seeing that his plant is in proper condition, in not providing suitable tools, implements, or appliances, or in allowing such tools, implements, or appliances to be in a defective condition, is within such provision. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Mobley, 36 South. 181, 184, 139 Ala. 425.

PLANTER.

A planter is one who is engaged in the business of producing crops from the soil, and it is immaterial whether he sows and reaps with his own hand, with the hand of a tenant, the hand of a cropper, or the hand of a hired laborer. Butler, Stevens & Co. v. Georgia & A. Ry. Co., 47 S. E. 320, 322, 119 Ga. 959.

PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

A "plea in abatement" is one in which is set up matter tending to defeat or suspend the suit or proceeding in which it is interposed, but which does not debar the plaintiff from recommencing another action at some other time or in some other way. Chicago & Bloomington Stone Co. v. Nelson, 69 N. E. 705, 706, 32 Ind. App. 355.

"Plea in abatement" do not deny the merits of plaintiff's claim, but simply tend to delay the remedy, and to support such a plea it must appear that the two suits are for the same cause or causes of action, or the identity of the matters involved must be such that a judgment in the first could be pleaded in bar as a former adjudication. Botto's Ex'r v. Botto (Ky.) 80 S. W. 174.

PLEA OF CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

The defense or "plea of contributory negligence" is in the nature of a confession and avoidance. It, standing alone, necessarily admits that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of defendant. Buechner

v. City of New Orleans, 36 South. 603, 605, 112 La. 599, 66 L. R. A. 334.

PLEA OF GUILTY.

Under a provision of the Penal Code, providing that if a jury shall find any person guilty of murder they shall also find the degree, and if any person shall plead guilty to murder a jury shall be summoned to find the degree, etc., a trial of a prosecution for murder is precisely the same under the plea of guilty as under the plea of not guilty, and in such a case a plea of guilty is not tantamount to a confession of murder in the first degree. Murray v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 927.

PLEA TO THE JURISDICTION.

A plea to the jurisdiction is an affirmative plea, for it is only by asserting an affirmative position that the plea can prevail. On the trial of an issue of fact raised by a plea to the jurisdiction the burden is on defendant to establish the averments of his plea. J. B. Pyron & Son v. Ruohs, 48 S. E. 434, 435, 120 Ga. 1000.

PLEADING.

The section of the Code relating to verification of pleadings has no application to an application and affidavit under Code, § 3901, providing for the examination of an attachment defendant on oath respecting his property when it appears by the affidavit of plaintiff that not enough property is known on which attachment can be executed to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. Carpenter v. Clements, 98 N. W. 129, 131, 122 Iowa, 294.

PLEADS.

The words "avers," "says," and "pleas," as used in a pleading, are equivalent terms, and the use of the word "pleads" means no more than the preceding words, and signifies no more than they would, to characterize the language as a plea, than if it had not been used. Mylin v. King, 35 South. 908, 1000, 139 Ala. 319.

PLEDGE.

"A pledge is a bailment of personal property to secure an indebtedness. A pledge cannot be created by delivery of title deeds." A third person paying the purchase money at the instance of the vendee, and taking the title to the land direct to the vendor, holds neither the land nor title as pledgee. Such a transaction is the equivalent of the vendor's conveyance to the vendee, and a conveyance by the vendee to the person paying the purchase money as security for the debt. Fleming v. Georgia R. Bank, 48 S. E. 420, 422, 120 Ga. 1023 (citing Civ. Code 1895, § 2958; Davis v. Davis, 88 Ga. 191, 14 S. E. 194).

A pledge is trust property, and the character of a pledgee is that of a trustee. The law does not permit a pledgee to purchase the pledge at his own sale except upon an agreement with the pledgor, because he has a duty to perform in relation to the property inconsistent with the character of a purchaser, and such a sale is voidable at the option of the pledgor. Wetherell v. Johnson (Ill.) 70 N. E. 229, 231, 208 Ill. 247 (citing Union Trust Co. v. Rigdon, 93 Ill. 458; 22 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law [2d Ed.] 891; Cook, Stock and Stockholders, § 479).

POLICE OFFICER.

The chief of police of a city is a police officer, within the rule of the board of police examiners, created by the charter of the city, providing that no member of the police force should be permitted to be a delegate to any caucus or take part in any political canvass. Brownell v. Russell (Vt.) 57 Atl. 103, 104.

POLICE POWER.

The subjects for the exercise of the police power are, first, preservation of the public health; second, preservation of the public morals; third, regulation of business enterprises; fourth, regulation of civil rights of individuals; and, fifth, the general welfare and safety of the citizens. Commonwealth v. Reinecke Coal Min. Co. (Ky.) 79 S. W. 287, 290.

"Police power" includes everything essential to the public safety, health, and morals, and justifies the destruction or abatement, by summary proceedings, of whatever may be regarded as a public nuisance. Bland v. People (Colo.) 76 Pac. 339, 362, 65 L. R. A. 424 (citing Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385).

"What is called police power appertains to the sovereignty of the state, but is exercised by that sovereignty through the agency of municipalities, as well as through direct statutory enactments operative throughout the commonwealth. That is to say, the power to enact regulations for the welfare, health, and good morals of a community within the limits of a city or town is largely delegated by the state to its municipal governments. But in every case of municipal legislation under the guise of the police power, express or implied authority for the ordinance must be found in the charter of the city or in some other statute." Carpenter v. Reliance Realty Co., 77 S. W. 1004, 1008, 103 Mo. App. 480.

POLICEMAN.

As peace officer, see "Peace Officer."

POLITICAL PARTY.

Any combination or aggregation of electors with sufficient coherence and organization to have acted together for a common purpose, and sufficient strength and certainty to have polled 2 per cent. of the highest vote at the next preceding election, is a "political party," within Act June 10, 1893, § 2 (P. L. 419), relating to the putting of nominations on the ballot by certificate by any political party which at the election next preceding polled at least 2 per cent. of the largest entire vote for any office cast in the state or in the electoral district or division. Independence Party Nomination, 57 Atl. 344, 346, 208 Pa. 108.

POLITICAL RIGHT.

"Political rights consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of the government. These political rights are fixed by the Constitution. Every citizen has the right of voting for public officers and of being elected. These are the political rights which the humblest citizen possesses." Winnett v. Adams (Neb.) 99 N. W. 681, 684 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict.).

POLITICAL SUBDIVISION.

A school district is not a "political subdivision of the state," within the meaning of that term as used in a constitutional provision giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction of appeals in cases where a county or other political subdivision of the state is a party. School Dist. No. 1 v. Boyle (Mo.) 81 S. W. 409, 410, 182 Mo. 347.

POLL TAX.

As tax, see "Tax."

PORT.

See "Home Port."

The word "port" is defined in Rev. St. U. S. § 2767 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1861], as including any place from which merchandise can be shipped for importation or at which merchandise can be imported. The word as used in the revenue act rests somewhat in theory, and involves intention and perhaps certain acts to make its operation effectual. The language of the statute is that it may include places where cargoes are received and discharged, thus indicating a distinction between a commercial and a fiscal port. It cannot be the intention of the law that a vessel must report at the barge office before it can be considered in port, since there are several piers or docks between that office and the mouth of the river. The statutes of Illinois provide that the city of Chicago shall have jurisdiction over Lake Michigan for a distance of three miles beyond the city limits, and the ordinances of that city give the city harbor master control over lake water outwardly for the same distance between the north and south lines of the city. Held, as to certain barges in tow which had reached a place within these limits within the outer harbor works, where it was usual for such a tow to be broken up so that the barges might be taken to their separate docks, that they should be considered as in the port of Chicago for the purpose of fixing the time their cargoes became dutiable, though the arrival had not been reported at the barge office. Hartwell Lumber Co. v. United States (U. S.) 128 Fed. 306, 307.

PORTION.

See "Lowermost Portion."

POSSESS.

Own synonymous, see "Own."

An allegation that a person was "seised and possessed" of land prima facie imports seisin in fact, not mere seisin in law. Bragg v. Wiseman (W. Va.) 47 S. W. 90, 91.

POSSESSION.

See "Actual Possession"; "Adverse Possession"; "Peaceable Possession"; "Property in Possession."

The word "possession" means prima facie actual possession. Bragg v. Wiseman (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 90.

The word "possession," as used in Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 1340, giving the remedy of partition to cotenants "who hold and are in possession of" realty, means the possession which the law imputes to the holder of the legal title. Heinze v. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.) 126 Fed. 1, 3, 61 C. C. A. 63.

Evidence that a defendant was one of a party engaged in a common unlawful enterprise, that of shooting game in the closed season, is sufficient upon which to base a conviction of such defendant upon the charge of having in his "possession" game protected by the statute, although the game when taken is shown to have been in a buggy not occupied or being driven by the defendant. McMahon v. State (Neb.) 97 N. W. 1035.

Possession is the having or holding or detention of property in one's power or command. Defendant formed a plot to obtain possession of certain indictments for the purpose of destroying them by bribing the assistant district attorney having them in charge to deliver them to him for a certain consideration. A third party, pretending to act for the district attorney, delivered them to him, and he took possession of them, and walked away, whereon he was arrested and the indictments recovered. It was held that defendant was properly convicted under Pen. Code, § 531, of an attempt to commit grand larceny in the second degree. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 178 N. Y. 274 (quoting Harrison v. People, 50 N. Y. 518, 10 Am. Rep. 517).

"Possession is the having, holding, or detention of property in one's power or command; actual seizure or occupancy." The mere fact that one who works elsewhere lodges and boards on premises the legal title to which is in him with whom he boards, and who claims and exercises full power, control, and dominion over the property by virtue of such legal title, does not constitute possession such as would be notice, in and of itself, of any equitable interest that such lodger or boarder would have in and to the premises or any part thereof. Derrett v. Britton (Tex.) 80 S. W. 562, 563.

"The character of possession for the statutory period necessary to toll the right of entry by the legal title holder must be such as amounts constantly to a trespass against the true title (that is, it must be an actual physical entry upon or control of the premises, and be continuous); it must be open (that is, it must of itself be such as to afford notice to the rightful owner of its hostile nature); it must be adverse (that is, it must be against and in defiance of the claim of the real title holder, and be such as to exclude his authority); and it must be accompanied by the claim by the occupant that it is his property." Owsley v. Owsley (Ky.) 77 S. W. 397, 401.

POSSIBLE.

See "If Possible."

Results which are only possible cannot be spoken of as either probable or natural. For the latter are those things or events which are likely to happen, and which for that reason should be foreseen. Things which are possible may never happen, but those which are natural or probable are those which do happen, and happen with such frequency or regularity as to become a matter of definite inference. Douglass v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 58 Atl. 160, 161, 209 Pa. 128 (citing South Side Passenger Ry. Co. v. Trich, 117 Pa. 390, 11 Atl. 627, 2 Am. St. Rep. 672).

POST OFFICE.

As contemplated in the statutes of the United States, and in the sense in which the word is ordinarily used, "post office" is the room or building where the local business of the postal department is conducted. A policy insuring articles sent by mail provided that no article should be considered as insured until a letter of advice, with a description of the property, be deposited in the post office at the place of mailing, and that the article should be deposited and registered at the post office. The word "post office" as used in the policy was used in this sense, and a mail box was not included. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 532, 534.

POTENTIAL EXISTENCE.

"Potential" means existing in possibility; anything that may be possible; and "potential existence" means that the thing may be at some time. Webster. Where a building contract provided for the payment of the stipulated price in installments as the work progressed, the debt accruing thereunder from the owner to the contractor has a sufficient potential existence, after the contract was made, to sustain a parol equitable assignment of a portion thereof. Campbell v. J. E. Grant Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 794, 796.

POTION.

See "Noxious Potion or Substance."

POWER.

"A power exists in law only for some purpose, and, when fully executed by the accomplishment of its purpose, it is exhausted." City of Philadelphia v. Johnson, 57 Atl. 1114, 208 Pa. 645.

POWER COUPLED WITH AN INTEREST.

"A power coupled with an interest is when the power or authority is coupled with an interest in the thing itself actually vested in the agent. It must not be merely an interest in that which is produced by the exercise of the power. The former is irrevocable, while the latter is revocable, though expressed to be irrevocable." Angle v. Marshall (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 882, 886 (quoting Walker v. Denison, 86 Ill. 142).

When a power of attorney is coupled with an interest, by such interest is not meant an interest in that which is produced by the exercise of power, but it must be an interest in the property in which the power is to operate. The authority to sell on commission is not an authority coupled with an interest. Taylor v. Burns (Ariz.) 76 Pac. 623, 625 (citing Trickey v. Crowe [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 968).

Where one H. made written application for a loan from M., and in such application appointed M.'s agent his attorney in fact to execute a note and mortgage in case H. failed to do so, and thereafter H. died before the loan was advanced or the application accepted by M., such power of attorney was not a "power coupled with an interest," and was terminated by the death of H. Brown v. Skotland, 97 N. W. 543, 545, 12 N. D. 445.

PRACTICABLE.

See "As Soon as Practicable."

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

"The term 'practice of medicine and surgery' embraces probably the larger, and certainly by far the most profitable, part of the treatment of diseases, but is not coextensive with the latter term, and cannot be made so, unless surgery and medicine are adopted as the state system of treatment, and all other methods are made indictable." A statute designating who are eligible to practice medicine and surgery, and defining the expression "practice of medicine and surgery" as meaning "the management for fee or reward of any case of disease, physical or mental, real or imaginary, with or without drugs, surgical operations, surgical or mechanical appliances, or by any other method whatsoever," attempts to create a monopoly, and is void. State v. Biggs, 46 S. E. 401, 405, 133 N. C. 729, 64 L. R. A. 139, 98 Am. St. Rep. 731.

PRECEDENT.

See "Condition Precedent."

PRECINCT.

See "Proper Precinct."

PRECIOUS STONES.

Articles, such as bowls, vases, trays, wine pitchers, teacups, altar sets, flower stands, and other completed articles, manufactured from jade by cutting, carving, or other means, are not "precious stones," within paragraph 435, Schedule N, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 192 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1633], but are dutiable under paragraph 97, Schedule B, 30 Stat. 156 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1633], covering "articles and wares composed wholly and in chief value of mineral substances." C. L. Tiffany & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 255.

PRE-EMPTION INTEREST.

A pre-emption interest is a right to purchase at a fixed price, within a limited time, in preference to others. Davenport v. Farrar, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 314, 316.

PREFERENCE.

In order to constitute a "preference," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, the debtor must do some act to facilitate the proceedings. Submissive inactivity is not enough. Johnson v. Anderson (Neb.) 97 N. W. 339, 342.

A "preference," such as offends the bankruptcy act, must be one likely in its results to defeat the collection by other creditors of their claims. Essential to such a preference, therefore, is insolvency. Knowledge or a reasonable cause to believe that a preference is intended involves knowledge of a reasonable cause to believe that insolvency exists as a matter of fact. Des Moines Sav. Bank v. Morgan Jewelry Co., 99 N. W. 121, 123, 123 Iowa, 432.

To constitute a preferential transfer, it is immaterial, under the bankruptcy act, to whom the transfer is made, if it be made for the purpose of paying the claims of one creditor in preference to those of others. A creditor of a bankrupt cannot escape the consequences of the bankrupt act regarding unlawful preferences by assigning his account to a purchaser of the property of the bankrupt, under an arrangement whereby such purchaser offers to assume the liability and satisfy such account, contingent upon the purchase of the bankrupt's property, and where, in the sale of such bankrupt's property, as a part of the consideration, such purchaser agrees to and assumes such liability, and reserves from the purchase price an amount sufficient to satisfy the same. Hackney v. Hargreaves Bros. (Neb.) 99 N. W. 675, 677 (citing 5 Cyc. 294; Goldman v. Smith [U. S.] 93 Fed. 182).

To constitute a "preference," it must appear that the bankrupts have made a transfer of their property, the effect of which was to enable one of their creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than others of such creditors of the same class. Engel v. Union Square Bank, 87 N. Y. S. 1070, 1074, 94 App. Div. 244.

Transfers of property amounting to preferences, within the bankruptcy act of 1898, contemplate the parting with the bankrupt's property for the benefit of the creditors and the consequent diminution of the bankrupt's estate. It is such transactions operating, to defeat the purposes of the act, which under its terms are preferences. Insolvents, by depositing money in a bank on an open account, subject to checks, do not thereby make a transfer of property amounting to a preference. New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 201, 192 U. S. 138, 48 L. Ed. 380.

The payment of a bank by an insolvent, within four months prior to bankruptcy, of notes given to third persons, but which have been indorsed to and are owned by the bank, constitutes a preferential payment, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3445]. In re George M. Hill Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 315, 318, 66 L. R. A. 68.

PREFERENCE IN DESIGNATION.

The words "preference in designation," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 35, providing that, when two or more conventions or caucuses shall be held and the nominees thereof certified, each claiming to be the regular convention or caucus of the same political party, "preference in designation" shall be given to the nominations of the ones certified by the committee which has been officially certified to be authorized to represent the party, suggests at once and unmistakably two or more designations, one for the party ticket which is regular, and one for each of those which are irregular. State v. Houser (Wis.) 100 N. W. 964, 974.

PREJUDICE.

Prejudice is a leaning toward one side of a question from other considerations than those belonging to it; in law, a bias on the part of judge, jury, or witness which interferes with fairness of judgment. It applies as well to prejudice in favor of the adverse party as to prejudice against a party making an application for transfer of a cause on the ground of prejudice of the judge. Keen v. Brown (Fla.) 35 South. 401, 402.

PREMEDIATE.

To premeditate is to think of a matter before it is executed. The word "premeditate" would seem to imply something more than deliberate, and may mean that the party not only deliberated, but had formed in his mind the plan of destruction. State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289.

PREMEDITATED DESIGN.

The meaning of the words "premeditated design," as used in the statutory definition of the crime of murder in the first degree, "not being technical words of the common law, is to be found in their meaning as used in the best dictionaries and standard authorities. 'Premeditation' is composed of 'pre' and 'meditation,' and means the act of premeditating; previous deliberation; forethought. Deliberation and premeditation are synonymous. Century Dict. 'And Isaac went out to meditate in the field at eventide.' Gen. xxiv, 63. 'This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate thereon day and night.' Josh. i, 8. 'Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them.' 1 Tim. iv, 15. 'Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable,' etc. Psalm xix, 14.

The word 'meditate,' as thus used in the Bible, implies all the thoughts which can be generated in the mind by the exercise of the discursive or regulative faculties. It certainly implies everything that is implied in the word 'deliberate' and more." In a prosecution for murder, an instruction to the effect that no specific time is required to constitute premeditation, but if the mind of the accused was in a condition to form a purpose, there was sufficient time for the forming of that purpose, and for the mind to be conscious of that purpose to kill, it is sufficient time to constitute premeditation, and if the jury believe beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had fully formed a purpose to shoot and kill, and that he was conscious of that purpose when he fired the shot, they would find him guilty of murder in the first degree, does not afford a clear and correct interpretation of the meaning and design of the Legislature in the use of the phrase "premeditated design" in a statute providing that the unlawful killing of a human being, when perpetrated from a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or any human being, or when committed in the perpetration of or in the attempt to perpetrate any arson, etc., shall be murder in the first degree. Cook v. State (Fla.) 35 South. 605, 671, 678.

"Intent to kill means just what the ordinary signification of the words suggest, whether it be described by the words 'actual intent,' 'design,' or 'premeditated design' makes no difference. When we leave entirely out of view those subtleties, often indulged in, in discoursing on the meaning of 'premeditated design,' and give to words the meaning ordinarily attributed to them, the person who effects the death of another by design does so intentionally, and the design or intent is understood to necessarily precede the act by which the purpose is accomplished. In other words, the intent is understood to be premeditated, or thought of, because, without mental action, the purpose could not be formed. So, when it is said that the slayer intentionally caused the death of his victim, it is at the same time said that he caused it by design, or premeditated design. That the word 'premeditated,' as used in the statutes on the subject of felonious homicide, has no other significance than that the design must precede the homicidal act, is indicated from the evident purpose of the statute makers to give the same meaning to the term 'premeditated design,' where used inclusively in murder in the first degree, as to 'design,' where that word alone is used exclusively in murder in the third degree and manslaughter in the first, second, and third degrees." Cupps v. State (Wis.) 98 N. W. 546, 549.

PREMEDITATION.

"Premeditation," in the statute declaring it murder in the first degree for any person to purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice kill another, is the mental operation of thinking over an act or line of action already decided in the mind before carrying the act or line of action into execution. State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440.

PREMISES.

The term "premises" may or may not include land, but may be held to mean only the right, title, or interest conveyed; and its exact meaning, when found in contracts and conveyances, must be determined according to the intention of the parties as ascertained from the contract and the facts and circumstances attending its making. Merchants' Bldg. Imp. Co. v. Chicago Exch. Bldg. Co., 71 N. E. 22, 27, 210 Ill. 26.

An owner contracted to sell land on which the purchaser, as lessee, had erected buildings, with a right to remove the same. The contract provided that the owner should advance the purchaser a specified sum, and that the purchaser should keep "said premises insured for the benefit of the owner." The purchaser gave to the owner a bill of sale of the buildings and improvements, which recited that it was supplemental to the contract for the purchase of the real estate and security only for the payments called for, and that it should be void when all the payments were made. At the time of the sale there were other buildings on the land than those which belonged to the purchaser. The word "premises," as used in the contract, which the purchaser was to keep insured for the benefit of the owner, referred to buildings other than those belonging to the purchaser as lessee. Dankwardt v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 98 N. W. 603, 604, 123 Iowa, 70.

PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE.

An instruction that by a "preponderance of the evidence" is meant a greater weight of evidence is correct. Ewen v. Wilbor, 70 N. E. 575, 578, 208 Ill. 492.

PRESENCE.

See "Constructive Presence."

See "For the Present."

PRESENT FAIR CONSIDERATION.

The words "present fair consideration" must be determined from all the facts and conditions surrounding the purchase, and if the price paid was in cash, and an amount equal to the fair value of the goods, under all the circumstances, the consideration would be present and fair. Schilling v. Curran (Mont.) 76 Pac. 998, 1002.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 573, 30 Stat. 564 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3449], which requires a "present fair consideration" to support a mortgage given within four months prior to bankruptcy, a mortgage securing notes for $1,500, bearing 6 per cent. interest, for which the consideration was a loan of $1,310, the remainder being for additional interest and bonus, will be sustained, where taken in good faith, but only to the extent of the money actually advanced, with interest. Where the security is taken for a loan of money, the present fair consideration cannot ordinarily be greater than the sum of money lent. In re Sawyer (U. S.) 130 Fed. 384.

PRESENTED.

An indictment is "presented" when it is delivered by the foreman, in the presence of the grand jury, to the court, and filed with the clerk. Shivers v. Territory, 74 Pac. 899, 901, 13 Okl. 466.

See "Liberty of the Press."

PRESUMPTION.

A presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts. Lake County v. Neillon, 74 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 14.

"A presumption is a rule of law that a court or jury shall or may draw a particular inference from a particular fact or from particular evidence, unless and until the truth of such inference is disproved." State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289 (quoting Lawson, Presump. Ev. 639, 640).

A presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from certain facts, and unless controverted, the finding must be according to the presumption. Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 77 Pac. 657, 658, 143 Cal. 646.

A presumption is defined as an inference, affirmative or disaffirmative, of the truth or falsity of any proposition of fact, drawn by a process of probable reasoning, in the absence of actual certainty of its truth or falsity, or until such certainty can be ascertained. In re Dailey's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 538, 540, 43 Misc. Rep. 552.

"Presumptions are a sort of proof, and a substitute in certain stages of a case for affirmative testimony. A disputable presumption may operate as a prima facie case upon a particular point. A presumption acting as a prima facie case stands as proved until the prima facie is destroyed by controverting evidence." The casting of the burden of proof on one party or the other in a given case does not destroy the presumptions in favor of a party which exist under the general law of evidence. The Wildcroft (U. S.) 130 Fed. 521, 528.

The law does not attach the presumption of guilt to any given circumstance, nor does it require the accused to overcome the presumption thereby raised in order to be entitled to an acquittal. What the law does say is that the fact of possession is evidence of guilt, upon which a conviction may properly be returned, unless the other facts or circumstances developed be such that, notwithstanding the recent possession, the jury still entertains a reasonable doubt of the defendant's participation in the crime. It is in this sense that the words "presumption" and "prima facie evidence" must be understood, when employed in this connection. State v. Brady, 97 N. W. 62, 64, 121 Iowa, 561.

PRESUMPTION OF FACT.

"A presumption of fact is a rule of law that a fact otherwise doubtful may be inferred from a fact which is proved. A presumption is an inference as to the existence of a fact, not actually known, arising from its usual or necessary connections with others, which are known. Presumptions of fact are but inferences drawn from other facts and circumstances in the case, and should be made upon common principles of induction. Presumptions of fact are at best but mere arguments, and are to be judged by the common and received tests of the truth of propositions and the validity of arguments." State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289 (quoting Lawson, Presump. Ev. 639, 640).

PRESUMPTION OF LAW.

A presumption of law is a rule of law that a particular inference shall be drawn by a court or jury from a particular circumstance. State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289 (citing Lawson, Presump. Ev. 639, 640).

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE OF GUILT.

Although the term "presumptive evidence of guilt," as applied to a certain state of facts, may perhaps sometimes indicate no more than that the facts referred to may be considered by the jury as evidence from which guilt may be inferred as a matter of fact, and not as a matter of law, yet it is always unwise, in giving the jury instructions as to the evidence, to say that from any particular fact a presumption of guilt arises. The question of guilt is one to be determined by the jury on all the facts. State v. Poe, 98 N. W. 587, 591, 123 Iowa, 118.

PRETENSE.

See "False Pretense."

PRETERMITTED DEFENSE.

Where a defendant, in an action to recover the penalty for the maintenance of an existing fence encroaching on a highway, fails to avail himself of the defense of title to land where the fence is located, such defense has become what is called a "pretermitted defense," to which equity will not listen as a ground for affirmative relief, and he is not entitled to maintain a suit in equity to restrain the supervisors from removing a contemplated fence, to be located on substantially the same ground. Swennes v. Sprain (Wis.) 97 N. W. 511, 512.

PREVAILING PARTY.

Where, in an action to establish a lien on a chattel in favor of plaintiff, to the total exclusion of a warehouseman's lien in favor of defendant, defendant's lien for a portion of his charges was sustained, plaintiff was not entitled to costs, as being the "prevailing party," within Municipal Court Act, Laws 1902, p. 1584, § 330, awarding costs to the prevailing party in the Municipal Court. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Becket, 85 N. Y. Supp. 391.

A person appearing and filing with permission of the court a motion to dismiss the action becomes thereby a party, and if his motion is sustained, and action dismissed, he is the "prevailing party," and is entitled to costs, under Rev. St. 1883, c. 82, § 130. Thomas v. Thomas, 56 Atl. 651, 653, 98 Me. 184.

PRICE.

See "Satisfactory Price."

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.

The law does not attach the presumption of guilt to any given circumstance, nor does it require the accused to overcome the presumption thereby raised in order to be entitled to an acquittal. What the law does say is that the fact of possession is evidence of guilt, upon which a conviction may properly be returned, unless the other facts or circumstances developed be such that, notwithstanding the recent possession, the jury still entertains a reasonable doubt of the defendant's participation in the crime. It is in this sense that the words "presumption" and "prima facie evidence" must be understood, when employed in this connection. State v. Brady, 97 N. W. 62, 64, 121 Iowa, 561.

PRINCIPAL

See "Vice Principal."

Where defendant proposed a scheme by which he was to obtain possession of certain indictments, for the purpose of destroying them, and under such scheme the indictments were actually removed from the files of the court and delivered to him, he was a "principal" throughout the transaction; and if he took them from the person actually removing them, either with or without his consent, he was guilty of a theft of public records. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 791, 178 N. Y. 274, 18 N. Y. Cr. R. 269 (citing Pen. Code, § 29; People v. Bliven, 112 N. Y. 79, 19 N. E. 638, 8 Am. St. Rep. 701; People v. Peckens, 153 N. Y. 576, 47 N. E. 883).

"To constitute one a principal in the second degree, he must not only be present when the crime is committed, but must aid and abet the actual perpetrator of the crime. One who is present when the crime is committed, but neither assists in its commission nor shares in the criminal intent of its perpetrator," is not a principal in the second degree. Thornton v. State, 46 S. E. 640, 641, 119 Ga. 437.

PRINCIPAL PLACE OF RESIDENCE.

"Principal place of residence" means place of residence. A person cannot, legally speaking, have two places of residence; and the word "principal" may be properly treated as surplusage, in a petition alleging that the petitioner has his principal place of residence within a certain district. Ross-Lewin v. Goold, 71 N. E. 1028, 1029, 211 Ill. 884.

PRINCIPALLY ENGAGED.

The words "principally engaged," in a statute exempting from execution certain articles necessary to carry on the occupation in which one is principally engaged, are not to be construed with reference to the productiveness or profit of one kind of business over another, where two or more occupations are followed at the same time, but with reference to the occupation or business on which the party chiefly relies for a livelihood, and that engrosses the most of his time and attention, not for a day, or a week, or month, but through the year. Smalley v. Masten, 8 Mich. 529, 530, 77 Am. Dec. 467.

PRINTED.

Under Gen. St. 1901, § 1076, providing that, if there is no newspaper printed, printed notices must be conspicuously posted, notices printed on a typewriter are sufficient to meet the statutory requirements. State ex rel. Coleman v. City of Oakland (Kan.) 77 Pac. 694, 696.

PRINTED MATTER.

Paper bags, with incidental printing thereon, are not "printed matter," within the meaning of Tariff Act, July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 403, 30 Stat. 189 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1673]. Kraut v. United States (U. S.) 130 Fed. 392.

PRIOR DISCOVERY.

To constitute a "prior discovery," which will support a location on public grounds as an oil placer claim under the mining laws, the locator must have actually discovered oil within the limits of his claim. Mere surface indications of the existence of oil therein, however strong, are not sufficient, nor is the existence of oil on adjoining lands. Bay v. Oklahoma Southern Gas, Oil & Mining Co., 73 Pac. 936, 940, 13 Okl. 425.

PRISON.

See "State Prison."

PRIVATE CORPORATION.

Private corporations are those created for the immediate benefit and advantage of the individuals constituting them, and the franchises conferred are to be exercised for their advantage. The corporation stands to them in the relation of trustee, holding the property owned by it, and dividing the profits arising from its management and the employment of its franchises, for these individuals as cestuis que trust. Trustees of Carrick Academy v. Clark (Tenn.) 80 S. W. 64, 67.

A railroad company is a "private corporation," in the purview of Const. § 87, providing that the operation of any general law shall not be suspended by the Legislature for the benefit of any individual or private corporation. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 36 South. 74, 76, 83 Miss. 746.

PRIVATE FERRY.

A private ferry is for the transportation of one's own property in his own boat. Parsons v. Hunt (Tex.) 81 S. W. 120, 122.

PRIVATE PROPERTY.

A public office is not private property. Mial v. Ellington, 46 S. E. 961, 134 N. C. 131, 65 L. R. A. 697.

PRIVATE ROAD.

"Private roads" are not to be understood as being synonymous with "ways" at common law, but as indicating a particular class of highways or public ways over which any one may pass without committing trespass. Hartley v. Vermillion, 74 Pac. 987, 991, 141 Cal. 339 (citing Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241, 91 Am. Dec. 577).

PRIVATE WAY.

"The common-law writers divided private ways into several classes, according to the purpose or purposes for which the right of way could be used. Thus, Lord Coke, adopting the civil law, divided them into three kinds: A footway, called 'iter'; a footway and horseway, called 'actus'; and a cartway, which embraced the other two, called 'via'; to which was added a driftway—a road over which cattle could be driven. Woolrych also makes these four classes of ways: Footways; footways and horseways; foot, horse, and carriage ways; and driftways. But these old classifications of private ways are not exhaustive of the subject, for as a private way for any particular purpose could always be created by a grant, and in theory always rested upon a grant, it is evident that when one person granted to another a right of way extending from the land of the grantee over the land of the grantor, for the private use of the grantee, in any manner and for any particular purpose, a private way was created." A right of way for a private railroad across the lines of others, for a person or corporation engaged in the business of quarrying granite or other stone, is a private way. Jones v. Venable, 47 S. E. 549, 550, 120 Ga. 1.

"There are different kinds of public ways and different kinds of private ways, but all ways are included in the one or the other general classification, though some may partake of the nature of both, being maintained and operated for private gain and for use by the public. Jones v. Venable, 47 S. E. 549, 550, 120 Ga. 1.

PRIVILEGE.

See "Conditionally Privileged"; "Terms and Conditions, Rights and Privileges."

Where a lease provided a rental payable monthly for a certain term "with the privilege at the same rate and terms each year thereafter from year to year," such lease did not entitle the lessee to a perpetual right of renewal, but constituted a letting from month to month after the expiration of the term specified. Tischner v. Rutledge, 77 Pac. 388, 35 Wash. 285.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

A libelous communication is regarded as privileged, if made bona fide, upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contains incriminating matter which, without this privilege, would be slanderous and actionable; and this, though the duty be not a legal one, but only a moral or social duty of imperfect obligation. Kersting v. White (Mo.) 80 S. W. 730, 734 (citing Byam v. Collins, 11 N. Y. 143, 19 N. E. 75, 2 L. R. A. 129, 7 Am. St. Rep. 726).

In Hix v. State (Tex.) 20 S. W. 550, the definition of a "privileged communication" from Ormsby v. Douglas, 37 N. Y. 477, is quoted approvingly as follows: "The rule is well settled that a communication which would otherwise be slanderous and actionable is privileged if made in good faith upon a matter involving an interest or duty of the party making it, though such duty be not strictly legal, but an imperfect obligation to a person having a corresponding interest or duty." Stayton v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 1071.

PRIVITY.

"In the law of estoppels, privity signifies merely succession of rights—that is, the devolution in whole or in part of the rights and duties of one person upon another; * * * the derivation of rights by one person from and holding in subordination to those of another, as in the case of a tenant. No one can be bound by or take advantage of the estoppel of another, who does not succeed or hold subordinate to his position." Tenants in common are not in privity to each other, so as to entitle them to take advantage of an estoppel by judgment obtained by one co-tenant, suing alone, to set aside a deed executed by their common ancestor. Allred v. Smith, 47 S. E. 597, 599, 135 N. C. 443, 65 L. R. A. 924 (quoting Bigelow, Estop. 347; Black, Judgm. 549).

PRIZE.

See "Drawing a Prize."

PROBABLE.

Liable synonymous, see "Liable."

The word "probable" is defined as "having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt; likely;" and in common acceptance the word implies, when applied to a condition which may be supposed beforehand, that we know facts enough about the condition supposed to make us reasonably confident of it, or, at the least, that the evidence preponderates in its favor. Gallamore v. City of Omaha, 75 Pac. 978, 980, 34 Wash. 379 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

PROBABLE CAUSE.

Probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution does not depend on the actual state of the case in point of fact, but upon the honesty and reasonable belief of the party commencing the prosecution. The want of probable cause is essential for every suit for malicious prosecution. Richardson v. Dybedahl (S. D.) 98 N. W. 164, 165.

Probable cause, in an action for malicious prosecution, does not depend on the actual state of the case in point of fact, for there may be probable cause for commencing a criminal prosecution against a party, although subsequent developments may show his absolute innocence. Mundal v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (Minn.) 99 N. W. 273, 274.

Probable cause has been variously defined as "reasonable cause, such as would operate on the mind of a discreet man; probable cause, such as would operate on the mind of a reasonable man." There must be such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe and entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person is guilty. McMorris v. Howell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1018, 1019, 89 App. Div. 272.

Probable cause, unlike malice, is not determined by the standard of the particular defendant, but of the ordinarily prudent and cautious man, exercising conscience, impartiality, and reason, without prejudice, upon the facts; and an honest belief, unfounded upon reasonable grounds, is not sufficient. Rawson v. Leggett, 90 N. Y. Supp. 5, 7, 97 App. Div. 416 (citing Heyne v. Blair, 62 N. Y. 19).

Probable cause has reference to the common standard of human judgment and conduct, and malice refers to the mind and judgment of the defendant in the particular act charged as a malicious prosecution. Griswold v. Griswold, 77 Pac. 672, 673, 143 Cal. 617.

PROCEED TO ENFORCE.

The words "proceed to enforce," in a statute providing that creditors may proceed to enforce a judgment at any time within 10 years after the entry thereof, mean to take steps to make it effectual by legal process. Issuing execution on a money judgment is such a step. "To proceed to enforce" and "to enforce" are materially different things. Davidson v. Gaston, 16 Minn. 230, 240 (Gil. 202, 212).

PROCEEDINGS.

The word "proceedings," in the recital of the case-made that it contains all the proceedings, includes the evidence. John Deere Plow Co. v. Jones (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1039; Id., 76 Pac. 750.

In Laws 1903, p. 243, c. 122, § 200, the Legislature used the expression "proceedings of any kind commenced and now pending and not completed on behalf of any city" with reference to the subjects then under consideration, and did not refer to judicial proceedings, but to the organization, powers, and duties of cities of the first class, and particularly of issuing bonds and the erection of public improvements, and it was to protect such proceedings commenced under previously existing law that the saving clause was enacted. State ex rel. Hungate v. City of Topeka (Kan.) 74 Pac. 647, 650.

PROCEEDS.

The word "proceeds," as used in Const. art. 8, § 3, relating to the permanent school fund, and declaring that the proceeds of all lands that have been or may hereafter be granted to the state shall be a perpetual fund for common school purposes, implies a sale and conversion of the lands into money; and the statement in the section that the proceeds shall be a perpetual fund places it beyond question that the true meaning of the provision is that such lands might be sold and the proceeds invested. McMurtry v. Engelhardt (Neb.) 98 N. W. 40, 41.

The word "proceeds," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 98, § 2, relative to Sabbath breaking, but which permits the giving on Sunday of an entertainment by a religious or charitable society, the "proceeds" of which, if any, are to be devoted exclusively to a charitable or religious purpose, means the net returns after the payment of necessary expenses incidental to the entertainment, taking into account not only that which is received but that which is incidentally and properly paid out. Commonwealth v. Alexander, 70 N. E. 1017, 1018, 185 Mass. 551.

The word "proceeds," as used in a contract whereby plaintiff was to receive all the proceeds of logs delivered by one defendant to another, after deducting advances made thereon by the other, means net proceeds after all charges for delivery, including raftage and boomage, have been paid. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 35 South. 823, 83 Miss. 409.

PROCESS.

See "Judicial Process."

The word "process," as used in Rev. St. § 911 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 683], providing that all writs and processes issuing from the courts of the United States shall be under the seal of the court from which they issue, and shall be signed by the clerk thereof, means an order of the court, although it may be issued by the clerk. The summons in a common law action is a "process," but the word does not apply to a notice given under Code Va. 1887, § 3211, authorizing a judgment on a contract to be obtained on motion after 15 days' notice to defendant; and under the Conformity Act, Rev. St. § 914 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 684], an action may be instituted by such a notice in a federal court in Virginia in accordance with the state practice. Leas & McVitty v. Merriman (U. S.) 132 Fed. 510, 513.

Processes issue upon pleadings, orders, and judgments, and must be conformable to such judgments when issued on them. Farmers' Banking & Loan Co. v. Mauck (Neb.) 97 N. W. 835, 836.

PROCESS IN CIVIL ACTION.

See "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

PROCHEIN AMI.

Guardian ad litem distinguished, see "Guardian Ad Litem."

PROFANE.

"As a general rule, words are profane or not, according to the sense in which they are used; and it is necessary to show by other words coupled with them the sense in which they are used, to make a valid charge of using profane language." Roberts v. State, 47 S. E. 511, 120 Ga. 177.

PROFESSION.

Preachers of the gospel are, in a popular, and also in a technical, sense, professional men, just as much as physicians, teachers, and lawyers. A minister of the gospel is therefore following a profession, within the law which makes a person liable, without proof of special damage, for words spoken of another, with reference to his profession, calculated to injure him therein; and it is not necessary that such a minister should, at the time the words are spoken, be receiving compensation for his services. Flanders v. Daley, 48 S. E. 327, 120 Ga. 885.

PROFESSIONAL CAPACITY.

A physician called to treat a patient against his will acts "in a professional capacity," within Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prohibiting the disclosure by a physician of professional information. Meyer v. Supreme Lodge K. P., 70 N. E. 111, 178 N. Y. 63, 64 L. R. A. 839.

PROFIT.

See "Community of Profits"; "Net Profits"; "Surplus Profits."

The word "profits" is susceptible of the construction that it includes the difference between the actual cost and the selling prices. Cooke v. Cain, 77 Pac. 682, 683, 35 Wash. 353.

"While in some cases the profits to be accounted for are spoken of as damages, yet in no case that has been presented is it held that damages, as distinct from or additional to profits, can be decreed in equity in a copyright case, as in patent causes. While the word 'damages' is used in decrees, it is used synonymously with 'profits.' Confusion can be avoided by omitting the word 'damages,' since the word 'profits' is more accurate, and sufficient." Social Register Ass'n v. Murphy (U. S.) 129 Fed. 148.

PROFIT A PRENDRE.

The right to fish is in the ancient legal French called a right "profit a prendre"; a right so peculiarly for personal enjoyment that it is incapable of being acquired by the general public, either by custom or dedication. Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Commission (N. J.) 57 Atl. 398, 399.

"Strictly speaking, a right to cut and take ice is perhaps more in the nature of a profit a prendre than an easement, though it comes within the definition of an easement which was given by Chief Justice Shaw in Ritger v. Parker, 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 145, 54 Am. Dec. 744, and which was quoted with approval by the court in Owen v. Field, 102 Mass. 90." A lease, for a round sum, of premises on the shores of a pond, to be used for a dwelling house and other buildings for the ice business, and providing that the lessor leases to the lessee the right to cut and take ice from the pond, and that the lessee, in addition to the rent, shall deliver to the lessor as much ice as shall be required for two families during the lease, annexes the right to take ice to the leased premises as an easement or a profit a prendre. Walker Ice Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co., 70 N. E. 937, 939, 185 Mass. 463.

PROHIBITION.

"The office of a writ of prohibition is to restrain excess or improper assumption of jurisdiction." Taylor v. Bliss (R. I.) 57 Atl. 939 (citing 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 195).

Prohibition is a restraining, not a corrective, remedy. It "issues only to prevent the commission of a future act, and not to undo an act already performed." Prohibition lies "only to prevent the doing of an act, and can never be used as a remedy for acts already done." Williamson v. Mingo County (W. Va.) 48 S. E. 835, 836 (quoting High, Extr. Leg. Rem. [3d Ed.] § 766: Haldeman v. Davis, 28 W. Va. 324, 326).

At common law the writ of prohibition was issued on the suggestion that the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, did not belong to the inferior jurisdiction, but the cognizance of some other court. "It was an original remedial writ, provided as a remedy for encroachment of jurisdiction. Its office was to restrain subordinate courts and inferior judicial tribunals from extending their jurisdiction." Stein v. Morrison (Idaho) 75 Pac. 246, 256.

PROMISSORY NOTE.

As property, see "Property."

A promissory note is a promise in writing to pay a specified sum at a time therein fixed. In re McGuire & Hanlein (U. S.) 132 Fed. 394, 395.

In order to constitute a promissory note, the instrument must be for a specified sum or certain sum of money. Smith v. Myers (Ill.) 69 N. E. 858, 860.

A promissory note is a written engagement by one person to pay another absolutely and unconditionally a certain sum of money at a time specified therein. White v. Harris, 48 S. E. 41, 43, 69 S. C. 65.

"Promissory notes, among our people, are regarded as securities for money, more or less valuable; indeed, in proportion as the pecuniary ability and credit of the makers of them are more or less reliable." Wagner v. Scherer, 85 N. Y. Supp. 894, 895, 89 App.

Div. 202 (citing Jennings v. Davis, 31 Conn. 134).

PROMISSORY WARRANTY.

Warranties in insurance law are of two kinds—affirmative and promissory. Affirmative warranties consist of a representation in the policy of a fact. Promissory warranties are those that require that something shall be done, or not done after the policy takes effect. Rosenthal Clothing & Dry Goods Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 1021.

PROMOTION.

The term "promotion" is defined as an advancement, or the act of exalting in rank or honor (Webst. Dict.); and as advancement to a higher position, grade, class, or rank; preferment in honor or dignity (Standard Dict.). Const. art. 5, § 9, requires promotions in the civil service to be made according to the merits, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examination; and Laws 1899, p. 795, c. 370, passed in pursuance thereof, provides that telegraph operators in the city of New York shall rank as sergeants of police, and that the selection of captains shall be made from the list of sergeants. Held, that the designation of a patrolman as telegraph operator by the chief of police, intended to be permanent, was a promotion, and, being made without an examination, was without effect. People v. Partridge, 85 N. Y. Supp. 853, 854, 89 App. Div. 497.

PROMPT.

By usage of the Boston grain trade, the phrase "to be shipped prompt" means to be shipped within 10 days. Soper v. Tyler, 58 Atl. 699, 700, 77 Conn. 104.

PROOF.

See "Burden of Proof"; "Indubitable Proof."

Evidence distinguished, see "Evidence."

PROPER CASH ITEM.

"Proper cash items" in a cashier's accounts ordinarily include not only money on hand, but everything for which he has paid out the association's cash during a particular day or business period. United States v. Young (U. S.) 128 Fed. 111, 114.

PROPER PARTY.

The meaning of the term "proper party," as used in the phrase "is not a proper or necessary party," is not so clear as the meaning of the term "not a necessary party." The word "or" may be used in two forms. In one it corresponds to "either," and in that sense the term "proper or necessary" would mean either proper or necessary—that is, one or the other. In the other form it means to express the same thing alternatively in different words. In that sense the term "not proper or necessary" would imply that it was not proper—that is, not necessary. Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 893, 178 Mo. 528.

PROPER PRECINCT.

"Proper precinct," as used in Rev. St. art. 1589, providing that, if there be no justice of the peace qualified to try the suit in the proper precinct, the suit may be commenced before the nearest justice of the peace of the county who is not disqualified to try the same, means that precinct in which the suit is required by the general rule to be commenced or may be commenced under some one of the thirteen exceptions of article 1585; and, if none of these exceptions are applicable, then the proper precinct is the one in the county where the defendant or one or more of the defendants resides, not a county in which one of the defendants resides. Aspermont Drug Co. v. J. W. Crowds Drug Co. (Tex.) 80 S. W. 258, 259.

PROPERLY.

The word "properly," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1739, requiring a certificate of the clerk attached to the transcript that the undertaking on appeal has been properly filed, has reference to the time of the filing of the undertaking; and if it appears by fair intendment from the wording of the certificate, or by a comparison of the date of its filing with that of the filing of the notice of appeal, that the undertaking has been filed in time, this is sufficient. Davidson v. Wampler, 74 Pac. 82, 83, 29 Mont. 61.

PROPERTY.

See "Community Property"; "Lost Property"; "Personal Property"; "Private Property"; "Public Property"; "Separate Property."

All my property, see "All."
Any property, see "Any."

The word "property" implies the exclusive right of possessing, enjoying and disposing of a thing; and, when used subjectively, it means that with respect to which this right exists, or that which is one's own. Vann v. Edwards, 47 S. E. 784, 787, 135 N. C. 661.

The word "property," within Rev. St. 1899, § 7979, declaring that no insurance company shall take a risk on any property in this state greater than three-fourths of the value of the property insured, and, when taken, its value shall not be questioned in any proceeding, embraces both real and personal property. Howerton v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 80 S. W. 27, 29, 105 Mo. App. 575.

The direction in a will that the testator's business shall be carried on with his "estate and property" comprehends the use of all his real and personal property for that purpose. It would seem to be evident that to use, in carrying on the business, the testator's estate and property, is to apply thereto all income, however it may be produced, from either form of property. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 71 N. E. 470, 473, 179 N. Y. 64.

In Civ. Code, § 485, making railroads responsible for injury they may occasion to domestic animals on a line which passes through or along the property of the owner of the animals, "property" is interchangeable with "estate." That a tenant has a property in land may not be doubted. Walther v. Sierra R. Co., 74 Pac. 840, 841, 141 Cal. 288.

The word "property," as used in fire policy providing that it shall become void if the property therein described shall be shut down or become inoperative, vacant, unoccupied, etc., refers to the entire plant, and not to any specific building. Central Montana Mines Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (Minn.) 100 N. W. 8.

A policy covering certain mining property, consisting of a quartzmill, hoist building, bunkhouse, assay office, and other buildings constituting a part of the entire system, contained the warranty that the assured should at all times, when the property therein described should be idle or inoperative, keep a constant day and night watchman on duty, provided that, if such property should be idle or shut down for more than 30 days at any one time, notice should be given to the company, and permission to remain idle should be indorsed on the policy. The property described in the policy referred to and included the entire system, and not any particular property specified as the mill, which was not shut down and idle, and hence the policy was valid. Central Montana Mines Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (Minn.) 99 N. W. 1120, 1123.

Under the word "property," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70, subd. 5, 30 Stat. 566 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3451], vesting in the trustee the title of the bankrupt to all property which, prior to the filing of the petition, he could by any means have transferred, or which might have been levied on and sold under judicial process against him, the intent was to vest the trustee with all rights and claims having a pecuniary value, and which could be transferred by the party or parties entitled. In re Burnstine (U. S.) 131 Fed. 828, 831.

The word "property," as used in Gen. St. 1902, §§ 2367-2377, imposing a succession tax on any property within the jurisdiction of the state which shall pass by will or inheritance, is used to indicate the whole or proportional shares of estates as made subject to the tax; and, as thus used, property in such estates is within the jurisdiction of the state for the purpose of regulating its descent and distribution, is within the jurisdiction of the court of probate whose administrator holds it for distribution. Hence the statute imposes a tax on the personal property of a decedent administered in Connecticut, though the property is situated in other states. Appeal of Gallup, 57 Atl. 699, 702, 76 Conn. 617.

The word "property," as used in Const. art. 1, § 17, providing that no person's property shall be taken, damaged, or destroyed for, or applied to, public use without adequate compensation being made, is held to incorporate not only the thing owned, but also every right which accompanies ownership and its incident. A property owner is entitled to recover from a railroad which constructs its yards so near plaintiff's residence as that the noise, smoke, cinders, and gas from the operation by defendant of its locomotives thereon injuriously affects plaintiff's property. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Calkins (Tex.) 79 S. W. 852, 853.

The terms "life, liberty, and property" are representative terms, and intended to cover every right to which a member of the body politic is entitled under the law. These terms include the right of self-defense, freedom of speech, religious and political freedom, exemption from arbitrary arrests, the right freely to buy and sell as others may. Indeed, they may embrace all our liberties, personal, civil, and political, including the rights to labor, to contract, to terminate contracts, and to acquire property. None of these liberties and rights can be taken away, except by due process of law. Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry (Kan.) 76 Pac. 848, 850, 66 L. R. A. 185 (citing Gillespie v. People, 188 Ill. 176, 58 N. E. 107, 52 L. R. A. 283, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176).

Business.

A person's business is property. People v. McFarlin, 89 N. Y. Supp. 527, 528, 43 Misc. Rep. 591.

Chose in action.

A cause of action is "property," which can only be taken from an individual or a town by due process of law. Town of Walton v. Adair, 89 N. Y. Supp. 230, 234, 96 App. Div. 75.

A right of action is "property," within Gen. St. 1902, § 237, providing that, when a person having property shall be found incapable of managing his affairs, the court shall appoint a conservator for him. Appeal of Wentz, 56 Atl. 625, 627, 76 Conn. 405.

The word "property," in Const. art. 7, § 9, relating to taxation, includes money, credits, investments, and other choses in action. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 97, 111 La. 982.

Credits.

The word "property," as used in Const. art. 8, § 1, declaring that taxes shall be levied on such property as the Legislature shall prescribe, includes credits, and hence Rev. St. 1898, § 1036, declaring that personal property, for purposes of taxation, shall be construed to include all debts due from solvent debtors, is valid. Kingsley v. City of Merrill (Wis.) 99 N. W. 1044, 1045.

Inchoate land title.

The term "property," as used in the Louisiana Purchase Treaty, "comprehends every species of title, inchoate or complete, legal or equitable, and embraces rights which lie in contract, executory as well as executed; and no principle is better settled than that inchoate titles to land are property." Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 35 South. 747, 753, 111 La. 563 (citing Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 179, 5 Sup. Ct. 407, 28 L. Ed. 908; Delassus v. United States, 34 U. S. [9 Pet.] 117, 9 L. Ed. 71; Smith v. United States, 35 U. S. [10 Pet.] 326, 9 L. Ed. 442; Slidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 412, 4 Sup. Ct. 475, 28 L. Ed. 321; Williams v. Close, 12 La. Ann. 873; Sacket v. Hooper, 3 La. 107).

Incorporeal interest of inventor.

The incorporeal interest of an inventor in an article conceived prior to the allowance of a patent cannot be treated as "property," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, cl. 5, 30 Stat. 566 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3451], providing for the surrender of all property which prior to the filing of the petition the bankrupt could by any means have transferred. In re Dann (U. S.) 129 Fed. 495, 497.

Labor.

Labor is property. The laborer has the same right to sell his labor, and to contract with reference thereto, as any other property owner. The right of property involves, as one of its essential attributes, the right not only to contract, but also to terminate contracts. Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry (Kan.) 76 Pac. 848, 850, 66 L. R. A. 185.

Mining claim.

Mining claims are "property," in the fullest sense of the word, and their ownership, transfer, and use are governed by a well-defined Code or Codes of Law, and are recognized by the states and federal government. O'Connell v. Pinnacle Gold Mines Co. (U. S.)

181 Fed. 106, 109 (citing Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 24 L. Ed. 313).

Note.

A promissory note is something more than a mere written promise. It is a negotiable instrument. It is recognized by the law merchant as property. Manning v. Berdan (U. S.) 132 Fed. 382.

PROPERTY IN POSSESSION.

A remainder interest is not "property in possession," within the meaning of the term as used in a statute authorizing the sale of a vested estate for division, if the estate be in possession, etc. Berry v. Lewis (Ky.) 82 S. W. 252, 253.

PROPERTY NOT WITHIN THE STATE.

The expression "property not within the state" includes not only property not in fact within the state, but also property not within the state in contemplation of law. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio, § 2781, which provides for the listing for taxation by the county auditor for previous years of property which was omitted in such years, and the collection of taxes thereon by the treasurer, was intended to apply only to property which was properly taxable in such years, but which was not returned or properly returned for taxation. All property within the state and not exempt by law is taxed by section 2781, and it was not the purpose of section 2781 to tax exempted property or property not within the state. Section 2781a is therefore constitutional. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto v. Halliday (U. S.) 127 Fed. 830, 838.

PROPERTY OF THE COMMONWEALTH.

The words "the property of the commonwealth," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 5, subd. 2, providing that "the property of the commonwealth, except real estate of which the commonwealth is in possession under a mortgage for condition broken," shall be exempt from taxation, "mean the same as 'all the property of the commonwealth'; and the fact that only one exception is made shows that no other exception could have been intended." Land held under a bond for a deed from the commonwealth, on which a private individual has erected buildings and engaged in manufacturing business thereon, is exempt. Corcoran v. City of Boston, 70 N. E. 197, 185 Mass. 325.

PROPERTY RIGHT.

A liquor tax certificate, if not "property" in the strict sense in which that word is used, constitutes a property right. In re Cullinan, 88 N. Y. Supp. 164, 166, 94 App. Div. 445 (citing Niles v. Mathusa, 47 N. Y. Supp. 38, 20 App. Div. 483; In re Lyman, 65 N. Y. Supp. 673, 53 App. Div. 330; Id., 69 N. Y. Supp. 809, 59 App. Div. 217).

PROSECUTION.

Prosecution for violation of ordinance as civil suit, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

A penal action, or action to recover a penalty, is not, in the language of a constitutional provision, a "prosecution by indictment or information," so as to entitle the party to a jury trial in the first instance. Reagh v. Spann (Ala.) 3 Stew. 100, 107.

As used in an act relating to the taking of testimony of witnesses in criminal cases, which provides that the testimony of witnesses taken in writing shall be sworn to and signed by the witness and attested by the officer taking the same, and returned by such officer without delay into court, together with the notice of the taking of the testimony, with such officer's return of service annexed and attached thereto in which the prosecution is pending, etc., the term "prosecution pending" means accusation or charge pending. State v. Jackson, 35 South. 593, 598, 111 La. 343.

PROTESTED.

See "Duly Protested."

PROVIDED.

The word "provided" in its ordinary use signifies a condition. Shipley v. Jacob Tome Institute (Md.) 58 Atl. 200, 203.

Where a devise is of all the rest, residue, and remainder of testatrix's property to a certain person and his heirs forever, provided he should take care of the testatrix and look after her while she lived, the word "provided" imports a conditional rather than an absolute estate, and the nature of the devise and the circumstances under which it was made manifest an intention on the part of the testatrix to make a conditional rather than an absolute gift; her object being to make provision for her own care and comfort during the remainder of her life. Brennan v. Brennan, 71 N. E. 80, 81, 185 Mass. 560.

PROVISIONS.

The word "provisions," in Gen. St. 1901, § 5364, requiring a railroad contractor to give bond to pay all laborers, mechanics, and materialmen, and persons who supply such contractor with provisions or goods of any kind, includes corn, oats, and bran. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Graham, 74 Pac. 232, 233, 67 Kan. 791.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

"In discussing legal causation, the phrase 'proximate cause' does not necessarily mean that which is nearest, but refers rather to the efficient cause, and in this sense is sometimes referred to as the immediate and direct cause, as opposed to remote; and the words 'proximate,' 'immediate,' and 'direct' are frequently used as synonymous." Godwin v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 48 S. E. 139, 141, 120 Ga. 747.

"The proximate cause of an event must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new, independent cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred." Alice, Wade City & C. C. Telephone Co. v. Billingsley (Tex.) 77 S. W. 255, 257 (quoting Shear. & Redf. Neg. § 26).

The proximate cause is not necessarily the one nearest to the event, but the primary cause may be the one proximately responsible for the result, although it may operate through one or more successive instruments. If the primary cause was so linked and bound to the events succeeding it that all together they create and become one continuous whole—the one event so operating upon the other as to tie the result to the primary cause—the latter will be the proximate cause of the injury. If there is some new and independent cause, disconnected from the first or original cause, operating in itself, which intervenes to produce the result, the chain of sequence will be broken, and the primary fault cannot be held to be the direct and proximate cause of the injury. Shippers' Compress & Warehouse Co. v. Davidson (Tex.) 80 S. W. 1032, 1033.

"Proximate cause" is well defined as that cause which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient, intervening cause, produced the result complained of, and without which that result would not have occurred. In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 33 Md. 543, the Supreme Court, in defining "proximate cause," said: "By proximate cause is intended an act which directly produced, or concurred directly in producing, the injury." Claypool v. Wigmore (Ind.) 71 N. E. 509, 510.

"In determining the proximate cause we must look to the direct and efficient cause—that is, the thing amiss—and determine whether the injury resulted therefrom. An intervening human agency may break the connection between the negligent act and the subsequent injury, but that agency must act either independently of the preceding negligence, or the intervening action must have been negligent, so as to constitute an independent proximate cause, in order to break the connection between the wrong complained of and the injury." Phinney v. Illinois

Cent. R. Co., 98 N. W. 358, 361, 122 Iowa, 488.

Proximate cause, so far as applicable to personal injury cases, is defined as "the efficient cause; that which acts first and produces the injury as a natural and probable result, under such circumstances that he who is responsible for such cause as a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence ought reasonably to foresee that personal injury to another may probably follow from such person's conduct." Feldschneider v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Wis.) 99 N. W. 1034, 1037 (quoting Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malt-ing Co., 97 Wis. 279, 72 N. W. 735).

It is erroneous to define "proximate," in charging as to the proximate cause of the injury, as meaning efficient or material. Boyce v. Wilbur Lumber Co., 97 N. W. 563, 566, 119 Wis. 642.

PROXY.

"The ordinary proxy, being intended to be for an election merely, does not enable the proxy to vote to dissolve the corporation, or to sell the entire corporate business and property, or to vote upon other important business, unless such proxy itself in general or special terms gives the proxy the power to vote on such questions." A proxy given by a member of a savings company, appointing one to vote in the member's place in all matters coming before any meeting of the stockholders, contemplates action of the stockholders only with reference to matters which could be submitted to them under such articles and by-laws as existed at that time, and confers no authority on the person holding the proxies to vote on the question of going into voluntary liquidation. McKee v. Home Savings & Trust Co., 98 N. W. 609, 611, 122 Iowa, 731 (quoting 2 Cook, Corp. [4th Ed.] § 610).

PUBLIC CORPORATION.

See "Quasi Public Corporation."

Public corporations are created for public purposes, and the property controlled by them is devoted to the objects for which they are created. The corporators have no private beneficial interest either in the franchises granted or the property controlled. Trustees of Carrick Academy v. Clark (Tenn.) 80 S. W. 64, 67.

Civ. Code, § 2856, defines public corporations as those formed or organized for the government of a portion of the state. A corporation incorporated for the purpose of erecting an armory building is not a public corporation. Arrison v. Company D, North Dakota National Guard, 98 N. W. 83, 84, 12 N. D. 554.

PUBLIC DUTY.

The furnishing of electric light and energy to private consumers is not a "public duty or function," within the meaning of such term as used in a city ordinance prescribing the formalities for the adoption of ordinances providing for the lighting of streets or public places, etc., the construction and operation of street railroads, etc., or purporting to award a contract covering the performance or discharge of any public duty or function. Such a business may properly be called private as contradistinguished from a municipal or public duty or function, and also in the sense that it is conducted for private gain. Strohmeyer v. Consumers' Electric Co., 35 South. 723, 724, 111 La. 506.

PUBLIC LAND.

The words "public lands" describe "such lands belonging to the United States as are subject to sale or disposal under general laws." Where an indictment for conspiracy to deprive the government of land by reason of a fraudulent homestead entry alleged that the lands sought to be acquired were public lands, and that defendants had conspired to defraud the United States out of a portion of such land, it was not demurrable for failure to allege other facts showing that the land was in fact public land or subject to homestead entry. United States v. McKinley (U. S.) 126 Fed. 242 (citing Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769).

The words "public lands" are not always used in the same sense. Their true meaning and effect are to be determined by the context in which they are used, and it is the duty of the court not to give such a meaning to the words as would destroy the object and purpose of the law or lead to absurd results. United States v. Blendaur (U. S.) 128 Fed. 910, 913, 63 C. C. A. 636.

PUBLIC LETTING.

To constitute a public letting of a contract to do certain work, it is sufficient that it be open to all—notorious; that reasonable public notice be given; and that the public have the equal privilege of bidding and becoming contractors. It is not necessary that the publicity shall be of that nature which attends sales at public outcry. Eppes v. Mississippi, G. & T. R. Co., 35 Ala. 33, 61.

PUBLIC OFFICE.

As private property, see "Private Property."

A public office is a mere public agency created by the people for the purpose of the administration of the necessary functions of organized society, and the agency may at any time be terminated by the power which created it. As between the office holder and individuals in their private capacity, and perhaps as against any authority except the sovereign power itself acting in pursuance of a power of removal expressly reserved or necessarily implied from the nature of office, the officer is entitled to the full protection of the law in his right to hold the office, practically to the same extent as if it were private property. In re Carter, 74 Pac. 997, 141 Cal. 316.

A public office is an agency of the state. State v. Michel (La.) 36 South. 869, 870.

PUBLIC OFFICER.

Where either the people or the Legislature create an office or designate a person to perform some function of government, the head of such an office would be a public officer. People v. Hamilton, 90 N. Y. Supp. 547, 549.

Comparison clerk.

A comparison clerk in the county clerk's office of the county of New York is a public officer in the civil service of the state. People v. Hamilton, 90 N. Y. Supp. 97, 44 Misc. Rep. 577.

County judge.

The term "public officers," as used in Const. art. 12, § 3, providing that the compensation of any public officer shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office, when construed in connection with the provisions that no money shall be paid out of the treasury except on appropriation by law, and on warrant drawn by the proper officer, and that the general appropriation bill shall embrace only appropriations for ordinary expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments, etc., and with article 5, § 19, article 30, §§ 8, 15, and article 21, § 2, providing for the terms and salaries of county judges, and supreme and county judges, applies only to state officers who draw their salaries from the state treasury, and does not include the county judges. Hauser v. Seeley (S. D.) 100 N. W. 437, 438.

Insurance agent.

An insurance agent, as such, is not a public officer, nor is his character a matter of public interest; except as the public has an indirect interest in the private character and conduct of every member of society; but this interest is not sufficient to invoke the privilege in libel, granted in case where one holds or is a candidate for some position of public trust. Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 867, 873.

Police station janitor.

A janitor of a police station, appointed for a year, is not a public officer, but a mere employé, whose contract gives him no estate for years in the station house, and no right of entry beyond a revocable license. Wiggin v. City of Manchester, 58 Atl. 522, 523, 72 N. H. 576.

Road overseer or supervisor.

"A road overseer is a public officer, and obstructing him in the performance of his duties as such public officer constitutes a public offense." Richardson v. Dybedahl (S. D.) 98 N. W. 164, 166.

A supervisor of public roads is a public officer. Mial v. Ellington, 46 S. E. 961, 962, 134 N. C. 131, 65 L. R. A. 697.

PUBLIC PIER.

A public pier is subject to the ordinary uses of a public way, which in populous towns is a street. Borough of Seabright v. Allgor, 56 Atl. 287, 288, 69 N. J. Law, 641.

PUBLIC PLACE.

Street corners are not necessarily "public places," within Rev. St. 1898, § 1130, which requires the county or city treasurer, four weeks prior to the sale of land for taxes, to post copies of a notice of sale and statement of the lands in at least four public places in such county. "It is a matter of common knowledge that a conspicuous place at many street corners in cities are comparatively obscure and secret places, and to post a notice of tax sale in a conspicuous place at such corners would most likely fail to attract observation and meet the public view." Shepherd v. Kahle (Wis.) 97 N. W. 506, 507.

PUBLIC POLICY.

The public policy of this state is necessarily confined to the regulation of its own affairs and transactions occurring within its sovereignty. No state can be said to have a public policy as to the administration of justice, or as to the service of quasi public agencies, or as to contracts made with respect thereto, transpiring wholly abroad. The public policy of a state can no more have extraterritorial effect than can a statute of the state. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Druien (Ky.) 80 S. W. 778, 780, 66 L. R. A. 275.

PUBLIC PROPERTY.

Public property is what belongs to the government—federal, state, or municipal. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 97, 111 La. 982.

The words "public property," as used in Pol. Code 1895, § 762, which exempts from taxation all public property, includes a building and a stock of liquors owned by a municipal corporation and operated by it as a dispensary; and this is so though the town had no legal authority to maintain and operate a dispensary. Walden v. Town of Whigham, 48 S. E. 159, 120 Ga. 646.

The phrase "public property used for public purposes," as used in a constitutional provision empowering the Legislature to exempt public property used for public purposes from taxation, authorizes the exemption of property owned by a city necessary to the exercise of governmental duties; but not property held and used by a city for mere money-making purposes, or for the comfort of its citizens. Bonds of a lighting company given to the city in consideration for the sale of its lighting plant to the company, the income of which is used by the city for the lighting of its streets, are not such public property. City of Frankfort v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1008, 1009.

PUBLIC PURPOSE.

The phrase "used for public purposes," in a constitutional provision empowering the Legislature to exempt public property used for public purposes from taxation, means the same as the words "used for governmental purposes." City of Frankfort v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1008, 1009.

PUBLIC RECORD.

A record of a hospital made by a junior assistant surgeon, connected with the hospital, showing that at a time specified therein a doctor removed to the hospital a person whose name and address were entered in the record, is not a "public record" kept by a public officer in the discharge of his duties. Kemp v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 1, 2, 94 App. Div. 322.

PUBLIC ROAD.

The test as to whether or not a road is a public road is not simply how many people actually use it, but how many may have a free and unrestricted right in common to use it. If it is free and common to all citizens, then, no matter whether it is or is not of great length, or whether it leads to or from a village, city, or hamlet, or whether it is much or little used, it is a public road. Heninger v. Peery, 47 S. E. 1013, 1014, 102 Va. 896 (quoting Elliott, Roads & St. §§ 11, 192).

PUBLIC SALE.

A public sale is a sale in pursuance of a notice, by auction or public outcry. Robins v. Bellas (Pa.) 4 Watts, 255, 258.

PUBLIC SPORT.

A public sport, game, show, or entertainment is one held out and given to the public. People v. Poole, 89 N. Y. Supp. 773, 774, 44 Misc. Rep. 118.

PUBLIC USE.

A public use must be either a use by the public or by some agency which is quasi public, and not simply a use which may incidentally or indirectly promote the public interest or general prosperity of the state. Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 74 Pac. 681, 685, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L. R. A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964.

Property is taken for "public use" when the taking is for use that will promote a public interest, and which use tends to develop the great natural resources of the commonwealth. The taking of property for the purpose of obtaining water for the irrigation of a farm and to render the same productive is a taking for a public use. Nash v. Clark, 75 Pac. 371, 373, 27 Utah, 158.

The term "public use," as employed in a constitutional provision that no person's property shall be taken, damaged or destroyed, or applied to public use without adequate compensation being made, etc., is not that use which either the Legislature or the courts may deem a public benefit or advantage, but means the same as "use by the public," and is synonymous with the employment or application by the public of the thing taken. It means that, though property is vested in private individuals or corporations, the public yet retains certain definite rights to the use or employment of the property. Borden v. Trespalacios Rice & Irrigation Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 461, 465.

"The reason of the case and the settled practice of free government must be our guides in determining what is or is not to be regarded as a public use, and that can only be considered such where the government is supplying its own needs or is furnishing facilities to its citizens in regard to those matters of public interest, convenience, and welfare which, on account of their peculiar character and the difficulty of making provisions for them otherwise, it is alike proper, useful, and needful for the government to provide." The right to fish in an inland lake in New Jersey cannot be separated from the ownership of the lake and taken under the power of eminent domain, because, first, the natural supply of fish therein is so small as to be incapable of meeting the public demand, and, second, the object of acquiring such a right is not use which implies utility, but mere sport or pastime. Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Commission (N. J.) 57 Atl. 398, 400 (quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. 553).

PUBLIC UTILITY.

A switch track which is part of a general railway system, and which may be used by any or all who have occasion to ship freight over it, and which is not designed for the exclusive use or convenience of any particular person or corporation, is, although from its location and surroundings only a limited number of persons will have occasion to use it, a public utility. Stockdale v. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co. (Utah) 77 Pac. 849.

PUBLIC WATER.

The term "public waters," as used in Sess. Laws 1903, p. 223, relating to the appropriation and division of the public waters, refers to all water running in natural channel streams, and the state may by proper application regulate the appropriation and use thereof. Boise City Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart (Idaho) 77 Pac. 25, 27.

A natural fresh-water pond containing 15 or more acres, though situated in the midst of and entirely surrounded by the land of a private owner, is "public water," and the ownership in the land ceases at the water's edge or at high-water mark. Dolbeer v. Suncok Waterworks Co., 58 Atl. 504, 506, 72 N. H. 562.

PUBLIC WAY.

There are different kinds of public ways and different kinds of private ways, but all ways are included in the one or the other general classification, though some may partake of the nature of both, being maintained and operated for private gain and for use by the public. Jones v. Venable, 47 S. E. 549, 550, 120 Ga. 1.

A road or way established under a statute authorizing a mine owner to establish ways from a railroad to his coal mine is a public way in the sense that the public may use and enjoy it in the way in which roads and highways are ordinarily used by it, and the mine owner who procured it to be established must use the special privileges which the act confers on him in such manner as not to destroy the right of the public or prevent its enjoyment. Railroad Commission of Texas v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas (Tex.) 80 S. W. 102, 104 (citing Phillips v. Watson, 63 Iowa, 23, 18 N. W. 659).

PUBLIC WORK.

The term "public work," as used in a provision of a city charter prohibiting the assembly from directly contracting for any public work, or improvement or repairs thereon, or fixing the price or rate therefor, and prescribing the method by which such work or improvement, etc., shall be done, has no technical meaning, and includes every species and character of work done for the public and for which the taxpaying citizens are liable. It includes contracts for the removal and disposition of city garbage, which contract was let to a sanitary company, which disposed of the garbage by the method known as "reduction." State v. Butler, 77 S. W. 560, 568, 178 Mo. 272.

PUBLICATION.

See "Last Publication."

Anonymous publication, see "Anonymous."

PUNISHMENT.

See "Cruel Punishment"; "Infamous Punishment."

The detention of a female minor in the House of the Good Shepherd under an ordinance relating to juvenile vagrants, and authorizing the detention of such persons until they reach a certain age, is not a "punishment," being designed for her good and welfare, to protect her against herself and from evil-minded parties surrounding her. State ex rel. Caillouet v. Marmouget, 35 South. 529, 533, 111 La. 225.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

"Punitive damages have now come to be generally, though not universally, regarded, not only a punishment for wrong, but as vindication of private right. This is the basis upon which they are now placed in this state." Beaudrot v. Southern R. Co., 48 S. E. 106, 107, 69 S. C. 160.

PURCHASE.

See "Indirect Purchase."

The word "purchase," as used in an affidavit of defense in an action based on a book account for goods sold, averring that defendant never purchased or authorized the purchase of the property mentioned in the book of entries attached to the affidavit of demand, under a reasonable construction covers defendant's liability as purchaser, either express or implied, upon a book account for goods sold and delivered. A. H. Davenport Co. v. Addicks (Del.) 57 Atl. 532, 533.

PURCHASED.

The word "purchased" may mean a completed transaction, or it may mean a transaction still incomplete. State v. Ware (N. J.) 38 Atl. 595, 596.

PURCHASER.

See "Bona Fide Purchaser."

A petitioner for condemnation is not in any sense a purchaser or creditor within the purview of the registration statutes. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Southern Ry. Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 657, 666.

The word "purchaser," as used in a statute declaring unrecorded chattel mortgages to be void as against creditors and bona fide purchasers for value, includes a mortgagee for value. Eason v. Garrison & Kelly (Tex.) 82 S. W. 800, 801.

PURCHASER FOR A VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

A mortgage taken to secure a debt contemporaneously contracted constitutes the mortgagee a "purchaser for a valuable consideration," who will be protected in equity against outstanding claims or incumbrances of which he had no notice. Atlanta Nat. Building & Loan Ass'n v. Gilmer (U. S.) 128 Fed. 293, 296.

PURCHASER IN GOOD FAITH.

See, also, "Good Faith."

To constitute a "purchaser in good faith," it is essential that there be a valuable consideration, the absence of notice, and the presence of good faith. If the existence and concurrence of such requisites are shown, it is immaterial, so far as a third person is concerned, whether or not the deed of the purchaser was properly acknowledged. Derrett v. Britton (Tex.) 80 S. W. 562, 564.

One is not a "purchaser in good faith," so as to be protected against an outstanding contract, who has constructive notice of such contract; and this because the law itself imputes, in the case of constructive notice, knowledge to him. But one may honestly believe that he has good title when in fact he has not, and, while this belief will not avail him as against an outstanding contract or title of which he has constructive notice, he will nevertheless be entitled to be protected in his permanent improvements, for the test of good faith as to them is his honest belief that he has good title. Hunter v. Coe, 97 N. W. 869, 872, 12 N. D. 505.

A purchaser is not a "purchaser in good faith" of any part of the bankrupt's estate, if title or security was accepted "in contemplation of or in fraud upon" the bankrupt act, or if for any reason it would not have been valid against the claims of creditors of the bankrupt. In re Pease (U. S.) 129 Fed. 446, 448.

PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE.

Bona fide purchaser synonymous, see "Bona Fide Purchaser."

PURE.

The word "pure," in Agricultural Law, Laws 1893, p. 667, c. 338, § 5052, to prevent injury to health by penalizing the manufacture of vinegar which is not made from pure apple juice, means not only free from any foreign substance, but free from any defiling or objectionable mixture. People v. J. Heinz Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 141, 143, 90 App. Div. 408.

PURE ACCIDENT.

Where a thing happens so often as to become a well-known fact and a matter of common knowledge, it can hardly be called a "pure accident." Where a pedestrian on a sidewalk was injured by pieces of glass falling from the globe of an electric light which was struck and broken by the pole of an electric car slipping from the wire, the slipping of the pole was not a "pure accident," it appearing that the trolley poles jumped the wire from time to time from various causes. Nelson v. Narragansett Electric Lighting Co., 58 Atl. 802, 803, 26 R. I. 258.

PURPOSE.

See "Charitable Purpose"; "Corporate Purpose"; "General Purpose"; "Legitimate Purpose"; "Manufacturing Purpose"; "Public Purpose."

PURPOSELY.

The word "purposely," in the statute making it murder in the first degree for any person to purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice kill another, means an act done with a purpose or intent of doing that act. State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440.

The word "purposely," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2073, which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person over the age of 10 years, with or without malice, purposely to point or aim any pistol or other firearm, either empty or loaded, towards any other person, means "intentionally or designedly." An indictment charging involuntary manslaughter because of the killing of deceased by accused while he was violating the section by pointing and aiming a firearm at deceased is insufficient for failing to employ the word "purposely," or any other word of equivalent import, in describing the conduct of accused. Eaton v. State, 70 N. E. 814, 815, 162 Ind. 554.

PURPRESTURE.

Every building or wharf erected upon lands without license, below high-water mark, is a purpresture, and may, at the suit of the King, either be demolished, or be seized and rented for his benefit, if not a nuisance to navigation. San Francisco Sav.

Union v. R. G. R. Petroleum & Mining Co., 77 Pac. 823, 144 Cal. 134, 66 L. R. A. 242.

PUT.

"A 'put' is a privilege to deliver or not deliver grain or other commodity." Where plaintiff purchased from defendants certain puts, or an option to sell to defendants a certain quantity of grain at a fixed price within a limited time, and the evidence established that such contracts were merely speculative, and that the parties did not intend that any grain should be delivered or received, but that settlement should be made by payment of differences in the market price, the contract was in violation of Rev. St. 1899, § 2337, prohibiting all contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery where the intention was to settle by payment of differences, and section 2342, declaring that such contracts shall be considered gambling. Lane v. Logan Grain Co., 79 S. W. 722, 724, 105 Mo. App. 215.

PUT THROUGH.

"He has sworn to a damned lie, and I will put him through for it," implies a threatened legal prosecution for perjury, and is actionable. Crone v. Angell, 14 Mich. 340, 345.

QUALIFIED.

Hill's Code, § 1084, provides that, when a will is proven, letters testamentary shall be issued to the persons named therein as executors, or to such of them as give notice of their trust and are qualified. Section 1108 prescribes that "the following persons are not qualified to act as executors or administrators: Nonresidents of this state; minors; judicial officers other than justices of the peace; persons of unsound mind or who have been convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; or a married woman." It was held that all persons who are qualified and competent to serve were not disqualified, and, when nominated in the will, were entitled to have the letters testamentary issued to them. One who is not disqualified, or does not fall within one or the other exception of the statute, must then be qualified and entitled to the letters. Holladay v. Holladay, 19 Pac. 81, 83, 16 Or. 147.

In Gen. Laws, c. 243, § 2, providing that either party in a civil action may, before the opening of the action to the jury, challenge any qualified jurors called for a trial of such cause, the word "qualified" refers only to those jurors who are not subject to challenge for cause in the case then for trial. Stevens v. Union R. Co., 58 Atl. 492, 494, 26 R. I. 90.

QUALITY GUARANTIED.

Where a contract for the sale of binder twine contained the words "quality guaranties," such words should be construed to import a warranty that the twine was reasonably fit for the use for which binder twine is designed. Union Selling Co. v. Jones (U. S.) 128 Fed. 672, 677, 63 C. C. A. 224.

QUANTITY.

See "Reasonable Quantities."

QUASI CORPORATION.

"The counties of this state, like townships, are quasi corporations, created solely for governmental purposes, and hold their property, not as private owners, but for the performance of their duties as public agencies." State v. Gunn (Minn.) 100 N. W. 97, 99.

A road district is not a quasi corporation. Custer County Bank v. Custer County (S. D.) 100 N. W. 424, 426.

QUASI IN REM.

A suit quasi in rem arises where the suit is against the person in respect of the res, where, for example, it has for its object partition or the sale or other disposition of defendant's property within the jurisdiction to satisfy plaintiff's demand by enforcing a lien upon it. In such a suit personal service within the jurisdiction or appearance is not necessary. The decree can, however, extend only to the property in controversy. Defendant's interest is alone sought to be effected, and he must be cited to appear, and the judgment is conclusive only between the parties. Hill v. Henry (N. J.) 57 Atl. 554, 555.

QUASI JUDICIAL FUNCTION.

Quasi judicial functions are those which lie midway between the judicial and ministerial ones. The lines separating them from such as are thus on their two sides are necessarily indistinct; but, in general terms, when the law, in words or by implication, commits to any officer the duty of looking into facts and acting upon them, not in a way which it specifically directs, but after a discretion in its nature judicial, the function is termed quasi judicial. Bair v. Struck, 74 Pac. 69, 71, 29 Mont. 45, 63 L. R. A. 481 (citing Mechem, Public Officers, § 637; Bish. Noncontract Law, §§ 785, 786).

QUASI PUBLIC CORPORATION.

A waterworks company is a quasi public corporation. It must supply water to all who apply therefor and offer to pay the rates. Waterworks companies are required to supply water impartially to all consumers, and they cannot act capriciously, or discriminate against any one who is able to pay for the water supplied. Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 251, 252 (quoting 3 Cook, Corp. § 931).

A corporation organized for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a public telephone system, for the purpose of furnishing telephone connection between its subscribers, is a quasi public corporation. Its business is of a public character. It depends upon the public for its support, and the public depends upon it for its accommodations. Such a corporation has such powers only as are expressly or impliedly granted by the statute under which it is organized. A quasi public corporation cannot disable itself for the performance of its functions by the sale and transfer of its property without legislative authority. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Evansville (U. S.) 127 Fed. 187, 190.

QUIRT.

A quirt is a rawhide whip plated with two thongs of buffalo hide. Miller v. Meche, 35 South. 491, 492, 111 La. 143 (quoting Webster, Dict.).

QUO WARRANTO.

Quo warranto is in the nature of a direct proceeding, in which the title to an office, as evidenced by the record, is assailed. Daniels v. Newbold (Iowa) 100 N. W. 1119, 1120.

RAFTAGE.

Raftage is the expense of floating and running logs. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 35 South. 828, 83 Miss. 499.

RAGS.

Clippings of woolen material, produced in the process of making up garments, are "rags," within both the popular and the commercial signification of the term. United States v. Pearson & Emmott (U. S.) 131 Fed. 571, 572.

RAILROAD.

See "Trunk Railway."

The law treats a railroad and its appurtenances as one entire thing. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Grayson (Ark.) 78 S. W. 777, 779.

The word "railroad," as used in law, is broad enough to include street railroads, and many cases have arisen where the courts have held that the word does in its signification include such. Each case is to be determined upon its own facts, having in view the circumstances, the context, the presumed intention of the lawmakers, and the general policy of the state in regard to the particular matter. San Francisco & S. M. Electric R. Co. v. Scott, 75 Pac. 575, 576, 142 Cal. 222 (citing Ferguson v. Sherman, 116 Cal. 169, 176, 47 Pac. 1023, 37 L. R. A. 622).

"The Constitution, statutes, and decisions of this state recognize that the word 'railroad' is generic, and includes street railroads, narrow gauge roads, horse car companies, dummy lines, and street railroads operated by electricity. Whether a particular statute applies to any one of these various forms of railroads is to be determined from the language of the statute, from the context, or from the intent of the lawmakers." Civ. Code 1895, § 2234, providing that "all engine drivers and conductors must cause the trains which they respectively drive and conduct to come to a full stop within 50 feet of the place of crossing," where the tracks of separate and independent railroads cross each other, does not apply to a street railway, so as to compel it to stop its cars before crossing a steam railroad track. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co. v. Joiner, 48 S. E. 336, 337, 120 Ga. 905 (quoting Savannah T. & I. of H. Ry. v. Williams, 117 Ga. 414, 43 S. E. 751, 61 L. R. A. 249).

A street railroad is not a "railroad," within Gen. St. 1901, § 2098, making it an offense to willfully injure any locomotive, car, or other machinery in use upon any railroad within the state. State v. Cain (Kan.) 76 Pac. 443, 444.

RAILROAD CORPORATION.

Railroad Law, Laws 1892, p. 1390, c. 676, § 32, providing that every railroad corporation shall maintain cattle guards at road crossings, applies to a street surface railroad company incorporated under article 1 of the act (page 1382). Evans v. Utica & Mohawk Valley Ry. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 1089, 44 Misc. Rep. 345.

RANGE.

The word "range," as used by ranchmen, signifies sparsely populated and unclosed prairie, over which stock growers have been allowed to let cattle, horses, and other animals owned by them or in their charge roam and feed without restraint. By common consent, persons residing in such country have usually claimed as their range certain portions of this prairie lying contiguous to the home ranch. Miller v. Lewis (S. D.) 97 N. W. 364, 365.

RAPE.

See "Assault with Intent to Commit Rape."

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will. Pen. Code 1895, § 93. It is the act of having carnal knowledge by a man of a woman forcibly and against her will, or without her conscious permission, or where permission has been extorted by force or fear of immediate bodily harm. 13 Cr. Law Mag. 503. A man, having sexual intercourse with an imbecile female, mentally incapable of intelligently expressing any assent or dissent, or of exercising any judgment in the matter, is guilty of rape, although he uses no more force than is necessary to accomplish the carnal act, and although the woman offers no resistance. Gore v. State, 46 S. E. 671, 672, 674, 119 Ga. 418, 100 Am. St. Rep. 182.

RATE.

In U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5219, providing that the taxation of national bank stock shall not be at a greater rate than shall be assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, etc., the term "rate" has relation to the assessment as a whole, and does not signify the mere percentage or levy upon any valuation adopted. Ankeny v. Blakley, 74 Pac. 485, 488, 44 Or. 78.

RATIFICATION.

"The gist of a ratification is the deliberate admission by the proper authority of a liability to pay for that for which it may lawfully contract." If one says, 'I will pay A. or B., to one or the other of whom I admit I am liable, as the court may adjudge,' this is as much a ratification, a formal acknowledgment, of a liability to pay as if he said, 'I promise to pay A.,' or 'I promise to pay B.'" Borough of East Newark v. New York & N. J. Water Supply Co. (N. J.) 57 Atl. 1051, 1055.

READY FOR OCCUPANCY.

Premises leased consisted of a store, basement, and conservatory, to be used for selling flowers, and were part of the lessor's building; and the lease recited that the building was in process of construction, and intended to be of the general character shown in certain plans, and provided that, in case the premises should be "ready for occupancy" at the beginning of the term, possession should be delivered as soon as completed, and that rent should be computed only from the time the premises should be ready for occupancy. Held, that the phrase "ready for occupancy" did not mean fitted by the lessor with fixtures, rendering it ready for the lessee's business. Gerry v. Siebrecht, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1034, 1035.

REAL ESTATE.

It has been uniformly held that the words "real estate" in a tax act will not be construed to include land necessary to the franchises of a public corporation. Under Act April 2, 1858 (P. L. 385), providing that real property of corporations—the superstructure of the road and water stations alone excepted—shall be subject to taxation for city purposes, a power house for the manufacture of electricity, owned and used by a traction motor company operating street railways, is exempt from taxation. City of Philadelphia v. Electric Traction Co. (Pa.) 57 Atl. 354, 355.

The equitable interest vested in a testatrix by virtue of her possession as mortgagee and purchaser under the execution sale before the time for redemption expired was “real estate,” so as to pass under a devise of such. Morgan v. Joslyn (Minn.) 97 N. W. 449, 450, 91 Minn. 60.

REAL PARTY IN INTEREST.

The test of whether one is the real party in suit is, does he satisfy the call for the person who has the right to control and receive the fruits of the litigation? The rule is stated in a recent ably written work thus: “The real party in interest, within the meaning of this provision of the Code, is the person who will be entitled to the benefits of the action if successful; one who is actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter, as distinguished from one who has only a nominal, formal, or technical interest in or connection with it.” Gross v. Heckert (Wis.) 97 N. W. 952, 954.

REASONABLE CARE.

“Reasonable care” is a relative term. What constitutes its exercise in the middle of a block may be entirely inadequate at a street intersection. The necessity for its exercise by the motorman, however, is present over his entire route, but in varying degree, depending upon circumstances, and the absence or presence of peril to travelers in the street. Solomon v. Buffalo R. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 99, 101, 96 App. Div. 487.

The term “ordinary or reasonable care,” applied to the conduct of a child, means such care as may reasonably be expected of children of similar age, judgment, and experience under similar circumstances. Rohloff v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 58 Atl. 5, 7, 76 Conn. 689.

REASONABLE CAUSE.

Other reasonable cause, see “Other.”

REASONABLE DOUBT.

See, also, “Well Founded.”

A reasonable doubt is a doubt derived from the evidence or lack of evidence in the case. United States v. Post (U. S.) 128 Fed. 950, 957.

Reasonable doubt is an honest, substantial doubt, actually existing in the minds of the jury, and arising either from the evidence favorable to the defendant or from a want of evidence on behalf of the government. It is not merely such a doubt as may be conjured up in the mind of one desirous of escaping the responsibility of decision, or such as may be engendered by pity or sympathy for the accused. United States v. Breese (U. S.) 131 Fed. 915, 917.

A reasonable doubt is not a whimsical, imaginary, or possible doubt, but a substantial doubt, such as intelligent men may reasonably entertain upon a careful and conscientious consideration of all the evidence. State v. Emory (Del.) 58 Atl. 1036, 1039.

The term “reasonable doubt,” as defined by text writers and decisions of courts of last resort, is a fair doubt growing out of the testimony in the case. It is not a mere imaginary, captious, or possible doubt, but a fair doubt, based upon reason and common sense. 3 Rice, Ev. § 268. It would be possible to raise an imaginary or captious doubt in any case, no matter how strong, direct, and positive the evidence might be. For instance, a jury might imagine, in a case where two uncontradicted eyewitnesses to a crime testified to its commission, that such witnesses might be mistaken, and thus entertain a captious or imaginary doubt. But such a doubt is not a “reasonable doubt,” within the legal definition of that phrase. State v. Levy (Idaho) 75 Pac. 227, 230.

An instruction that a reasonable doubt is one that is based upon some ground in the testimony or the want of testimony in the case, and that, if a juror has not a doubt of that gravity, he ought to convict, is proper. O'Dell v. State, 47 S. E. 577, 578, 120 Ga. 152.

An instruction defining the term “reasonable doubt” in the language of the instruction given in Barney v. State, 49 Neb. 515, 68 N. W. 636, together with the additional sentence, “You are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors, if from all the evidence you believe as men,” is not erroneous, though the instruction is not to be commended. Lillie v. State (Neb.) 100 N. W. 316, 322.

REASONABLE QUANTITIES.

The expression “reasonable quantities,” in an instruction in a prosecution for violating the local option law, to the effect that, if the beverage sold was not intoxicating liquor “if drunk in reasonable quantities,” defendant should be acquitted, is not equivalent to saying “when drunk in such quantities as may practically be drunk.” Hence the instruction was erroneous, because intoxicating liquor is defined to be any liquor intended for use as a beverage, or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol in such a proportion that it will produce intoxication when taken in such quantities as may be practically drunk as an intoxicant. Murray v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 568, 570.

REASONABLE TIME.

"The law has not defined reasonable time. It cannot be defined by any prescribed rule. What is reasonable in one case may be unreasonable in another case. What is reasonable in any case must be ascertained by the application of reason to the facts which characterize the particular case. Delay for one week after full discovery may be unreasonable in some cases. A much longer delay may in other cases be reasonable. The injured party should observe ordinary vigilance and good faith. He should not, by culpable negligence or by design, subject the other party to unnecessary inconvenience, loss, or hazard; and, whenever he offers to return the property, it should be in as good condition as it was when he might have first returned it after full discovery of its defectiveness, so as to place both parties as nearly as possible in statu quo. All this may appear in a supposable or possible case, even though months may have interlapsed. It may not appear in another possible case in which one week had evolved. Time, in the abstract, is not essential. It is material so far only as, when associated with other circumstances, it may produce injuries or unjust consequences. The great object of the rule of law on this subject is to prevent injury or wrong to the vendor; and the main question in every such case should be: Has he any just cause to object to the rescission of the contract? Has he been trifled with? Will he have suffered by unnecessary and improper delay?" Hogan v. Tucker (Ky.) 77 S. W. 197, 199 (quoting Hoggins v. Becraft, 81 Ky. [1 Dana] 28, 31).

The term "reasonable time" is a relative one, and its meaning depends entirely upon the attendant circumstances. It has been held in one case to mean as soon as convenient; in another, the least possible time after an event; and in many others it was held that such time must be determined according to the circumstances of the case, and with particular reference to the means and ability of the person by whom the contract is to be performed. Neilsen v. Mayer, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1069, 1070.

What is a reasonable time, when the facts are undisputed, is a question of law for the court. Where it is undisputed that a claim was presented to the executrix by April 1st, and was in her possession six months later, when the action was commenced, it was clearly a reasonable length of time in which to determine whether she would allow or reject it. Goltra v. Penland (Or.) 77 Pac. 129, 132.

REASONABLY.

The adverb "reasonably" is a qualifying word, and modifies the adjective "safe." It is defined by Webster as meaning moderately or tolerably, and that is its commonly understood meaning. Tompkins v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 77 S. W. 712, 713. The use of the word in an instruction in a prosecution for homicide that accused had the right to kill, if there was, as it then appeared to him, no reasonably safe means of averting the danger of losing his life or suffering great bodily harm at the hands of decedent, is erroneous, since by such instruction accused would not be compelled to choose an alternative method of escaping danger, unless it promised absolute safety. Tompkins v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 77 S. W. 712, 713.

REASONABLY SATISFIES.

The expression "reasonably satisfies," as used in an instruction defining the term "preponderance of the evidence" as meaning that greater and superior weight of the testimony as reasonably satisfies the minds of the jury, must have been understood by the jury to mean that a preponderance of the evidence was established if, upon consideration of the evidence, the result was to reasonably satisfy their minds that the greater weight of the evidence was with plaintiff, and the use of the words did not, therefore, render the instruction erroneous, as being too great a burden on the party having the burden of proof. Ball v. Marquie, 98 N. W. 496, 497, 122 Iowa, 605.

REBELLION.

See "Actual Rebellion."

RECEIPTS.

See "Gross Receipts."

RECEIVER.

See "Statutory Receiver"; "Temporary Receiver."

A receiver is but an officer of the court, whose tenure of office is indeterminate. National Exchange Bank v. Woodside (Mo.) 80 S. W. 715, 716.

A receiver is "the officer of the court, appointed on behalf of all parties, to take the possession and hold [the property] for the benefit of the party ultimately entitled." Town of Vandalia v. St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co., 70 N. E. 662, 664, 209 Ill. 73 (citing Coates v. Cunningham, 80 Ill. 467).

"The conception of a receiver is some one to take manual possession, for the court, of property, to take it out from the possession of others, and hold it for the better security of those who may be ultimately entitled thereto." Harrigan v. Gilbert, 99 N. W. 909, 951, 121 Wis. 127.

A receiver is only an officer of the court. Where a receiver appointed by a state court was authorized to demand and receive any and all sums which may have been or might thereafter be collected or received on account of a certain police board tax for certain years, and thereafter the authority was enlarged so as to include all the assets, claims, and taxes owned and collected by and due to such board prior to 1879, such authority was not sufficient to give the receiver the right to sue to recover such assets or claims. Hubert v. City of New Orleans (U. S.) 130 Fed. 21, 24 (quoting Screven v. Clark, 48 Ga. 41).

RECKLESSLY.

The term "recklessly," in an allegation that a certain thing was done "carelessly, negligently, and recklessly," is tantamount to the allegation that it was a wanton disregard of all consequences. Gustafson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. (U. S.) 128 Fed. 85, 96.

In an action for death, an instruction directing a verdict for defendant, unless the jury found that the motorman in charge of the defendant's car, after perceiving the dangerous situation then and there existing, did "recklessly and wantonly" send his car forward, the terms "recklessly" and "wantonly" are synonymous. Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 74 Pac. 15, 20, 140 Cal. 514, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85.

RECLAMATION.

Drainage of land distinguished, see "Drainage of Land."

RECOGNIZANCE.

When it is said by the court, in State v. Mills, 19 N. C. 552, that a "recognizance is in the nature of a conditional judgment, subject only to such matters of legal avoidance as may be shown by plea, or to such matters of relief as may induce the court to remit or mitigate the forfeiture," it was not intended that a denial of the truth of the record could be thus set up by way of plea or answer to a scire facias. The entry of the forfeiture of a recognizance in a criminal case cannot be contradicted by an answer or a plea to a scire facias issued to enforce the forfeiture. State v. Morgan (N. C.) 48 S. E. 604, 606.

RECOMMENDATION.

Reference synonymous, see "Reference."

RECORD.

See "Complete Record"; "Public Record."

The original files in a prosecution before a justice of the peace for assault and theft, together with the mittimus addressed to the officer on conviction and sentence, do not constitute a "record." McVeigh v. Ripley, 58 Atl. 701, 702, 77 Conn. 136.

The indictments against a person are "records or documents filed in a public office under authority of law." Code Cr. Proc. § 272; Code Civ. Proc. § 866. They are the property of the state, and a willful and unlawful removal of them constitutes a crime under Pen. Code, § 94. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 789, 178 N. Y. 274.

REDEMPTION.

See "Equity of Redemption."

RE-ENTER.

In a lease requiring a deposit to secure the performance of the covenants, declaring that if any rent shall be due or unpaid, or any default shall be suffered, the landlord or her representative might lawfully re-enter, by force or otherwise, the word "re-enter" is not restricted to a re-entry by a common-law action of ejectment. Anzolone v. Paskusz, 89 N. Y. Supp. 203, 205, 96 App. Div. 183.

REFERENCE.

According to Webster's International Dictionary a reference is "one who or that which is referred to specifically; one of whom inquiries can be made as to the integrity, capability, and the like of another." On cross-examination, one seeking to establish a claim against the estate of decedent was asked concerning a conversation with one of the executors, and on the redirect he testified that at one time he was requested to bring references. He was asked to give the number of "recommendations" of men of business. The word "recommendations," as used, was synonymous with the word "references." Kinney v. McFaul, 98 N. W. 276, 277, 122 Iowa, 452.

REGISTERED TONNAGE.

The phrase "registered tonnage" is applied indiscriminately to the three classes of registered vessels, enrolled vessels, and licensed vessels, and means merely the capacity that has been ascertained and registered as provided by law, no matter what the size or business of the ship may be. "Registered tonnage" is the language that is always used, whether the ship is engaged in foreign trade, or in domestic trade, or in the coasting trade or fisheries. Wheaton v. Weston & Co. (U. S.) 128 Fed. 151, 153.

REGISTRATION.

Registration is the method of proof prescribed for ascertaining the electors who are qualified to cast votes. It is a part of the machinery of elections, and is a reasonable regulation, which conduces to their orderly conduct and fairness. People ex rel Maher v. Carleton, 85 N. Y. Supp. 22, 23, 41 Misc. Rep. 523.

REGISTRATION CERTIFICATE.

The "registration certificate" provided for by an act requiring a voter, as a condition of voting, to produce to election officers a certificate of registration, or, in case of its loss, a duplicate certificate from the county clerk, is not conclusive of the holder's right to vote, although it is conclusive as to the fact that the person named therein has been registered. Yates v. Collins (Ky.) 82 S. W. 282, 284.

REGULATE.

"To regulate" means to adjust; to govern by rule; to direct or manage according to certain standards or laws; to subject to rules, restrictions, or governing principles. Standard Dict. An ordinance making it unlawful to keep open a pawnshop after 6 o'clock p. m. is not a prohibition of the business, but a regulation of it. City of Butte v. Paltrovich (Mont.) 75 Pac. 521.

The word "regulate," as used in a constitutional provision conferring on a railroad commission authority to make reasonable and just regulations to govern and regulate railroad traffic, has a broad meaning, and includes the power to see to the maintenance of the main track and all its switches and spurs. The commission may order that a spur or switch be not removed, subject to review by the court. Railroad Commission of Louisiana v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 85 South. 487, 488, 111 La. 133.

In Const. art. 2, § 18, granting all power over divorces in the district court, subject to regulation by law, the word "regulation" is of broad signification, and, in the absence of restrictive words, the power granted must be regarded as plenary over the entire subject. Durland v. Durland, 74 Pac. 274, 275, 67 Kan. 734, 63 L. R. A. 959.

The words "regulate tolls," as used in the charter of a railroad, providing that, when the aggregate amount of dividends declared shall amount to the full sum invested and 10 per cent., the Legislature may so regulate the tolls and freights that not more than 15 per cent. per annum shall be divided on the capital employed, and the surplus profits, if any, after paying the expenses and reserving such proportion as may be necessary for future contingencies, shall be paid over to the Treasurer of the State for the use of the common schools, do not refer solely to fixing the amount to be charged by the railroad, but the words embrace, not only fixing the amount to be charged to the public, but an order for the division of earnings between the railroad and the schools. The surrender by a railway company of its special charter, to accept a general railroad law, before the state had made any attempt to regulate its tolls, freed the company from all liability to the state under a charter provision that, when declared dividends shall aggregate a specified amount, the Legislature may so regulate the tolls that not more than a fixed percentage shall be divided annually on the capital employed, and the surplus profits shall be paid over to the State Treasurer, and that, "if required," the corporation shall furnish the Legislature a statement of expenditures; and such liability, therefore, cannot be enforced by virtue of subsequent legislation without impairing the rights of the railroad company under the federal Constitution. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Indiana, 24 Sup. Ct. 767, 769, 194 U. S. 579, 48 L. Ed. 1124.

REGULATE COMMERCE.

"No fixed rule can be prescribed or defined that will amount to a regulation of commerce, within the meaning of the constitutional provision conferring on Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states." The power of Congress is plenary and exclusive. Chief Justice Waite, in the case of Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 488, 24 L. Ed. 547, said: "The line which separates the powers of the states from this exclusive power of Congress is not always distinctly marked, and oftentimes it is not easy to determine on which side a particular case belongs. Judges not infrequently differ in their reasons for a decision in which they concur. Under such circumstances it would be a useless task to undertake to fix an arbitrary rule by which the line must in all cases be located. It is far better to leave a matter of such delicacy to be settled in each case upon a view of the particular rights involved. * * * If the statutes of the state are for the purpose of facilitating the safe transportation of goods, without undertaking to regulate commerce or interfere in any manner with the rights of the parties to fix their liability by contract, they will be upheld, notwithstanding they may have an indirect or remote effect upon commerce." A provision that when there are several connecting railroads under different companies, and goods are intended to be transported over more than one railroad, each company shall be responsible only to its own terminus and until delivery to its connecting railroad, that the last company which has received the goods as in good order shall be responsible to the consignee for any damages, open or concealed, done to the goods, and that such companies shall settle among themselves the question of ultimate liability, is not a regulation of commerce. Kavanaugh v. Southern R. Co., 47 S. E. 528, 527, 120 Ga. 62.

REINSURANCE.

"Reinsurance," as used in Laws 1896, c. 908, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 118, § 1, imposing on domestic insurance companies an annual state tax, and providing that the term "gross premiums" shall include such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance, means premiums collected by the insurance company from reinsuring the risks of other companies. Reinsurance is a contract by which one insurer insures the risks of another insurer. The statute is dealing with the gross premiums collected by an insurance company for business done; that is, for the insurance furnished. It has to do with receipts, not with disbursements. People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 12, 177 N. Y. 515.

RELATION.

By the fiction of relation, a legal title is held to relate back to the initiatory step for the acquisition of the land. The doctrine of relation precludes the United States from retaining, as against its grantees of lands within the indemnity limits of the grant made by Act June 3, 1856, c. 41, 11 Stat. 17, in aid of railway construction, a sum which it collected from trespassers thereon for the removal of iron and stone from the land during the period between the selection of such lands to supply in part a large deficiency in the place limits and the approval of such selection by the Secretary of the Interior. United States v. Anderson, 24 Sup. Ct. 716, 718, 194 U. S. 394, 48 L. Ed. 1035.

While the doctrine of relation is of equitable origin, it has a well-recognized application to proceedings at law. By it is meant that principle by which an act done at one time is considered by a fiction of law to have been done at some antecedent period. It is usually applied where several proceedings are essential to complete a particular transaction, such as a conveyance or deed. The last proceeding, which consummates the conveyance, is held for certain purposes to take effect by relation as of the day when the first proceeding was had. Peyton v. Desmond (U. S.) 129 Fed. 1, 11, 63 C. C. A. 651.

RELEASE.

See "Deed of Release."

"A release is a discharge of a debt by act of the party. A release is a voluntary relinquishment of a lien and right of action or an obligation." Woodrough v. Douglas County (Neb.) 98 N. W. 1092, 1095.

RELEASE OF A RIGHT OF WAY.

The phrase "release of a right of way," in an instrument in writing by which the absolute owner of a tract of land released to a steam railroad company a right of way 100 feet in width and passing through the land, leaving a portion thereof on each side of the right of way, conveys an easement in the land for railroad purposes, leaving the fee subject to such servitude in the general owner. Cincinnati, H. & D. Ry. Co. v. Wachter (Ohio) 70 N. E. 974, 975, 70 Ohio St. 113.

RELEASED.

The word "released," as used "in contracts of shipment, has from usage acquired a well-defined meaning. * * * In this state * * * the word must be held to mean only that the shipper agrees to relieve from all liability as against which the law allows the carrier to exempt itself by contract." Therefore the contract to ship goods "released" must be construed to mean that the carrier is only relieved from losses occasioned without his negligence. Georgia Southern & F. R. Co. v. Johnson, King & Co. (Ga.) 48 S. E. 807.

RELIGIOUS USE.

A bequest to a priest or his successor, for the purpose of saying masses for testator and his wife, is a "religious use," within Act 1855 (P. L. 328). In re O'Donnell's Estate, 58 Atl. 120, 209 Pa. 63.

RELY.

Believe synonymous, see "Believe."

REM.

See "In Rem."

REMAIN.

The word "remain" is defined as "to stay behind after others have withdrawn; to continue unchanged in place; to abide; to stay; to endure; to last." Its synonyms are "to continue; to stay; wait; tarry; rest; sojourn; dwell; abide; last; endure" (Webster). A statute which requires a liquor dealer's bond to be conditioned that he will not sell liquor to a minor, or permit a minor to enter and remain in his saloon, provided that, where the sale was made in good faith and on reasonable belief that the person was of full age, there can be no recovery, was passed for the purpose of repressing two evils—one the purchase of liquors by minors, and the other the immoral influence resulting to them from loitering in saloons; and it follows that where the entering and remaining in a saloon were merely for a time sufficient to get a drink, and the sale was made in good faith on reasonable grounds of belief that the person was of full age, there can be no recovery on a liquor dealer's bond in the terms of the statute, although such person was a minor. Tinkle v. Sweeney (Tex.) 77 S. W. 609, 610; Ghio v. Stephens (Tex.) 78 S. W. 1084.

REMAINDER.

See "Contingent Remainder"; "Limitation of a Remainder"; "Vested Remainder."

All the rest, residue, and remainder, see "All."

The word "remainder," as applied to estates and under the restrictive meaning, is a remnant of an estate in lands and tenements, expectant upon and part of the estate created together with the same at one time; and to be strictly a remainder it must be created not only at the same time, but by the same instrument, as the particular estate. Biggerstaff v. Van Pelt, 69 N. E. 804, 806, 207 Ill. 611.

The word "remainder" includes executory devises. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1168, 183 Mo. 238.

REMEDY.

See "Appropriate Remedy."

The term "remedy," within Rev. St. § 79, providing that, when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, unless so expressed, is the means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury; that is, the legal mode for enforcing a right or redressing or preventing a wrong. To illustrate: We speak of the remedy for nonfulfillment of contract as an action, under the old practice, in assumpsit, covenant, debt, or detinue, or in tort, if the injury is to the individual, and the like, and under the Code, the civil action, embracing all of these, while in criminal prosecutions the remedy is by indictment or information, or in some minor offenses by complaint before a magistrate. State v. Barlow, 71 N. E. 726, 728, 70 Ohio St. 363.

REMOTE CAUSE.

By "remote cause" is intended that which may have happened and yet no injury have occurred, notwithstanding that no injury could have occurred if it had not happened. Claypool v. Wigmore (Ind.) 71 N. E. 509, 510 (citing Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Trainor, 33 Md. 542).

REMOVAL.

An assignment to a lower position in the same service under the classified service and at a lower rate of compensation is a "removal" from the position formerly held. Waters v. City of New York, 88 N. Y. Supp. 238, 241, 43 Misc. Rep. 154 (citing People ex rel. Callahan v. Board of Education, 79 N. Y. Supp. 624, 78 App. Div. 501, affirmed in 174 N. Y. 169, 66 N. E. 674).

The word "removal," as used in an order of court removing a defendant from office on the filing of an indictment against him under an act according to which, and a constitutional provision, he should then only be suspended, removal following on conviction should be construed as one of suspension; defendant not being prejudiced, he being thereafter convicted. Howard v. State (Ark.) 82 S. W. 202.

The words "removal" and "discharge" are used indiscriminately in the statute to designate orders of court which have the effect of simply removing guardians, executors, etc., from office without exonerating them from liability to account. Code Civ. Proc. § 1805, requiring action on a guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from the "discharge or removal" of the guardian, applies to an action after a final order of the court removing or discharging the guardian, and does not include termination of the guardianship by the ward attaining majority. Cook v. Ceas, 77 Pac. 65, 143 Cal. 221.

REMOVE AT PLEASURE.

The right to "remove at pleasure," within Ky. St. 1903, § 3619, providing that certain officers named may be removed at the pleasure of the city council, has a well-defined legal meaning, and is an entirely different thing from the right to remove for cause; and to hold that the statute only authorizes the council to remove for cause would be to deny the words used by the Legislature their ordinary meaning. London v. City of Franklin (Ky.) 80 S. W. 514.

RENDITION OF JUDGMENT.

See "Time of Rendition of Judgment."

RENEWAL PREMIUM.

Where an insurance contract provides that premiums must be paid in advance as a condition of continuing the policy in force for another year, or for the period for which they are paid, such premiums are known as "renewal premiums," because they renew and continue the policy in force for another year, or another period. People ex rel. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Miller, 71 N. E. 930, 932, 179 N. Y. 227.

RENT.

See "Ground Rent."

REPAIR.

See "Ordinary Repairs."

The word "repair" contemplates an existing structure, which has become imperfect by reason of the action of elements or otherwise. In the case of vessels particularly, this distinction is one which cannot be ignored, as it lies at the basis of an important diversity of jurisdiction between the common-law and maritime courts. Gagnon v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 510, 512, 193 U. S. 451, 48 L. Ed. 745.

REPARTIAMENTO.

"Repartimento" is a proceeding in its nature judicial—a partition of common property. Steinbach v. Moore, 30 Cal. 498, 505.

REPLEVIN.

The primary purpose of replevin is to recover the property in specie, not its value. A text-writer, in distinguishing between the compensation to be awarded to the injured party in certain cases, says: "The essential distinction between trover and replevin, as regards the rule of damages, aside from the element of willfulness in the taking or detention, is briefly this: In trover the title to the property is regarded as having passed to the defendant, who is therefore liable for its value, simply, with interest. In replevin the title is treated as still in the plaintiff, who is therefore to recover, not only the chattel itself, or its value, but also damages for its detention, of which interest may be the measure, but is not in all cases the necessary limit." La Vie v. Crosby, 74 Pac. 220, 222, 43 Or. 612 (citing Sedg. Dam. [8th Ed.] § 528).

Replevin is a mere possessory action. It is said in Shinn, Repl. § 164, that it is a universal principle of the law of replevin that the action will only lie against the party in possession of the property at the time the action is instituted. Jenkins v. City of Ontario, 74 Pac. 466, 467, 44 Or. 72.

Replevin is a possessory remedy. Mattison v. Hooberry, 78 S. W. 642, 643, 104 Mo. App. 287.

REPORT.

See "Department Report"; "Inquire and Report."

REPRESENTATION.

See "By Right of Representation"; "False Representation."

REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING CHARACTER, ETC.

In Rev. Laws, c. 74, § 4, providing that no action shall be brought to charge a person on or by reason of a representation or assurance made concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person, unless such representation is made in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby, the phrase "concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person," should be construed as limited to representations made to induce the plaintiff to enter into a transaction which will result in a debt due to him from a third person, and did not include representations as to the financial credit of a corporation, made to induce plaintiff to subscribe to shares thereof to be paid for in cash. Walker v. Russell, 71 N. E. 86, 88, 186 Mass. 69.

REPRESENTATIVE.

See "Legal Representative"; "Personal Representative."

"The word 'representative' has been held to include any person or party who has succeeded to the rights of the decedent, whether by purchase, descent, or operation of law." In a proceeding for the distribution of the estate of an intestate, in a contest between parties, each claiming as next of kin and heir at law, the administrator is a representative of his intestate. Sorensen v. Sorensen (Neb.) 98 N. W. 837, 840 (quoting Kroh v. Helms, 48 Neb. 691, 67 N. W. 771; Sorensen v. Sorensen, 56 Neb. 729, 77 N. W. 68).

The word "representatives," as used in a will whereby testator devised land and personalty to his wife, and then made to each of his children certain devises and bequests, and then declared that at the expiration of the life of the wife that which was given to her for life should be equally divided between all his children, share and share alike, "the representatives of such as may have died to stand in the place of their ancestors," means the persons who are appointed, not by the deviser in a will, but by the law, to represent him, and upon whom the law would have cast the inheritance. Bowen v. Hackney (N. C.) 48 S. E. 633, 635.

REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

"A republican form of government is a government administered by representatives chosen or appointed by the people or by their authority. Mr. Madison says it is 'a government which derives all its powers directly or indirectly from the great body of the people, and is administered by persons holding their offices during pleasure, for a limited period, or during good behavior.' " Kaddery v. City of Portland, 74 Pac. 710, 719, 44 Or. 118.

REPUGNANCY.

"Repugnancy consists in two inconsistent allegations, which destroy the effect of each other." An indictment for conspiracy to defraud by the use of the mails, in violation of Rev. St. § 5480 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3698], as amended, is not bad for repugnancy because it charges in the same count that defendant conspired to defraud by dealing or pretending to deal in what are commonly called "green articles" and spurious treasury notes. Lehman v. United States (U. S.) 127 Fed. 41, 45, 61 C. C. A. 577 (citing 10 Ency. Law, 565).

REQUEST.

To "request" is not to empower, but to recognize that power to do the thing requested already resides of right in the one of whom the request is made. A devise of the residue of testator's property to his widow, to have the use and control of the same, with the right to use as much as she pleased for her comfort and pleasure, and, if there were anything left at her death, "it is my request that she give" to a church a parsonage, "and one-half of the residue to my heirs," gave the widow an estate in fee in the whole property, with the right to dispose of the same by will, subject only to the request above recited. Brown v. Eastman, 57 Atl. 96, 97, 72 N. H. 356.

The words "desire" and "request" do not import a trust, where testatrix devised certain real estate to her husband, and stated that it was her desire and request that he should convey the same to a lodge, so as to impose on it the duty to properly care for the cemetery lot in which she might be buried. They should be understood in their usual sense, in the absence of anything in the will to indicate that they were used in any other than their ordinary sense. Kauffman v. Gries, 74 Pac. 846, 848, 141 Cal. 295.

"The mere use in a will of the precatory words 'desire' and 'request' will not be sufficient to create an enforceable trust, or a power in the nature of a trust, when the context clearly shows that the testator's intention was contrary." A testator made a devise to an educational institution, and provided that, in case the devise should fail for any cause, the same should go to the children of his two brothers. In a codicil he authorized, empowered, and requested his daughter, his only lineal descendant, to ratify and confirm the devise to the institution, declaring that, in case she complied with the request, the gifts over should be revoked.

The daughter executed the power by a deed to the institution, and the gift over was thereby revoked. Thomas v. Board of Trustees of Ohio State University, 70 N. E. 896, 899, 70 Ohio St. 92.

Where the witnesses to a will go to testatrix's house for the purpose of attesting her will, which was drawn up and executed by testatrix in their presence, and one of the witnesses heard her say that she wanted the will written, and testified that it was written and read to her, and the other witness held her up in bed for the purpose of having her affix her signature, and both witnesses testified that the will was executed in their presence and that they attested it at her request, it is sufficient to show a proper execution of the will, although both witnesses denied that testatrix requested them to sign. Hughes v. Rader (Mo.) 82 S. W. 32, 51 (citing Schlerbaum v. Schemme, 157 Mo. 1, 57 S. W. 526, 80 Am. St. Rep. 604).

REQUISITE BOND.

The "requisite bond," named in Rev. St. c. 6, § 125, is not such a bond as the assessors may require, but is such as is required by section 128, providing that the assessor shall require the constable or collector to give bond for the faithful discharge of his duty to the residents of the town, with such sureties as the municipal officers approve. Smith v. Randlette, 56 Atl. 199, 200, 98 Me. 86.

REQUISITE MAJORITY.

As used in a constitutional provision that, whenever the requisite majority of the judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals sitting are unable to agree upon a decision, the case shall be reheard by a full bench, the words "requisite majority" means that the assent of at least three of the judges shall be required to determine that any law is or is not repugnant to the Constitution. Funkhouser v. Spahr, 46 S. E. 378, 379, 102 Va. 306.

REQUISITE NOTICE.

The term "requisite notice," in a statute authorizing a notary to give requisite notice or notices on protest of notes, means that he should give such notice or notices as are necessary to charge all the parties who are sought to be made liable on the paper and whose liability is dependent upon notice. Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41, 54.

RES ADJUDICATA.

See, also, "Estoppel by Judgment."

"In order to make a matter res judicata, there must be the concurrence of the four conditions following: (1) Identity in the thing sued for; (2) identity of the cause of action; (3) identity of persons and the parties to the action; (4) identity of the quality in the person for or against whom the claim is made." Turner Tp. v. Williams (S. D.) 97 N. W. 842, 843 (quoting Bouvier, Dict.).

"The plea of res judicata applies, not only to points upon which the court was actually required to form an opinion and pronounce judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of the allegation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time." W. C. Belcher Land Mortg. Co. v. Norris (Tex.) 78 S. W. 390, 391.

The principle of "res judicata" embraces not only what was actually determined in the former case, but also extends to any other matter properly involved, and which might have been raised and determined in it. In re Assessment of Property of Northwestern University, 69 N. E. 75, 76, 206 Ill. 64 (citing Rogers v. Higgins, 57 Ill. 244).

To constitute a former judgment a bar or estoppel in a pending action, there must exist in the two cases identity of subject-matter, of cause of action, of persons and parties, and of the quality in the persons for or against whom the claim is made. Vincent v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 58 Atl. 963, 964, 77 Conn. 281.

RES GESTÆ.

The phrase "res gestæ" implies a substantial coincidence in time; but, if declarations of third persons are not in their nature a part of the fact, they are not admissible in evidence, however closely related in point of time. Burns v. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 883, 884, 93 App. Div. 566.

In Leahy v. Cass Ave. & F. G. Ry. Co., 97 Mo. 105, 10 S. W. 58, 10 Am. St. Rep. 300, it was said that a declaration, to be a part of the res gestæ, need not be coincident in point of time with the main fact to be proved. It is enough that the two are so nearly connected that the declaration can, in the ordinary course of affairs, be said to be a spontaneous explanation of the real cause. The declaration is, then, a verbal act, and may well be said to be a part of the main fact or transaction. Again, if the subsequent declaration and the main fact at issue, taken together, form a continuous transaction, then the declaration is admissible. Much, therefore, depends on the nature and character of the transaction in question; for it may be, and often is, of a continuing character. It cannot be said that a mere subsequent declaration will of itself furnish a sufficient connecting circumstance. Gotwald v.

St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 125, 126, 102 Mo. App. 492.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA.

The acts and declarations either of strangers or of one of the parties to the action in his dealings with strangers are designated "res inter alios actæ." Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Schmitz, 71 N. E. 1050, 1054, 211 Ill. 446.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

"The meaning of the maxim 'res ipsa loquitur' is that, while negligence is not as a general rule to be presumed, yet the injury itself may afford sufficient prima facie evidence of negligence, and the presumption of negligence may be created by the circumstances under which the injury occurred. * * * Where negligence is thus presumed from the occurrence of the injury, defendant is called upon to rebut the prima facie case by showing that he took reasonable care to prevent the happening of such injury." Chicago City R. Co. v. Barker, 70 N. E. 624, 626, 209 Ill. 321.

RES JUDICATA.

See "Res Adjudicata."

RESERVATION.

Exception distinguished, see "Exception."

Where A. owns ten acres of land, and conveys it to B., reserving to himself a life estate therein, that is a "reservation." Dozier v. Toalson (Mo.) 79 S. W. 421, 422.

RESIDE.

The word "reside," in its ordinary sense, carries with it the idea of permanence, as well as continuity. It does not mean living in one place and claiming a home in another; and, in an action requiring plaintiff to reside in a county in the state before bringing suit for divorce, it does not mean a constructive or imaginary residence in Texas, while actually living in Illinois. It was intended, not only to compel an actual good-faith inhabitancy of the state, but an actual residence in the county where the suit for divorce is instituted, on the part of the person seeking the divorce. Michael v. Michael (Tex.) 79 S. W. 74, 75.

The word "resides," in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 45, § 12, providing that all personal property held in trust by an executor for another person shall be assessed against the executor where such other person resides, means resides for the purpose of taxation, as de-fixed in section 9, directing that personal property shall be taxed to the owner in the town in which the owner shall have his actual place of abode for a larger portion of the year. Clarke v. Addeman, 58 Atl. 623, 26 R. I. 168.

RESIDENCE.

See "Principal Place of Residence"; "Usual Residence."

Citizenship distinguished, see "Citizenship."

Domicile distinguished, see "Domicile."

Habitation synonymous, see "Habitation."

"Residence indicates permanency of occupation, as distinguished from temporary occupation, but does not include so much as 'domicile,' which requires an intention continued with residence. 'Residence' has been defined to be a place where a person's habitation is fixed, without any present intention of removing therefrom. It is lost by leaving the place where one had acquired a permanent home and removed to another place animo non revertendi, and is gained, by remaining in such new place animo manendi." Residence within the district, to give the court jurisdiction of proceedings in bankruptcy, must be bona fide, and the removal of a person from one district to another, for the express purpose of filing a petition in bankruptcy therein, and with the intent of leaving the district as soon as he obtained a discharge, does not make him a resident, so as to confer jurisdiction on the court. In re Garneau (U. S.) 127 Fed. 677, 678, 62 O. C. A. 403.

The word "residence," like the word "homestead," is not confined merely to the dwelling house, but it may also include everything connected therewith, used to make the home more comfortable and enjoyable. But the words "homestead" and "residence" cannot be intended to include some other and independent family's home and residence. Linn v. Ziegler (Kan.) 75 Pac. 489, 490 (citing Ashton v. Ingle, 20 Kan. 670, 681, 27 Am. Rep. 197).

That an employé had worked for several weeks in a county, where he was injured while at such work, does not establish his "residence" in such county, under a statute relating to venue in actions for injuries to servants. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Cloyd (Tex.) 78 S. W. 43, 44.

The word "residence," as used in an information under Comp. Laws, § 11,551, prohibiting larceny from any building on fire, which charged defendant with the larceny of goods "from the residence of * * *, the same being then and there on fire," means building. People v. Klammer (Mich.) 100 N. W. 600.

RESIDENT.

See "Actual Resident"; "Nonresident." Inhabitants synonymous, see "Inhabitant."

An averment in a complaint that plaintiff is "a resident of the state of Delaware" must be intended to mean as averring that the plaintiff is a citizen of that state. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n v. Edwards, 24 Sup. Ct. 696, 698, 194 U. S. 877, 48 L. Ed. 1027 (citing Jones v. Andrews, 77 U. S. [10 Wall.] 331, 19 L. Ed. 935; United States Express Co. v. Kountze, 75 U. S. [8 Wall.] 342, 19 L. Ed. 457).

A foreign corporation, being a nonresident in fact, becomes, for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction, by fiction of law a "resident" of the city, if it has a place therein for the regular transaction of business. Goldzler v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 88 N. Y. Supp. 214, 215, 43 Misc. Rep. 667.

RESIDENT FREEHOLDER.

The term "resident freeholder," as used in Cobbe's Ann. St. § 7175, providing that village authorities may grant a license to sell intoxicating liquors when a petition therefor shall be signed by a designated number of resident freeholders, is used in its ordinary and commonly understood meaning, and a wife, living with her husband on land the title to which is in the latter, and which is occupied by them jointly as family homestead, is not a freeholder; and the same is true as to a husband living with his wife on land occupied by them jointly as a homestead, the legal title to which is in her. Campbell v. Moran (Neb.) 99 N. W. 498, 499.

RESIDUARY CLAUSE.

"The purpose of a residuary clause in a will is to make a complete testamentary disposition of the estate of the testator, so that no part of it may be left to pass under the intestate laws. It is a gift of all that is left after the gifts specified or designated have been paid or satisfied, and it carries with it, and is presumed to have been so intended, not only all personal estate which remains not specifically disposed of at the time the will is executed, but all that for any reason is illy disposed of, or falls as to the legatees originally intended." In re Wood's Estate, 57 Atl. 1103, 209 Pa. 16 (citing Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 12).

RESIDUARY LEGATEE.

"A 'residuary legatee' is one who takes what remains, or a portion of what remains, after satisfying all other gifts, charges, losses, and expenses." In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

RESIDUE.

All the rest, residue, and remainder, see "All."

"Residue" is defined by Webster as that which remains after a part is taken, separated, removed, or designated. While the word "residue," applied to estate or property generally, as in the usual residuary clause of a will, may include all the remaining estate, whether in possession, remainder, or reversion, when applied only to a given parcel of land, its popular meaning is simply the remaining acres of that parcel, and not the remaining estate in the parcel. Young v. Quimby, 56 Atl. 656, 657, 98 Me. 167.

RESISTED.

See "Unreasonably Resisted."

RESPECTIVELY.

While the word "respectively" is not given precisely the same meaning by lexicographers as the word "alternately," it is used in Act 1901 (P. L. 629), allowing challenges to be made by the state and defendant, "respectively," in the same sense as the word "alternately," used in Act 1860 (P. L. 440, § 88), providing that the commonwealth shall challenge one person and the defendant one person, and so "alternately" until all the challenges shall be made. Commonwealth v. Conroy, 56 Atl. 427, 428, 207 Pa. 212.

RESPONSIBLE.

See, also, "Be Responsible For."

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract by which defendant, the lessee of a coal dock, was to act as bailee and agent in receiving, storing, reshipping, and selling coal produced by plaintiff. The contract provided that plaintiff should remain the owner of the coal until it was sold, and fix the selling price, defendant to receive a commission on the sales and to guaranty the accounts; that plaintiff should insure all coal consigned and deliver the same safely alongside defendant's dock, which should thereupon be "responsible" to plaintiff for all coal after such delivery alongside its dock, and insure the same, and pay taxes thereon, and guaranty weights as per bills of lading, being compensated therefor and for dock rents by the payment by plaintiff of a stated price per ton for loading and reloading. It is held that the provision that defendant should be "responsible" for the coal after its delivery was not intended to enlarge its common-law liability as bailee by making it an insurer against all possible contingencies, but to mark the time when such liability should commence, and that it was not liable for a loss of coal through a collapse of its dock, occurring without any fault or negligence on its part. Fairmont Coal Co. v. Jones & Adams Co. (U. S.) 184 Fed. 711, 714.

REST.

All the rest, residue and remainder, see "All."

RESTAURANT.

The sale of soda water and ice cream in a drug store does not bring the proprietor thereof within the statute providing that keepers of "eating houses, restaurants, and saloons" cannot be lawfully granted permits for the sale of liquor. In re Henry (Iowa) 100 N. W. 43, 44.

RESTRAINT OF COMMERCE.

See "Combination in Restraint of Commerce."

RESULTING.

See "Death Resulting from the Wound."

RETAIL.

Selling and delivering oil from a tank wagon to merchants in quantities of not less than 25 gallons for resale to customers is a sale by retail, within an act requiring retail sellers to first procure a license. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 970, 971.

RETRAXIT.

"In those jurisdictions where the rule indicated by the word 'retraxit' has been recognized, the substance of the matter seems to be that a dismissal by agreement of the parties is equivalent to and is treated as a public renunciation on the part of the complainant of the claim asserted by him in his pleadings against the defendant, and he is thereafter estopped to bring it forward again." Lindsay v. Allen (Tenn.) 82 S. W. 171, 174.

Retraxit differs from a nonsuit in that, when once entered by a plaintiff on the record, it forever puts an end to the pending suit, as well as the cause of action involved. Waldron v. Angleman (N. J.) 58 Atl. 568, 571.

REVENUE.

See "Estimated Revenue."

The word "revenue," in Sess. Laws 1902, c. 3, relating to public revenue, is sufficiently broad to include all provisions having that general object in view, not only provisions for securing revenue as the result of a direct tax upon property, but revenue derived from the imposition of licenses, duties, excises, and a tax on occupations or on successions. In re Magnes' Estate (Colo.) 77 Pac. 853, 856; Brown v. Elder, Id.

The word "revenue," as used in Const. art. 6, § 2, giving the Supreme Court original jurisdiction of cases relating to the revenue, civil cases in which the state shall be a party, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, has no reference to the revenues of municipal corporations, but to those only which are required for the purposes of general state administration. Aachen & M. Fire Ins. Co. v. City of Omaha (Neb.) 100 N. W. 137.

The title, "An act to provide a system of revenue," is broad enough to include provisions for special assessments. City of Omaha v. Hodskins (Neb.) 97 N. W. 346, 347.

REVIEW.

See "Writ of Review."

REVISE.

Power given to code commissioners to "revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate" public statutes of the state did not invest them of themselves with power to enact any new statutory law, or to revive any statute or statutes not in force at the time of the revision. Mathis v. State, 12 South. 681, 683, 31 Fla. 291.

The act to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of the United States, approved June 27, 1886 (14 Stat. 74), authorizes the appointment of three persons as commissioners to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, in force at the time the commissioners may make the final report of their doings. The report was made and acted on, and was entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the laws of the United States," etc. This act was approved, and the result was a book, which Congress declared "shall be designated and cited as the Revised Statutes of the United States." It is held that the enactment of the Revised Statutes by act of Congress was not the enactment of a body of laws as original legislation, but was simply the enactment of a more convenient expression of the law as it existed on December 1, 1873. It did not enact or re-enact anything as law which was not the law on that date. United States v. Moore (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1305, 1306, 1307.

REVOLVER.

The furnishing of a Stevens 32-caliber rifle by a father to his minor son was not an offense, within Rev. St. 1898, § 4397, prohibiting any person from giving any "pistol or revolver" to a minor. Taylor v. Sell (Wis.) 97 N. W. 498.

RIGHT.

See "Civil Right"; "Legal Right"; "Material Right"; "Political Right"; "Property Right"; "Substantial Right"; "Terms and Conditions, Rights, and Privileges"; "Vested Right."

The word "rights," as used in Borough Act, § 96 (P. L. 1897, p. 329), providing that boroughs shall retain and enjoy all the rights and property heretofore possessed by them, refers to rights in the nature of property rights, and contemplates the retention of property rights, and not powers, such as a power to license inns and taverns, and which, not having been given by the act, must be deemed to have been withheld, though formerly enjoyed by certain special charter boroughs, in view of the provision of the same section that boroughs should have all the powers conferred by the act, thus excluding by implication powers not conferred. Smith v. Borough of Hightstown (N. J.) 57 Atl. 901, 903.

RIGHT OF EMINENT DOMAIN.

See "Eminent Domain."

RIGHT OF REPRESENTATION.

See "By Right of Representation."

RIGHT OF WAY.

The term "right of way" should not be confined to the land over which the main track of a railroad should be constructed. The land upon which a side track, a switch, or a turnout is built, and in actual use by the company in the business for which it was organized, for all practical purposes is as much held a right of way as the land upon which the main track is constructed. In the operation of a railroad, it is necessary that trains should pass each other, and hence the necessity of turnouts, switches, and side tracks. In the loading of cars, transfer of cars, the making up of trains, and innumerable other instances that might be named in the prosecution of its business as a common carrier, side tracks, switches, and turnouts are as indispensable to a proper transaction of its business as the main track itself. Land held and in actual use by a railroad company for side tracks, switches, and turnouts must be regarded, within the meaning of the revenue law, as a part of the right of way of the company. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 98 Ill. 350, 356.

The term "right of way" has a twofold signification. It sometimes is used to describe a right belonging to a party, a right of passage over any tract; and it is also used to describe that strip of land which railroad companies take upon which to construct their roadbed. In a contract between railroad companies, providing that one party shall permit other railroads to use its right of way, the term is used in the latter sense. Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry., 29 Fed. 546, 555.

Constructive notice that a railroad owns a "right of way" in certain premises means the free use of so much ground upon both sides of the tracks as is required for the convenient and customary use and maintenance of the railroad. Day, Williams & Co. v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co., 41 Ohio St. 392, 398.

The term "right of way," as used in a statute providing that a railroad company shall be responsible to any person for damages to property by fire communicated by its locomotives or originating within its right of way, has no reference to the title of the railroad company, whether having a mere easement or a greater estate, but is intended to designate the locality within which the railroad would be liable under the statute. Brown v. Carolina Midland Ry. Co., 46 S. E. 283, 286, 67 S. O. 481, 100 Am. St. Rep. 756.

RIP'IN R'G'T.

An owner of lands adjoining a lake conveyed to plaintiff the portion of the land that was covered by water; the deeds reciting that it was the intention of the grantor to convey all his rights to the water and the soil under water in a lake belonging and appurtenant to the described premises. After the conveyance the lots were assessed by number, with the addition "excp't rip'in r'g't." The part conveyed to plaintiff was assessed as unplatted lands. The abbreviation "rip'in r'g't," in the assessment, clearly meant the riparian rights of the parties. Newaygo Portland Cement Co. v. Sheridan Tp. (Mich.) 100 N. W. 747, 748.

RIPARIAN.

Lands which do not in any way border upon the water of a stream are not riparian to it. The word "ripa," from which the term "riparian" is derived, means, literally, a river bank, and therefore, in the broadest sense, all lands touching the stream are riparian, in the sense that they relate to the bank. But of necessity there must be some limitation. The extent back from the stream must be determined. The holdings of an owner, before they can be said to be riparian to a stream, must be not only within the limits of the original survey or grant by the government, but must also be within the watershed of such stream, and actually touch its waters. Clements v. Watkins Land Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 665, 668.

RIPARIAN OWNER.

The expression "riparian owner," in its ordinary and popular signification, carries with it the title to the center of the nonnavigable stream upon which his land abuts. In re Wilder, 85 N. Y. Supp. 741, 743, 90 App. Div. 262.

RISK.

See "Assumption of Risk"; "At Owner's Risk."

RIVER.

See "Mississippi River"; "North River."

"A river is a running stream of water, pent in on either side by banks, shores, or walls. * * * A fresh water river, like a tidal river, is composed of the alveus, or bed, and the water; but it has banks, instead of shores. The banks are the elevations of land which confine the waters in their natural channel, when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks; and in that condition of the water the banks and the soil which is permanently submerged form the bed of the river." State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877 (quoting Gould, Waters)

ROADBED AND TRACK.

The term "roadbed and track," as used in a statute establishing a drainage and levy district in portions of certain counties lying east of a certain railway, including the track and roadbed of said railway, includes the right of way. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Grayson (Ark.) 78 S. W. 777, 778.

ROBBERY.

The felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear, is robbery, irrespective of the value of the property so taken. People v. Stevens, 75 Pac. 62, 63, 141 Cal. 488.

Robbery is stealing property with violence from the person or personal custody of another person. It is necessary, in order to constitute that crime, that the goods shall be on the person of the owner, or the owner's agent, or shall be in his presence and in his custody. State v. Lyons (N. J.) 58 Atl. 398, 401.

ROLL.

See "Judgment Roll."

ROTARY.

In Webster's Dictionary "rotary" is defined as "turning, as a wheel on its axis;" in the Century Dictionary, as "turning round and round, as a wheel on its axis." The word "rotary," used in a claim of a patent to describe an element of a combination, does not necessarily imply a continuous rotation of the part, so as to make it necessary to limit the claim by reading into it as an additional element mechanism for such rotation, but is properly descriptive, if the part is capable of being rotated by hand or otherwise. Klipp-Armstrong Co. v. King Philip Mills (U. S.) 130 Fed. 28, 29.

SAFE.

In an action by a servant for personal injuries, alleged to have been caused by a defective fastening in a handhold on a freight car, the trial court charged the jury that, while plaintiff assumed all the risks ordinarily incident to his employment, such assumption of risk did not begin until defendant had used ordinary care to securely fasten and maintain in safe condition the handholds on its cars. The defendant objected to this instruction, on the ground that it imposed on it the duty to exercise ordinary care to securely fasten and maintain in safe condition the appliance in question. The appellate court, in passing on the correctness of the instruction, said: "As a matter of strict law the charge is not accurate. From the inception of his employment the plaintiff assumed the risks ordinarily incident to the service. The risk superadded by the negligence of the master did not form a part of these, unless brought to his knowledge. Applying this principle to the issue in this case, we have this result. The risks ordinarily incident to the use of the lag screw fastening plaintiff assumed, for he knew that many cars thus equipped were handled by appellant. He also assumed the risk of such defects in the appliances as would not have been disclosed to the company by an inspection conducted with ordinary care. This latter risk he assumed in any event; for, if the company had not inspected the car at all, yet, if the defect which caused the accident would not have been discovered by a proper inspection, it fell in the category of assumed risks." The court said, further, in regard to the safety of the appliance used, that it seemed to appear beyond controversy that the lag screw fastening was a safe appliance, when properly attached to sound wood, and that it might be that the ideal is absolute safety, and that ordinary care should be exercised to its attainment, but that, if an ordinarily prudent person should assume the task of exercising ordinary care to furnish a safe appliance for the use of his employes, construing the word "safe" in its absolute sense, he would direct his efforts toward the production of such an appliance as would be safe, however carelessly or unskillfully used, a standard which has nowhere been set for the master; but there was much force in the suggestion of the appellee that the words were not to be taken in their absolute sense, unless attended by a word which carries that meaning. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Perry (Tex.) 82 S. W. 343, 345.

SALARIED OFFICER.

Under Laws 1902, p. 972, c. 380, providing that the sheriff of Ontario county shall receive as compensation for all his services and his duties appertaining thereto, which are a county charge on the county or any town therein, an annual salary, and also certain fees, such sheriff is not a "salaried officer," within Code Civ. Proc. § 3307, subd. 4, entitling sheriffs to a fee for each cause placed on the calendar for trial by jury, but declaring that it does not apply to counties wherein the sheriff is a salaried officer. People ex rel. Flynn v. Leech, 89 N. Y. Supp. 178, 179, 43 Misc. Rep. 435.

SALARY.

Broadly, the word "salary" means a recompense or consideration made to a person for his pains or industry in another man's business. Whether it be derived from "salarium," or more fancifully from "sal," the pay of the Roman soldier, it carries with it the fundamental idea of compensation for services rendered. Indeed, there is eminent authority for holding that the words "wages" and "salary" are in essence synonymous. Hopkins v. Cromwell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 839, 841, 89 App. Div. 481.

Salary is an "annual compensation for services rendered; a fixed sum to be paid by the year for services." Burrill, Law Dict. The per annum compensation of men in official and in some other positions. Anderson, Law Dict. Where the word "salary" is found in a legislative act, as applied to an officer's compensation for official work done or required, it is generally understood to apply to the officer's per annum allowance, when not otherwise qualified. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Speed, 81 S. W. 1260, 1263, 183 Mo. 186.

The salary of a public officer is a provision made by law for his maintenance and support during his term, to the end that, without anxiety concerning his means of subsistence, he may be able to devote himself entirely to the duties of his office. Ruperich v. Baehr, 75 Pac. 782, 783, 142 Cal. 190 (citing Lewis v. City of Denver, 48 Pac. 317, 9 Colo. App. 328).

"Where a person is employed at a salary, the term itself imports permanency of employment." White v. Koehler (N. J.) 57 Atl. 124.

SALE.

See "Contract of Sale"; "Kept for Sale"; "Public Sale."

"To constitute a valid sale there must be competent parties, mutual assent, a thing, the absolute or general property in which is transferred from the seller to the buyer, and a price in money paid or promised." Logan v. Stephens County (Tex.) 81 S. W. 109, 110 (quoting Anderson, Law Dict.).

"It has been a question of more or less trouble, under the local option laws in the different appellate courts of the federal Union, as to what the term 'sale' imports. In some it is held that it imports only a money consideration; in others, that the exchange of intoxicating liquors for some other commodity is a sale; and, under peculiar circumstances, that the loan of intoxicating liquors to be returned in kind is a sale. It has also been held that intoxicants delivered in the payment of a debt, or for services performed, is a sale. In Texas the broader signification of sale has been held to be correct; and if the exchange, or even the loan, of whisky was intended to cover up a sale, that would constitute a violation of our local option statute. But none of the decisions to which our attention has been called in this state has ever held that the mere loaning of a bottle of intoxicants, to be returned in kind, as an accommodation, constitutes a sale. Under the facts of the Bruce Case, 36 Tex. Cr. R.

53, 39 S. W. 683, and Keaton's Case, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 259, 38 S. W. 522, the loan or exchange was done simply to cover up a sale, and these parties were carrying on a liquor traffic in the local option territory, and the loans were simply evasions of the law, and really were sales. But it was not intended by those decisions, nor is it the meaning of the law, and the Legislature certainly did not intend to hold as a sale the mere loan by one neighbor to another of intoxicants until that neighbor could secure and return the same amount of intoxicants. That in no sense would constitute a sale under our law. It would seem that, if a mere accommodation loan would constitute a sale, there would be two sellers and no purchaser, or there would be two sales; that is, the man who loaned the whisky and the man who returned the whisky would each be a seller. Our law is not intended to cover this character of transaction. The Constitution and the law both limit the transaction to a sale. If appellant simply loaned Riggins a bottle of whisky, to be returned when Riggins' whisky came by express, and it was not intended as a subterfuge to cover a sale, he would not be guilty; and this phase of the law should have been presented to the jury." Ray v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 535, 536.

A conviction for selling intoxicating liquors without a license is not justified on a showing that defendant purchased whisky for others at their request and with their money. "If one, seeing his neighbor on his way to town, requests him to purchase for him a bottle of whisky, promising to return the purchase money when he sees him, and the neighbor does so, and leaves the bottle at the house of the one for whom he purchased, this does not render the party purchasing the whisky guilty of making a sale." Whitmore v. State (Ark.) 77 S. W. 598, 599.

SALE BY RETAIL.

SALE IN BULK.

See "In Bulk."

SALE OF TINWARE.

A sale of the exclusive right to sell a patented article in a certain territory is not a sale of tinware, within a statute exempting from statutory provisions as to peddlers one who sells tinware, although the article, the right to sell which is sold, is of tinware. Burns v. Sparks (Ky.) 82 S. W. 425, 426.

SALESMAN.

See "Traveling Salesman."

A "salesman" is defined in the Standard Dictionary as a man who sells goods in a shop or store by canvassing. The word is generally accepted to mean a person who sells goods for a merchant, and not to mean the merchant himself. United States v. Gin Hing (Ariz.) 78 Pac. 639, 640.

SALOON.

The sale of soda water and ice cream in a drug store does not bring the proprietor thereof within the statute providing that keepers of "eating houses, restaurants, and saloons" cannot be lawfully granted permits for the sale of liquor. In re Henery (Iowa) 100 N. W. 43, 44.

SALVAGE.

Salvage is the compensation allowed to persons by whose voluntary assistance a ship at sea, or her cargo, or both, have been saved, in whole or in part, from impending sea peril, or in recovering such property from actual peril or loss, as in cases of shipwreck, derelict, or recapture. Central Stockyard & Transit Co. v. Mears, 85 N. Y. Supp. 795, 796, 89 App. Div. 452.

SALVOR.

A salvor is defined to be a person who, without any particular relation to the ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer adventurer, without any pre-existing contract that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of the vessel. The Dumper No. 8 (U. S.) 129 Fed. 98, 99, 63 C. C. A. 600 (citing New York Harbor Protection Co. v. The Clara, 90 U. S. [23 Wall.] 1-16, 23 L. Ed. 150).

A salvor is a person who renders voluntary service to rescue a vessel or property from marine peril, and who is successful in whole or in part. He has a claim which may be enforced by a suit against the ship, or its cargo, or both; and, more than that, he is entitled to the possession of the property saved, provided it is such personalty as may be reduced to possession, and has a lien for the salvage compensation until his claim is satisfied. Central Stockyard & Transit Co. v. Mears, 85 N. Y. Supp. 795, 796, 89 App. Div. 452.

SAME CAUSE.

See "Neither Party, Etc."

SAME OFFENSE.

The term "same offense," as used in a statute providing for an increase in punishment where a defendant had previously been convicted of the same offense, means an offense of the same character, and not the same identical transaction. Kinney v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 225, 226.

SAN DOMINGO MAHOGANY.

The term "San Domingo mahogany," as used in a building contract requiring such mahogany to be used in a portion of the building, is to be interpreted in the trade sense, and not in the ordinary sense of the term; and the contract is complied with by the use of mahogany having the same color and texture as the genuine San Domingo mahogany, although grown elsewhere. Snoqualmi Realty Co. v. Moynihan, 78 S. W. 1014, 1018, 179 Mo. 629.

SANCTION.

"Every law must have its sanction; that is to say, its means of enforcement. Without such it can hardly be deemed a law. Sanctions are of two kinds—those which redress civil injuries, called 'civil sanctions,' and those which punish crimes, called 'penal sanctions.'" Commissioners' Court of Nolan County v. Beall (Tex.) 81 S. W. 526, 528 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

SAND.

As mineral, see "Mineral."

SANITY.

Sanity is not an ingredient of crime. It is a condition precedent to all intelligent action, as well benevolent as nefarious. It is a pre-existing fact, which may be taken for granted as implied by law and general experience. We do not infer sanity from the criminal act, as we do malice and premeditation. Sanity is a premise, not a conclusion. State v. Quigley (R. I.) 53 Atl. 905, 908.

SATISFACTION.

See "Accord and Satisfaction"; "Full Satisfaction"; "Reasonably Satisfies."

"Where a contractor agrees to furnish the material and to erect on the land of a municipal corporation a garbage furnace according to the plans and specifications, which are a part of the contract, and warrants its capacity to consume a named quantity of garbage, without emitting offensive odors, to be paid for when completed and tested according to the satisfaction of the committee of the town council, and the contractor performs the contract according to plans and specifications, and, the test being made, the furnace is shown to have the capacity warranted and in all things to comply with the contract, the committee cannot defeat the contractor's right of recovery by capriciously and unreasonably refusing its satisfaction with the work." A declaration in a suit for the contract price, which shows these facts and alleges that the committee, without just cause or reason and moved by caprice and prejudice, has refused to declare satisfaction with such tests, although the work and tests should have fully satisfied the committee and the defendant, and would have satisfied persons of ordinary care, caution, prudence, and fairness, is not subject to demurrer, as showing no cause of action, nor to special demurrer, because it has not alleged that the furnace was tested to the satisfaction of the committee. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. City of Greenville (U. S.) 127 Fed. 55, 62, 61 C. C. A. 591.

SATISFACTORY PRICE.

The words "satisfactory price," as used in a contract whereby defendant contracted to furnish logs to plaintiff's sawmill and sell the lumber, agreeing to log the mill to its capacity, limited only to the amount of lumber defendant should be able to sell at satisfactory prices, should receive a reasonable construction. A price should be construed satisfactory which would yield the defendant a reasonable profit over and above the gross cost of the lumber to it, plus the reasonable value of the timber and the cost of making sales of lumber. A fair construction of the contract would require the defendant to furnish timber from which could be manufactured salable lumber and to make reasonable efforts to put sound and salable lumber on the market; and if, by such effort, sales at reasonable profits could be made, to keep plaintiff's mill continuously running, defendant was obliged to furnish sufficient saw logs to keep it going. Rhodes v. Holladay-Klotz Land & Lumber Co., 79 S. W. 1145, 1154, 105 Mo. App. 279.

SCAFFOLD.

Perpendicular columns having been set up in the erection of a steel building, a beam was hung from one column to another, and lashed to them by ropes, for the purpose of holding the iron girders until the wall was erected between the beams, and also to furnish a place for the employes to walk in spacing the girders. Held, that such timber was a "scaffold," within Labor Law, Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415, § 18, providing that an employer shall not furnish or erect, or cause to be furnished or erected, for the performance of labor in the erection of a house, scaffolding which is unsafe or improper to give proper protection to the life and limbs of employes. Welk v. Jackson Architectural Ironworks, 90 N. Y. Supp. 541, 542.

SCANDAL.

"Scandal in a pleading consists of any unnecessary allegation bearing cruelly on the moral character of an individual, or stating anything contrary to good manners, or anything unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear." McNulty v. Wiesen (U. S.) 130 Fed. 1012, 1013.

SCHOOL.

A "school," in the ordinary acceptance of its meaning, is a place where instruction is imparted to the young. If a parent employs and brings into his residence a teacher for the purpose of instructing his child or children, and such instruction is given as the law contemplates, the meaning and spirit of the law have been fully complied with. This would be the school of a child or children so educated, and would be as much a private school as if advertised and conducted as such. A parent in good faith employed a teacher formerly employed in the public schools to teach his child. It was arranged that the child should be taught in all the branches taught in the public schools. The child attended the teacher's home regularly every school day, and received instruction equal to that which could have been received at the public schools. The teacher did not advertise herself as keeping a private school, and had no regular tuition fixed nor any school equipments, and made no arrangement to take other pupils. This was a school, within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6033a, providing that every parent shall be required to send his child to a public, private, or parochial school each year. State v. Peterman, 70 N. E. 550, 551, 32 Ind. App. 665.

SCHOOL DISTRICT.

As political subdivision, see "Political Subdivision."

A school district is composed of certain contiguous territory, governed by one school board, authorized to select one school site, secure one schoolhouse, and conduct one school, except where separate schools are required for colored pupils. Kellogg v. School Dist. No. 10 of Comanche County, 74 Pac. 110, 117, 13 Okl. 285.

SCHOOLHOUSE.

A high school is fairly included in the terms "for school purposes" and "schoolhouse or schoolhouses," in the statute declaring that the board shall decide that it is necessary to raise money for purchasing or taking and condemning lands for school purposes or for erecting a schoolhouse or schoolhouses. Carling v. Jersey City (N. J.) 58 Atl. 395, 397.

The scire facias is a common-law writ, and not a statutory remedy to obtain a personal judgment, and based upon the particular proceeding to which it is applicable. Kirk v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 331, 335.

SCULPTURE.

See "Casts of Sculpture."

SEABOARD.

SEAM.

In geology, a thin layer or stratum of rock is called a "seam." The same term is applied to coal. Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193.

SEARCH.

In Rev. St. 1892, § 1394, allowing the clerk certain compensation for making "searches" for unpaid taxes and tax certificates, the searches, for which the Legislature fixes the compensation at 15 cents each, mean the examination each year for the purpose of ascertaining if a tax sale was made that year, whether the search resulted in the finding of such sale or not. Edwards v. Law (Fla.) 38 South. 569, 570.

SEAWORTHY.

Seaworthiness is defined to be, "in maritime law, the sufficiency of the vessel in materials, construction, equipment, officers, men, and outfit for the trade or service in which it is employed." The test of seaworthiness is whether the vessel is reasonably fit to carry the cargo which she has undertaken to transport. The furnishing of a refrigerating apparatus in good order and repair, competent for the safe transportation of a cargo of dressed beef, which a vessel has undertaken to carry, is within the obligation to use due diligence to provide a seaworthy vessel, imposed upon the owner by the Harter act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 27 Stat. 445 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2946]), as a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the benefits of that act in limiting the owner's liability as therein provided. The Southwark, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, 3, 191 U. S. 1, 48 L. Ed. 65 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

Where a vessel was bored through her waterways, through the ends of the beams and at some point into the timbers from the mainmast to the foremast, and no sound wood was found, such a frame as exhibited by such borings cannot be regarded as "seaworthy." Morse v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 233, 235.

SECOND OFFENSE.

The words "second offense," as used in Rev. St. § 4364—20b, which declares that whoever shall sell liquors where sales are prohibited shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and which prescribes the punishment for the first offense and for a second offense, mean a second conviction. Hence an affidavit which charges three separate sales to different persons on the same day, but does not allege a previous conviction, is in legal effect a charge of a first offense only. Carey v. State, 70 N. E. 955, 70 Ohio St. 121.

SECURED.

"Secured" is not a word of description; it implies an act. A creditor who takes a note for his debt is never understood to be a preferred creditor. A bond which carries nothing more than a promise to pay is no more a security than a promissory note. When a bond or note is "secured," it must mean that there is something behind it not common to other creditors, or it means nothing. A recital in a corporate bond that it is secured by all the property and assets of the company imports that the bonds are secured by some particular lien. Stickel v. Atwood, 58 Atl. 687, 689, 25 R. I. 456.

SECURITY.

The term "securities" embraces promissory notes, not only in a popular sense, but in a legal sense as well. Wagner v. Scherer, 85 N. Y. Supp. 894, 895, 89 App. Div. 202.

The word "securities," as used in a will whereby the testator devised property to his executor in trust to collect the rents, issues, and profits of the same, giving full power to the executors to sell or dispose of any of the securities that the testator might hold at the time of his death, does not include land. Hence the power to sell securities did not authorize the executors to sell lands, and the executors' attempted conveyance thereof was consequently void. Pratt v. Worrell (N. J.) 57 Atl. 450, 453.

SEED.

See "Grass Seed."

SEEMING DANGER.

Appearances calculated to produce in a reasonable mind, and really producing, conviction of impending peril to life or limb, is what is meant by "seeming danger." Rogers v. State, 62 Ala. 170, 174.

SEISED.

An allegation that a person was "seised and possessed" of land, prima facie imports seisin in fact, not mere seisin in law. Bragg v. Wiseman (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 90, 91.

SEISIN.

In the common law "seisin" signifies possession. Bragg v. Wiseman (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 90, 91, (quoting Coke, Inst.).

SELECTION.

A mortgage of a specified number of cattle on a certain farm is good, to the number specified, against a purchaser from the mortgagor, although there are more cattle of the same description on the farm, which fact is not disclosed by the mortgage, since the mortgagee is permitted, by what is called the doctrine of selection or election, to select the specified number from the whole number. Sparks v. Deposit Bank (Ky.) 78 S. W. 171.

SELF-DEFENSE.

To maintain a plea of self-defense, there must be an actual physical attack or hostile demonstration of such a nature as to afford reasonable ground to believe that the design is to destroy life or inflict great bodily harm. State v. Halliday, 36 South. 753, 112 La. 846.

A person's right of self-defense does not depend on his belief, in the exercise of reasonable judgment, that it is necessary to use the force that he does. It is enough that it is in fact necessary, or that in the exercise of a reasonable judgment it appears to him to be necessary, though, as a matter of fact, it is not necessary. McKinney v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 263, 264.

SELF-DESTRUCTION.

The phrase "self-destruction or suicide," as used in a certificate of membership in a benefit association declaring that the contract for benefits does not include assurance against self-destruction or suicide, whether the member be sane or insane, does not prevent a recovery on the certificate where the member's death was due to his voluntary taking of carbolic acid, not with intent to cause death, but to frighten his wife into giving him money. Courtemanche v. Supreme Court I. O. F. (Mich.) 98 N. W. 749, 750, 64 L. R. A. 668.

SELL AND CONVEY.

The words "sell and convey," in a deed of real estate, mean, in the absence of appropriate expressions in the instrument itself limiting and restricting such general acceptance of the meaning of the words, a conveyance in fee. St. Louis Land & Building Ass'n v. Fueller, 81 S. W. 414, 417, 182 Mo. 93.

SEPARATE LABOR.

"Separate labor," as used in Rev. St 1899, § 4340, entitling a wife to the wages of her separate labor as her sole and separate property, is not the labor expended by her for the performance of her household duties, but labor entirely disconnected with those duties, and performed for the purpose of earning money wages. Kroner v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 80 S. W. 915, 916.

SEPARATE PROPERTY.

The term "separate property of a married woman," at the time of the adoption of Pub. Acts 1880, p. 525, c. 57, providing that the taxable estate of married women other than separate property shall be set in the lists of their husbands, had an established meaning, and was such estate only, whether real or personal, as was settled on her for her separate use, without any control over it on the part of her husband. Union School Dist. of Gullford v. Bishop, 58 Atl. 13, 14, 70 Conn. 695, 66 L. R. A. 989.

SEPARATE PUBLIC EMOLUMENTS.

Separate public emoluments or privileges which the Legislature is forbidden by the Constitution to bestow on any man or set of men, refer mainly to political privileges, and were intended to prevent any infringement of the great principle of equality of political rights. The section may likewise be extended to prohibit the granting of any privileges to any set of men, to which all others in the same circumstances would not be entitled. A statute giving the remedy of attachment to particular classes of creditors is not within the prohibition. Peck v. Critchlow, 8 Miss. (7 How.) 243, 247.

SERVANT.

See "Fellow Servant."

One employed by a refining company to sell and distribute oil to customers, being paid by a commission on the amount of sales, is an agent or servant of the company, which is liable for acts of negligence in the conduct of the business on the part of the agent or others employed by him. Riggs v. Standard Oil Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 199, 201.

SERVICE PIPE.

The term "service pipe" or wires, as used in Laws 1890, c. 566, p. 1148, § 65, providing that no corporation shall be compelled to lay service pipes or wires through frozen ground, or such as shall otherwise present serious obstacles to laying the same, means the connection from the street main or wire to the house, and usually the expense of laying that is borne by both the company and the owner in proportions agreed upon by them. Moore v. Champlain Electric Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 37, 39, 88 App. Div. 289.

SERVITUDE.

See "Additional Servitude"; "Personal Servitude."
Easement distinguished, see "Easement."

SESSION.

See "Last Session."

"The term 'session,' when applied to courts, means the whole term. In legal construction, the whole term is construed as but one day, and that day is always referred to the first day or commencement of the term." Cresap v. Cresap, 46 S. E. 582, 583, 54 W. Va. 581 (quoting Dew v. Judges [Va.] 3 Hen. & M. 27, 3 Am. Dec. 639).

The word "session" does not have a single, fixed, and definite meaning, but is variously used in statutes and constitutions. In Rev. St. § 1038 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 723], providing that any District Court may, by order entered on its minutes, remit any indictment pending thereon "to the next session of the Circuit Court for the same district," and thereon the proceedings in such case shall be the same in the Circuit Court as if such indictment had been originally found and presented therein, the word "session" is used as meaning an actual sitting of the court for transaction of business, and not in the sense of "term," and the Circuit Court has jurisdiction to proceed with a case so remitted at the then current term. United States v. Dietrich (U. S.) 126 Fed. 659, 360.

SET-OFF.

Set-offs must be mutual demands, and one partner cannot make use of a partnership demand as a set-off against a demand against himself individually. Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Hollenbeck (Ark.) 80 S. W. 145, 146.

A set-off obtains between persons occupying the relation of debtor and creditor and between whom there exist mutual demands. Mutuality is essential to the validity of a set-off, and, in order that one demand may be set off against another, both must mutually exist between the same parties. Accordingly, it is settled that a bank can claim no lien upon the deposit of one partner, made on his separate account, in order to apply it on a debt due from the firm; nor can the joint and several note of three persons be paid out of the individual deposit of one, unless he be the principal and the others sureties, or unless it becomes necessary in order to do complete equity or avoid irremediable injustice. O'Grady v. Stotts City Bank (Mo.) 80 S. W. 696, 697.

"The right of set-off does not attach to the debt itself, nor depend upon the mutuality of the debts in their origin as an inherent quality belonging to such debts, but upon the situation and rights of the parties between whom it is sought to be enforced. It is a privilege attaching to the remedy only." Wabash R. Co. v. Bowering, 77 S. W. 106, 108, 103 Mo. App. 158 (citing Greene v. Darling [U. S.] 10 Fed. Cas. 1144; Waterman, Set-Off, § 17). "The right of set-off is not an equity which the original debtor may, at all events, assert against the assignor or assignee of the debt, whether he has or has not notice of its existence. There is no such equity to have debts set off against each other which attaches to the debts themselves and travels with them into whatsoever hands they may come, though it is doubtless true that where there are mutual subsisting debts, and either an express or implied agreement of stoppage pro tanto or mutual credit, the court of equity will enforce it against his assignee with notice." Wolcott v. Sullivan [N. Y.] 1 Edw. Ch. 399. A plaintiff's right to have his judgment against defendant set off against defendant's judgment against plaintiff is not affected by defendant's equitable assignment of half of his judgment, plaintiff not assenting thereto, or by the assignment of all of it, the assignee taking with knowledge of plaintiff's prior judgment. Wabash R. Co. v. Bowering, 77 S. W. 106, 108, 103 Mo. App. 158.

In an action in the nature of express assumpsit, the claim of the holder of the legal title of land against the holder of the equitable title for taxes paid, being purely a statutory claim, is not a proper subject of set-off, under a statute defining a "set-off" as a cause of action arising upon a contract, judgment, or award in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff. Montgomery v. Montgomery (Ky.) 78 S. W. 465.

A set-off may be pleaded in an action founded on a contract, and must be, as declared by Code Civ. Proc. § 104, a cause of action arising upon contract, or ascertained by the decision of the court. In an action to recover a sum subscribed by defendant to aid plaintiff in holding a street fair in a city, defendant answered, and alleged that he paid to plaintiff a certain sum for the privilege of operating his usual place of business in the city, and for the purpose of feet frontage, which plaintiff unlawfully forced him to pay under threats of prosecution; that, when defendant paid said amount to plaintiff, plaintiff expressly agreed that no further saloons or other places for the sale of intoxicating liquors, other than those established, would be allowed to do business in such neighborhood; that the midway of said street fair was situated near the place of business of defendant, which fact was held out as an inducement for him to pay said amount to the plaintiff, as plaintiff then told him no intoxicating liquors would be sold therein; that plaintiff breached his agreement, thereby damaging defendant in a specified sum, for which amount he asked judgment. The contract or transaction set forth in the answer was wholly different from that set forth in the petition, and was in no way connected therewith, but the cause of action which defendant pleaded was one arising upon contract, and, though for unliquidated damages, was a proper subject of set-off. Mullins v. South Omaha Street Fair Ass'n (Neb.) 99 N. W. 521, 522.

SETTLED.

The marking of a cause "settled" is equivalent to a discontinuance of the action. Pomeranz v. Marcus, 87 N. Y. Supp. 941, 93 App. Div. 552.

SETTLEMENT.

The varied meaning of the word "settlement" has doubtless created some confusion in the minds of many in construing the word as employed in a statute regulating and fixing fees of county clerks for making settlement of each account with the county. Among other meanings, the word "settlement" means an adjustment of accounts, and also the payment of a debt. As here used, it means an adjustment of accounts, the meaning of which presupposes some work or labor of the clerk made a duty by law for him to perform. Greene County v. Light (Ark.) 77 S. W. 915, 916.

SEVERABLE CONTRACT.

See "Entire Contract."

SHALL

The word "shall" should be construed to mean "may" in Comp. Laws, § 479, as amended by St. 1895, p. 35, c. 37, providing that the commissioners, on the presentation of a petition for the vacation of a public road, shall within 30 days thereafter vacate the road. State ex rel. Dangberg v. Douglas County Com'rs (Nev.) 77 Pac. 984, 986.

SHALL BE CONTRACTED.

The words "shall be contracted," in the charter of Sacramento, providing that no debt shall be contracted or created against the city, do not have any greater prohibitive force than the words "create, audit, allow, or permit to accrue," as used in the Fresno city charter, or the words "incur indebtedness," as used in the Constitution. Doland v. Clark, 76 Pac. 958, 961, 143 Cal. 176.

SHALL BE LAWFUL.

The words "it shall be lawful" import a discretion. It is only where the subject-matter imperatively requires it that they can receive a different construction. People v. City of Syracuse, 12 N. Y. Supp. 890, 894, 59 Hun, 258 (citing Reg. v. Bishop of Oxford, 4 Q. B. Div. 245).

SHARE OF STOCK.

As personal property, see "Personal Property."

SHERIFF.

The words "the sheriff," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1362, directing that execution must be directed to the sheriff, means the sheriff of the county to which the execution is issued. Fisher v. Young, 85 N. Y. Supp. 115, 117, 41 Misc. Rep. 552.

SHIPSIDE.

A railroad company issued to plaintiff a bill of lading for shipment of cotton to plaintiff at a certain point "shipside." The ordinary signification of the word "shipside" in such a contract is a direction to deliver the cotton at some wharf accessible to the railroad's track. R. A. Lee & Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. (N. O.) 48 S. E. 809, 810.

SHOOTING WITH INTENT TO KILL.

"Maiming is not a necessary element of the crime of shooting with intent to kill. In stating the facts constituting the last-mentioned crime, it is in no case necessary to show maiming. Maiming may, and often does, result from shooting, but it is a distinct offense, under no circumstances forming part of the consummated crime of shooting with intent to kill." State v. Mattison (N. D.) 100 N. W. 1091, 1093.

SHOULD.

The words "there should be," as used in a rule providing that there should be at least one telegraph office between those at which opposing trains received meeting orders, do not mean that "there must be." It is a reasonable inference from the adoption of the phrase "there should be" that while, under ordinary circumstances, there should be an intervening office, yet the circumstances may be such at times as to justify the sending of a meeting order to stations between which there is no telegraph office. Wallace v. Boston & M. R. R., 57 Atl. 913, 917, 72 N. H. 504.

SHOW.

The language of the rule that an applicant for the issuance of a subpoena for production of books and papers must "show" that they are material implies something more than the mere allegation of affiant's belief that the books contain material entries, as facts must be shown on which the court can see, at least presumptively, that the books and papers contain material entries. In re Lee, 85 N. Y. Supp. 224, 227, 41 Misc. Rep. 642.

SHOWN.

See "Good Cause Shown."

SIDEWALK.

While the word "sidewalk" is often used in a context which imports a paved way, a footway does not necessarily have to be entirely improved to be a sidewalk, which is the space left on the side of a street, and usually along its borders and inside of the curbing, for foot passengers. Asphalt & Granitoid Const. Co. v. Haeussler (Mo.) 80 S. W. 5, 7 (citing Knapp, Stout & Co. v. St. Louis Transfer Ry. Co., 126 Mo. 26, 28 S. W. 627; Challiss v. Parker, 11 Kan. 384).

SIGN.

See "About to Sign."

Execution distinguished from signing, see "Execution."

SIGN OFF.

T. & T. agree to pay all the indebtedness of T. & R. when R. "signs off" all his rights and title, and all property that has been made in said business lands, etc. The condition to "sign off" would, as to all tangible personal property and negotiable paper payable to bearer, be satisfied by a delivery of the same to T. & T. so as to place the same in their full possession and control, and an acceptance of the same, unless written evidence of the transfer was specially requested; but, if demanded, T. & T. had a right to written evidence of the transfer. As to contracts, accounts, choses in action, etc., there must be a written assignment and a delivery. As to lands, there must be a deed of conveyance properly executed, acknowledged, and delivered. Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172, 186.

SILK TRIMMINGS.

Silk ribbons, of which some were, and others were not, in the nature of trimmings, but which, however used for trimmings, are required to be further fashioned for such use, and which are not in fact or commercially within the class of goods known as "trimmings," are not dutiable as "silk trimmings," under paragraph 390, Tariff Act 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, 30 Stat. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1670], but as manufactures of silk not specially provided for, under paragraph 391 of said act (30 Stat. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1670]). Gartner & Friedenheim v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 574, 575.

SIMULATION.

Where a petition shows that a judgment debtor bought immovable property through an interposed person, in whose name title was taken in order to screen and cover it from the pursuit of his creditors, and that the vendor of the property was not a party to the scheme to defraud, and sold in good faith, believing the interposed person the real purchaser, the sale itself not being attacked, and the only object of the suit to have it decreed that the judgment debtor is the true owner, and not the interposed person, the action is one in declaration of simulation, not to annul the sale, but to expose the real vendee. Hoffmann v. Ackermann, 35 South. 293, 294, 110 La. 1070.

SINGLE TRANSACTION.

See "Jeopardy."

SITTING.

The word "sitting," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 38, § 132, which provides that any person who shall at any time or "sitting," by playing at cards lose to any person so playing any money amounting to $10, and shall pay the same, may sue and recover the money by action in assumpsit, is construed to include "all that transpires in playing the game of draw poker from the time certain players begin playing together on any one occasion until they cease playing together on that occasion, no matter how many hands are played." Zellers v. White, 70 N. E. 689, 208 Ill. 518, 100 Am. St. Rep. 243.

SITUATED.

A domestic life insurance corporation is "situated," within Code Civ. Proc. § 55, authorizing such a corporation to be sued in the county in which it is situated, in any county in which it maintains an agent or servant engaged in transacting the business for which it exists. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 73 N. W. 269, 270, 53 Neb. 44; Id., 75 N. W. 585, 586, 55 Neb. 117. See, also, Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n v. Taylor, 87 N. W. 950, 62 Neb. 783.

The word "situated," in Laws 1851, c. 95, § 9, providing that penalties imposed on an insurance company for doing business in the state without a certificate may be recovered by the district attorney of the county in which the company or agent is situated, refers to the place where the agent is when he does the business or act complained of—the place which he makes his office for that business. People v. Imlay (N. Y.) 20 Barb. 68, 78.

SITUS.

The situs of personal property of every description is the domicile of the owner. Commonwealth v. Union Refrigerator Transit Co. (Ky.) 80 S. W. 490, 491.

SIX SUCCESSIVE WEEKS.

See "Successive Weeks."

SKILL.

See "Utmost Care and Skill."

SKINNED.

See "Fish Skinned or Boned."

SLANDER PER SE.

Words, to be a slander per se, must charge a criminal offense, or, falling of that, must be spoken of a person in reference to his business, and be of such character that they must necessarily injure him in his business, as that a tailor was a botch, or his clothes were misfit, or that he was insolvent, and the like. Hume v. Kusche, 87 N. Y. Supp. 109, 42 Misc. Rep. 414.

SLAVEHOLDER.

A person whose only interest in slaves consists of an undistributed share of an estate composed of slaves is not a slaveholder within the terms of a statute requiring a certain proportion of the jurors to be slaveholders in certain cases. Spence v. State, 17 Ala. 192, 193.

SMELTER RETURNS.

The phrase "smelter returns," in a deed reciting that certain royalties on smelter returns of all ores removed should be paid to the owners, means returns from the ore, less the smelting charges, without deducting the charges for hauling, freight, and switching. Frank v. Bauer (Colo.) 75 Pac. 930, 932.

SMOKERS' ARTICLES.

Articles used chiefly for the convenience of smokers, consisting of tables on the top of which are affixed smokers' accessories, and of an ornamental miniature automobile for the use of smokers, are dutiable as "smokers' articles" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 459, 30 Stat. 194 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1678], and not as "house or cabinet furniture of wood," under paragraph 208, Schedule D, of said act, 30 Stat. 168 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1647]. A. Steinhardt & Bro. v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 443, 444.

SNATCH BLOCK.

A "snatch block" was described as a heavy block of wood attached to an upright or stanchion by a line used to draw the grain into the leg extending from the hold of the boat to the elevator, and up which the grain was drawn. Connors v. Great Northern Elevator Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 644, 645, 90 App. Div. 811.

SOCIETY.

See "Benevolent Society."

SOLD.

The word "sold" imports not a mere proposition to sell, but a consummated contract of sale. Where a contract recited, "We have sold to a certain person certain land," describing it, the vendors by such words declared and acknowledged that they had sold the premises, and such declaration or acknowledgment was binding on them. Forthman v. Deters, 69 N. E. 97, 100, 206 Ill. 159, 99 Am. St. Rep. 145.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

As asylum, see "Asylum."

SOLE AND UNCONDITIONAL OWNERSHIP.

A clause in a policy making it void if the insured is not the "sole and unconditional owner" relates to ownership when the policy was issued. A vendor in a written land contract who has admitted the vendee into possession and received from him large payments on the purchase money is not a sole and unconditional owner, although he retains the legal title. Rosenstock v. Mississippi Home Ins. Co., 35 South. 809, 813, 82 Miss. 674.

The insured was the unconditional and sole owner in fee simple within a policy containing a stipulation that it was to be void if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership, where the interest of the insured was a life estate in property or its proceeds, united with the absolute right as a testamentary trustee to dispose of the same as she saw fit for the purposes of the trust. Security Ins. Co. v. Kuhn, 69 N. E. 822, 823, 207 Ill. 160.

SOLE LEGATEE.

"A 'sole legatee' takes all that remains after satisfying all charges, losses, and expenses." In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

SOLICIT.

An act prohibiting any person or corporation from soliciting orders for the sale of intoxicating liquors in any place in the state where the sale of such liquors is forbidden by law is not violated by a showing that orders have been taken in such a place. "Taking" and "soliciting" do not mean the same thing, and are not convertible terms. Sanderfur-Julian Co. v. State (Ark.) 77 S. W. 596.

SOLVENCY.

There is a marked distinction between the solvency of an individual and his ability to make a purchase. "Solvency" means his ability to discharge his legal obligations, while his "ability to purchase property" means, as the authorities say, that he is "ready" to do so, which, according to Webster, is "equipped or supplied with what is needed for some act or event." Colburn v. Seymour (Colo.) 76 Pac. 1058, 1060.

SOLVENT DEBTOR.

Where a person, although indebted to others, has business or income and pays his debts, or has property out of which collection can be made, then he may fairly be regarded as a "solvent debtor," within Rev. St. 1898, § 1036, making debts due from solvent debtors subject to taxation. Kingsley v. City of Merrill (Wis.) 99 N. W. 1044, 1046.

SOUND HEALTH.

"Sound health means a state of health free from disease or ailment that affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously." Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Douglas, 46 S. E. 867, 868, 119 Ga. 658.

SOUND MIND AND MEMORY.

See "Unsound Mind."

"Sound mind and memory" is equivalent to sanity, and one who is rational and acting rationally is, in the common understanding, sane and sound of mind. In re Arrow-smith's Estate, 69 N. E. 77, 79, 206 Ill. 352 (citing Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 33; Campbell v. Campbell, 180 Ill. 466, 22 N. E. 620, 6 L. R. A. 167).

SPECIAL DAMAGES.

"Special damages," in reference to publication of libelous matter, was such damages as were computable in money, and may be said to be fairly embraced in the list of actual damages as given in Gen. St. 1901, c. 57b, § 2, providing that the words "actual damages" shall be construed to include all damages which the plaintiff shall show he has suffered in respect to his property, business, trade, profession, or occupation. Hanson v. Krehbiel (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1041, 1042, 64 L. R. A. 790.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT.

A special deposit is a bailment, and implies the setting apart of the specific money or chattel deposited by its return on demand. Schofield Mfg. Co. v. Cochran (Ga.) 47 S. E. 208, 209, 119 Ga. 901 (citing Morse, Banks, §§ 191, 193).

SPECIAL LAW.

General law distinguished, see "General Law."

A law is special, in a constitutional sense, when by force of an inherent limitation it arbitrarily separates some persons, places, or things from those upon which, but for such separation, it would operate. Van Cleve v. Passaic Valley Sewerage Com'rs (N. J.) 58 Atl. 571, 572.

SPECIAL PROCEEDING.

An appeal from a city auditing board to the county board of supervisors by a constable for the adjustment of his claim for services is a special proceeding. Perry v. Myer, 89 N. Y. Supp. 347, 348.

A proceeding instituted by the freeholders of a town for an investigation into its financial affairs, under General Municipal Law, § 3, Laws 1892, p. 1733, c. 683, is a special proceeding. In re Town of Hadley, 89 N. Y. Supp. 910, 911, 44 Misc. Rep. 265.

An order of the superior court pending an appeal from a justice, there triable de novo, vacating the justice's judgment, is not an order preventing a judgment in the action from which appeal might be taken, or one after judgment; but though entitled, like the papers on which the motion was founded, in the action, is one in a "special proceeding," within Rev. St. 1898, § 8069, enumerating appealable orders. Deuster v. Zillmer, 97 N. W. 31, 33, 119 Wis. 402.

The application for a writ of mandate is a special proceeding of a civil nature. Jones v. Board of Police Com'rs, 74 Pac. 696, 697, 141 Cal. 96.

SPECIALTY.

Bills and notes are not simple contracts, but specialties, and one of the characteristics of a specialty is that none but the parties thereto can be parties to an action thereon. In re L. B. Weisenberg & Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 517, 522.

SPECIFIC DEVISE.

At common law all devises of real estate are specific. Every devise of land is specific. Every legacy of personal estate is not, because personal estate fluctuates and varies. Land does not, for no more passes by a will than the testator had at the time of making his will. Forrester v. Lord Leigh, 1 Amb. 173; Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. Wms. 679; Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth, 7 Ves. Jr. 147; Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. Jr. 305; Redf. Wills, pt. 2, 471; Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 Mylne & C. 695; Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 424. In this country no devise of real estate will be regarded as specific unless it contains a description of the estate sufficient to enable the devisee to indemnify the same. In re Woodworth's Estate, 31 Cal. 595, 610, 614 (citing Redf. Wills, pt. 2, 870).

SPECIFIC LEGACY.

A specific legacy is a bequest of a specified part of a testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind. In re Fisher, 87 N. Y. Supp. 567, 568, 93 App. Div. 186 (citing Crawford v. McCarthy, 159 N. Y. 514, 54 N. E. 277).

"A specific legacy or devise is a gift by will of a specific article or part of the testator's estate, which is identified and distinguished from all other parts of the same kind, and which may be satisfied only by the delivery of the particular thing." A testator bequeathed 60 shares of stock in a certain bank, which was all the stock he owned in that corporation. The legacy was specific. Waters v. Hatch, 79 S. W. 916, 922, 181 Mo. 262.

Where a legacy of bonds or securities is intended to be a gift of the bonds and securities specified, and such bonds and securities are the only source for the payment of the legacy, the legacy is a specific legacy of the bonds or securities, and not of the money in them or secured by them, and, if the specific security is disposed of or extinguished, the rule of ademption applies, and the legacy is gone. Blair v. Scribner, 57 Atl. 318, 326, 65 N. J. Eq. 498.

SPECIFIC LEGATEE.

"A 'specific legatee' is one who has a bequest of a particular thing, distinguished from all others of the same kind." In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

SPECIFICATIONS.

Plans distinguished, see "Plans."

SPEEDY TRIAL.

A "speedy trial" means a trial regulated and conducted by fixed rules of law, and any delay created by the operation of those rules does not work prejudice to any constitutional right of the defendant. Sample v. State, 86 South. 367, 368, 138 Ala. 259.

SPIRITS.

Cordials are "spirits manufactured or distilled from grain or other materials," as that phrase is used in section 3, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 203 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1690], and, when imported from France, are subject to the reduced rate of duty provided for such spirits in the reciprocal commercial agreement with that country (30 Stat. 1774) negotiated under the authority of said section. United States v. Julius Wille Bro. & Co. (U. S.) 180 Fed. 331.

SPLITTER.

A "splitter" in a packing plant is a person who splits recently slaughtered hogs with a cleaver. Rendlich v. Hammond Packing Co., 80 S. W. 683, 106 Mo. App. 717.

SPORT.

See "Public Sport."

SPOUSE.

See "Former Spouse."

SPREADER.

A "spreader," used in connection with a rip saw, is a piece of iron or steel slightly thicker than and set about two inches behind the saw it is to be used with, so as to spread the seam in the wood, and thereby hinder the clamping of the saw. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works (Mo.) 80 S. W. 292, 294.

STAGNUM.

The word "stagnum" comprehends both land and water. Conover v. Atlantic City Sewerage Co. (N. J.) 57 Atl. 897, 898.

STATE.

As citizen, see "Citizen."

The word "state" in Const. U. S. Amend. 14, providing that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, includes its officers, its courts, and other governmental agencies. All of them are included in the prohibitions. Ex parte Powers (U. S.) 129 Fed. 985, 988.

STATE INSTITUTION.

Under the Military Code, a national guard armory is a "state institution," within Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 462, c. 415) § 3, declaring that the provision that eight hours shall constitute a day's work does not apply to employes of state institutions. Burns v. Fox, 90 N. Y. Supp. 254, 255.

STATE OFFICER.

The chief of police of a city of the first class is not a "state officer" within the meaning of Const. art. 19, § 6, providing that no person shall hold or perform the duties of more than one office in the same department of the government at the same time, which provision refers to state offices only. Peterson v. Culpepper (Ark.) 79 S. W. 783, 785.

STATE PRISON.

A sentence to imprisonment in the state reformatory is not a sentence to a term of imprisonment in the state prison, within Gen. St. 1894, § 4790, providing that a divorce may be decreed when either party, subsequent to the marriage, has been sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. Dion v. Dion (Minn.) 100 N. W. 4, 5.

STATUTORY RECEIVER.

The man who is appointed receiver upon the return day of the order to show cause, or upon the appearance of the corporation upon the filing of the bill, is the "statutory receiver." He is appointed after the summary final hearing prescribed by the statute has been held. Gallagher v. Asphalt Co. of America (N. J.) 58 Atl. 403, 408.

STEADYING BOARD.

The office of a "steading board" in a packing plant is to hold the hog in position while the splitter cleaves it in two. Rendlich v. Hammond Packing Co., 80 S. W. 683, 106 Mo. App. 717.

STEAL.

Webster defines "steal" as "to take and carry away feloniously; to take without right or leave, and with intent to keep wrongfully; as to steal the personal goods of another." Baldwin v. State (Fla.) 35 South. 220, 221.

The word "steal," as used in an indictment for abstracting mail matter from the mails, in violation of Rev. St. § 5469 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3692], alleging that defendant did "steal" and take from out of the mail the package described, is not used to designate technical larceny, but means simply to take without right or leave, and the use of that word sufficiently charges wrongful intent. United States v. Trosper (U. S.) 127 Fed. 476, 477.

STEAM FARM ENGINE.

A "steam farm engine" consists of a horizontal boiler with a drop-fire box, and a horizontal engine attached to the top of the boiler, mounted on four wheels for convenience of transportation, and having the smokestack hinged so that it can be lowered when the machine is being moved. Wilson v. Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co. (Vt.) 58 Atl. 799, 800.

STOCK.

See "Capital Stock."

As chose in action, see "Chose in Action."

The "stock" of corporations is "the capital of corporations." The word "stock," as used in Laws Ga. 1833, p. 264, relating to the charter of the Georgia Railroad Company, and providing that the stock of the company and its branches shall be exempt from taxation for and during the term of seven years, and after that shall be subject to a tax not exceeding one-half per cent. per annum on the net proceeds of their investments, means the capital of the corporation, and not the shares of stock in the hands of the individual owners, and the provision establishes the limit of taxation of the corporation upon its capital stock. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright (U. S.) 132 Fed. 912, 914 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

STOCKHOLDER.

The holder of a contract purporting to be for the purchase and sale of a diamond issued by what is commonly called a "tontine company" is not a "stockholder" in such company, and cannot secure the appointment of a receiver for such company because of the mismanagement of its affairs by its officers. Mann v. German-American Inv. Co. (Neb.) 97 N. W. 600.

STORE.

While a storehouse may under some circumstances come within the meaning of the word "store" as used in Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 14, providing that all personal property employed in trade, etc., shall be taxed in the town where so employed on the 1st day of April of each year, provided that the owner so employing it occupies any store, shop, mill, etc., for the purpose of such employment, the word "storehouse" does not come within the meaning of the word "store," where a finished manufactured product is placed in a storehouse for the purpose of storage, and not for the purpose of trade. Inhabitants of New Limerick v. Watson, 57 Atl. 79, 81, 98 Me. 379.

STOREHOUSE.

As store, see "Store."

A storehouse "is a building for keeping goods of any kind, especially provisions; a magazine; * * * a warehouse." The word "storehouse," as used in Comp. St. 1899, c. 77, art. 1. § 39, relating to railway taxation, and providing that all machine and repair shops, general office buildings, storehouses, and also all real and personal property outside of the right of way and depot grounds, shall be listed for purposes of taxation by the officers of the companies with the precinct assessors where the property may be situated, includes an elevator. Adams County v. Kansas City & O. Ry. Co. (Neb.) 99 N. W. 245, 247 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

STRANGER.

In a complaint against the collector of internal revenue, to recover the amount of taxes exacted by him from plaintiffs, who are shipping agents, as due under the revenue act on copies of charter parties in their possession, and alleged by them to have been obtained for the information of themselves and their customers, an allegation that plaintiffs, such firm, were "strangers to said charter parties and the matter to which the same related," is not sufficient to show that plaintiffs were not the agents or representatives of one or the other of the parties to such instruments, and properly chargeable with the tax; the word "strangers" meaning that plaintiffs were not parties to the charter parties. Simpson v. Treat (U. S.) 126 Fed. 1003, 1006.

STREAM.

The word "stream," as used in Comp. St. 1901, c. 78, § 87, declaring that bridges over streams which divide counties, and bridges over streams on roads on county lines, shall be built at the equal expense of such counties, is used in a general sense, and includes rivers and smaller courses of water. In this statute the Legislature used the word in the sense of a course of running water, a river, rivulet, or brook. Dodge County v. Saunders County (Neb.) 100 N. W. 934, 935.

STREET.

The word "street," as used in Code, §§ 917, 919, relating to the platting of land, and declaring that when a plat has been acknowledged and recorded the acknowledgment and recording shall be equivalent to a deed in fee simple of such portion of the premises platted as is set apart for streets and other public purposes, is used to designate the spaces left between the lots for public travel. The title thereto does not vest in the city or town prior to its acceptance, and until then it is not deemed a road or public thoroughfare. Chrisman v. Omaha & C. B. R. & Bridge Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 63, 65.

The word "street," as used in a city charter providing that the assessment districts for street improvements should be established by drawing a line midway between the street to be improved and the next parallel or converging street on each side thereof, means a public street, and does not include a private way, which had remained open and unobstructed for more than 10 years, during which time it had been used as a street by the public, when the title to it was vested in trustees for the exclusive use of certain property owners, and expressly reserved by an indorsement in a plat for the exclusive use of the property owners. Collier's Estate v. Western Paving & Supply Co., 79 S. W. 947, 954, 180 Mo. 362.

An alley is not necessarily a street, and the public have not necessarily a right to its use. Milliken v. Denny, 47 S. E. 132, 133, 135 N. C. 19.

The word "street" has been defined as "a public way or road, whether paved or unpaved, in a village, town, or city, ordinarily including a sidewalk or sidewalks, and a roadway having a house or town lots on one or both sides; a main way in distinction from a lane or alley." Cent. Dict. A paved alley 16 feet wide, passing through the middle of a block, is not a "street," within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7283d, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors by virtue of a license in any room unless it is arranged either with window or glass door, or so that the whole of it may be in view of the street. State v. Harrison, 70 N. E. 877, 162 Ind. 542.

"Rural highways may * * * be appropriately and conveniently denominated 'roads,' and the public ways of a town or city may properly and conveniently be called 'streets.'" Pub. Laws 1903 p. 621, c. 375, authorizing the commissioners of Haywood county, under specified conditions, to sell bonds of Waynesville township for improving the roads of that township, does not by construction repeal Priv. Laws 1885, c. 127, § 16 (Waynesville Town Charter), or confer on such commissioners power to change or control the streets of the town of Waynesville. Town of Waynesville v. Satterthwait (N. C.) 48 S. E. 661, 664 (quoting Elliott on Streets, § 7).

STREET CAR.

Ordinances making it unlawful to operate or run any "street car" unprovided with a car fender of the most improved design and construction, and providing that no "electric car" shall be propelled or operated without having one conductor and one motorman thereon, require a fender, conductor, and motorman only on motor cars, and not on trailers. Von Diest v. San Antonio Traction Co. (Tex.) 77 S. W. 632, 633.

STREET RAILROAD.

As common carrier, see "Common Carrier."

As railroad, see "Railroad."

STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

As railroad corporation, see "Railroad Corporation."

STREET WORK.

"Street work" is a phrase of common usage, and has a well-defined signification. The words mean exactly what they indicate upon their face, namely, work upon a street—work in repairing or making a street. Town of Mill Valley v. House, 76 Pac. 658, 659, 142 Cal. 698.

STRICTLY CONSTRUED.

The rule that a criminal provision must be strictly construed means only that the court must not bring cases within the provision of such a statute that are not clearly embraced by it, nor by narrow, technical, or forced construction of words exclude cases from it that are obviously within its provisions. What must be sought for always is the intention of the Legislature, and the duty of the court is to give effect to that intention as disclosed by the words used. Guided by such a rule of construction, a combination by stockholders in two competing interstate railway companies, to form a stockholding corporation which should acquire a controlling interest in the capital stock of each of such railway companies, violates the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 465, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679.

STRUCTURE.

See "New Structure."

Any other structure, see "Any Other."

Other structure, see "Other."

A "structure" is defined to be "a building of any kind, but chiefly a building of some size and magnificence; an edifice." While the word "structure" may cover a great variety of form and construction, yet when used in connection with the words "house" and "building," it is evidently intended to simply describe a variety of building. The word "structure," as used in Labor Law, Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415, § 18, which provides that a person employing another to perform labor of any kind in the erection or alteration of a house, building, or structure shall not furnish for the performance of such labor any scaffolding which is unsafe or improper, does not include a boiler which is portable and may be readily moved from place to place, such a boiler rather being an appliance in the business for which it is used. Conley v. Lackawanna Iron & Steel Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 123, 125, 94 App. Div. 149.

STUMPS.

See "Drawing the Stumps."

SUBCONTRACTOR.

A "subcontract" is defined to be "a contract by one who has contracted for the performance of labor or service with a third party for the whole or part performance of that labor or service." The term "subcontractor," therefore, is not inappropriate to designate one who has contracted with the principal contractor to perform the whole as well as a part of the service which the latter has undertaken to perform. Smith v. Wilcox, 74 Pac. 708, 709, 44 Or. 323; Same v. Turple, Id. (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

SUBDIVISION.

See "Political Subdivision."

The word "subdivision," as used in the amendment adopted in 1891 to Const. 1876, art. 16, § 20, providing that the Legislature shall enact a law whereby the voters of "any county, justice precinct, town or city by a majority vote from time to time may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits," by inserting after the word "city" the parenthetical clause "or such subdivision of a county as may be designated by the commissioners' court," does not refer to the county, justice precinct, city, or town. The amendment simply contemplated authority to hold local option elections in subdivisions not previously mentioned, and it was not intended, by using the word "subdivision," to give a different meaning or standing to those already enumerated, or in any manner to qualify them. The commissioners' court has no authority to combine subdivisions of a county for the purpose of a local option election. Ex parte Mills (Tex.) 79 S. W. 555, 556.

SUBJECT.

The word "subject" is broader than the word "object," and one subject may contain many objects. Ex parte Herman (Tex.) 77 S. W. 225, 226.

SUBJECT OF ACTION.

The words "subject of action," in Code Civ. Proc. § 691, relating to counterclaims connected with the subject, should be construed, not as relating to the thing itself about which the controversy has arisen, but as referring rather to the origin and grounds of the plaintiff's right to recover or obtain the relief asked. Potter v. Lohse (Mont.) 77 Pac. 419, 420 (citing Collier v. Ervin, 8 Mont. 142).

"The subject of an action is the thing; the wrongful act for which damages are sought; the contract which is broken; the act which is sought to be restrained; the property of which recovery is asked." Lasiter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. (N. C.) 48 S. E. 642, 643.

The phrase "subject of the action" is different from "cause of action," and signifies the ultimate or primary title, right, or interest which a plaintiff seeks to enforce or protect; not merely the wrong to be redressed in the particular case. This is the meaning of the words "subject of action," as used in the statute relating to counterclaims, and declaring that counterclaims are claims connected with the subject of the action. In replevin for chattels mortgaged to secure payment for a binder which plaintiff sold defendant, but afterwards took from him with his consent, the subject of the action is neither the chattels mentioned in the complaint nor their unlawful detention by defendant, but plaintiff's claim against the defendant on the notes and chattel mortgage. Plaintiff's right to the property depends entirely on whether the notes have been paid and the lien of the mortgage thereby destroyed. The indebtedness was therefore the subject of the action, and its existence the fact in dispute. Therefore a counterclaim on a money demand may be set up for affirmative relief as well as to defeat the plaintiff's claim, and a counterclaim alleging that plaintiff's claim to the chattels arose from a chattel mortgage given to secure payment for the binder, and that he had already been overpaid, and demanding judgment for the amount overpaid, was proper, being connected with the subject of the action. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hill, 79 S. W. 745, 750, 104 Mo. App. 544.

SUBJECT TO.

The phrase "subject to legal investigation," in a sale of real estate at auction subject to legal investigation, means that the purchaser would buy with the privilege reserved on his part to decline the bargain if he discovered on examination of the abstract that the title of the vendor of the property was defective. Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 76, 81.

Where the present landlords and their predecessors in title accepted deeds "subject to existing tenancies," and found tenants in actual possession, they must be presumed to have ascertained and know the nature, extent, and terms of these tenancies, and of the leases under which they were held; for the fact of an existing tenancy necessarily presupposes a lease of some kind. Anderson v. Conner, 87 N. Y. Supp. 449, 451, 43 Misc. Rep. 884.

SUBLETTING.

The employment by a farm tenant of a third person to work thereon, to whom is given possession of a house on the premises, does not constitute a subletting of any part of the premises, within the provision of the lease prohibiting a subletting without the written consent of the landlord. Vincent v. Crane (Mich.) 97 N. W. 34, 35.

SUBROGATION.

"Subrogation is a remedy made use of by courts of equity as an efficient aid to justice, and, in the main, does not depend on a contractual obligation, though a man may acquire the right to a conventional subrogation by contract. This happens when one liquidates a demand secured by lien or guaranty, and takes an assignment of it, or agrees with the creditor that any security held by the latter shall continue available for the collection of the demand." Crane v. Noel, 78 S. W. 826, 828, 103 Mo. App. 122.

SUBSEQUENT.

See "Condition Subsequent."

SUBSTANCE.

See "Noxious Potion or Substance."

SUBSTANTIAL INCLOSURE.

Where plaintiff, claiming title to a lot, incloses it on three sides with a fence, so that it makes a complete inclosure in connection with an adjoining lot, the owner of which makes no claim to the first lot, but has given his individual covenant of quiet enjoyment in an executor's deed thereof, there is a "substantial inclosure" of the lot, within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 370, 372, providing that such an inclosure constitutes adverse possession. Brown v. Doherty, 87 N. Y. Supp. 563, 566, 93 App. Div. 190.

SUBSTANTIAL RIGHT.

An order of the superior court made in a special proceeding pending an appeal from a justice, vacating the justice's judgment, is final in a proceeding, and, because preventing docketing of the judgment pending the appeal, affects a "substantial right," within Rev. St. 1898, § 3069, making such order appealable. Deuster v. Zillmer, 97 N. W. 31, 34, 119 Wis. 402.

A judgment vacating a town plat is appealable as a final order affecting a "substantial right," within Gen. St. 1894, § 6140, subd. 6, providing for an appeal from a final order affecting a substantial right. Koochling v. Franson, 98 N. W. 98, 99, 91 Minn. 404.

The right of a prisoner to earn a diminution of his term by his own act is a "substantial one," of which, by law passed subsequent to the commission of the offense, he cannot be deprived. People v. Johnson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 134, 136, 44 Misc. Rep. 550.

SUBSTITUTED TRUSTEE.

On the death of a trustee, whereby the trust devolves on the court, it appoints, not a "substituted trustee," but some one as its representative to execute the trust under its direction. There is no authority in the statute for appointing a substituted trustee by that name. In re Gueutal, 90 N. Y. Supp. 138, 139, 97 App. Div. 530.

SUCCESSIVE WEEKS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 639, relating to foreclosure of mortgages by advertisement, provides that notice that a mortgage will be foreclosed by sale must be given by publication for six successive weeks. Civ. Code, § 2445, provides that the phrase "successive weeks" shall be construed to mean calendar weeks, and publication on any day in such weeks shall be sufficient for that week. A notice of foreclosure by advertisement which is published for six successive weeks, once in each week, is a sufficient publication, though but 37 days intervened between the first publication and the day of sale. Thomson v. Issenhuth (S. D.) 100 N. W. 438, 437.

SUCCESSIVELY.

"Successively," in Civ. Code, art. 145, providing that the notices of judgment are to be given from month to month for three times successively, means by succession; in a series; one after another; consecutively. Derby v. Dancy, 36 South. 795, 796, 112 La. 891.

SUCCESSORS.

The word "successors," as used in a lease providing for a forfeiture of the term if the lessee, his successors or assigns, should fail in the performance of any covenant, condition, or proviso contained in the lease, which, on the part of the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, was to be observed, includes the executors of the lessee. West Shore R. Co. v. Wenner (N. J.) 57 Atl. 408, 410.

SUCH.

The word "such," as used in a constitutional provision directing the Legislature to enact a law whereby any county, justice precinct, town, city, or such subdivisions of the county as may be designated by the commissioners' court of the county, may determine from time to time whether the sale of intoxicants shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits, means subdivisions of like character—political subdivisions of the county—and empowers the Legislature to authorize the commissioners' court to designate some other existing subdivision of the county than one of those enumerated, but does not sanction a law which authorizes the commissioners' court to combine two or more political subdivisions of a county into a local option district, thus, in effect, creating a new subdivision. Ex parte Heyman (Tex.) 78 S. W. 349, 353.

SUCH ACCIDENT.

The words "such accident," in an instruction in an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger, to the effect that if the jury found that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and was thrown from the car as claimed, and that such accident would not have happened under ordinary circumstances, had defendant exercised the utmost care, a presumption of negligence against defendant was raised, have reference to somewhat more than the mere fact that plaintiff was injured, and they at least referred back to his being thrown from the car through some neglect of defendant, and, when so construed, the instruction was not erroneous on the ground that it justified the jury in presuming negligence from the mere fact that plaintiff was injured while a passenger. Fitch v. Mason City & C. L. Traction Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 618, 620.

SUCH PERIOD.

The words "such period," in Laws 1894, p. 910, c. 447, § 27, providing that Sunday must be excluded from reckoning if it is the last day of any such period, refer to the preceding sentence in the statute, which relates to a number of days specified as a period from a certain day within which, or after or before which, an act was authorized or required to be done. Benoit v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 951, 953, 94 App. Div. 24.

SUE TO INSOLVENCY.

"Sue to insolvency" means that the party shall exhaust the ordinary legal remedies provided for the collection of debts. Pollard v. Murrell, 6 Ala. 661, 662.

SUFFER.

A debtor who does not pay a lawful debt when due, upon which the creditor obtains a judgment against him and levies on his property, "suffers and permits" the creditor to obtain a preference, through legal proceedings, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3, subd. 3, cl. a, 30 Stat. 546, 547 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3422]. Bogen & Trummel v. Protter (U. S.) 129 Fed. 533.

SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE.

See "Sustained by Sufficient Evidence."

SUFFICIENT FENCE.

See "Legal and Sufficient Fence."

SUICIDE.

The word "suicide," as used in a mutual benefit certificate declaring that no benefit shall be paid on the death of a member who shall commit suicide within five years from and including the date of his initiation, means voluntary, intentional self-destruction, and does not bar a recovery if, when the deceased took his life, he was so affected with insanity as to be unconscious of the act or of the physical effect thereof, or was driven to the commission of the fatal act by an insane impulse which he had not the power to resist. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum v. Pels, 70 N. E. 697, 209 Ill. 33.

The phrase "self-destruction or suicide," as used in a certificate of membership in a benefit association, declaring that the contract for benefits does not include assurance against self-destruction or suicide, whether the member be sane or insane, does not prevent a recovery on the certificate where the member's death was due to his voluntary taking of carbolic acid, not with intent to cause death, but to frighten his wife into giving him money. Courtemanche v. Supreme Court I. O. F. (Mich.) 98 N. W. 749, 750, 64 L. R. A. 668.

SUIT.

See "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

The word "suits" is a very comprehensive term, and includes all actions at law, ex contractu and ex delicto, and all actions in equity. L. Bucki & Son Lumber Co. v. Atlantic Lumber Co. (U. S.) 128 Fed. 332, 340, 63 C. C. A. 62.

Strictly speaking, under the code practice, "we have no such thing as 'suits,' although we commonly use that term. We have only actions and special proceedings. What were formerly denominated 'suits in equity' and 'actions at law' are now denominated 'civil actions.'" State v. Policemen's Pension Fund Trustees, 98 N. W. 954, 959, 121 Wis. 44.

SUIT AGAINST THE STATE.

In equity the money in the state treasury is the money of the people of the state, and suits by a taxpayer to restrain the misappropriation by public officers of such money to an unauthorized purpose are not "suits against the state," within the prohibition of Const. 1870, art. 4, § 26, declaring that the state shall not be made a party to any action at law or suit in chancery. A bill in equity seeking to restrain the commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal and certain public officials from applying certain sums of money appropriated to the maintenance of the canal by Laws 1903, p. 45, on the ground that the act was illegal and that the appropriation was not warranted by the law, was not a suit against the state. Burke v. Snively, 70 N. E. 827, 208 Ill. 828.

SUIT IN REM.

See "In Rem"; "Quasi in Rem."

SUIT IN WHICH THE UNITED STATES ARE PLAINTIFFS.

Under Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 290, § 1, 28 Stat. 278 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2523], requiring contractors for government work to give bonds conditioned (1) for the performance of the contract; (2) for the prompt payment of all persons supplying labor or materials in the prosecution of the work—and authorizing such persons, in case of nonpayment, to bring suit in the name of the United States for his or their use and benefit against such contractor and sureties, such a suit is one in which the United States are plaintiffs, within the meaning of section 1 of the Judiciary Act of August 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 508]. United States v. Churchyard (U. S.) 132 Fed. 82, 83.

SUIT OF A CIVIL NATURE.

A proceeding for mandamus, under 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5765, authorizing such proceedings to be commenced by the filing of a motion supported by affidavits, and authorizing the assessment of damages and costs when a judgment is given in favor of the applicant, together with the issuance of a peremptory writ, is a special proceeding, and not a suit "of a civil nature at common law or in equity." Kelly v. Grand Circle Women of Woodcraft (U. S.) 129 Fed. 830, 831.

"The writ of mandamus is not a suit of a civil nature at law or in equity, within the meaning of the acts of Congress creating the circuit courts of the United States and defining their jurisdiction." Mystic Milling Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (U. S.) 182 Fed. 289, 291.

SUIT PENDING.

A proceeding for the discovery of assets belonging to a decedent's estate is a "suit pending," within the meaning of a statute providing for the taking of depositions in a suit pending, even though the person from whom discovery is sought is charged with embezzlement of the assets. Ex parte Gfeller, 77 S. W. 552, 556, 178 Mo. 248.

SUMMER ROAD.

On each side of a paved strip of a road was a smooth surface of sod or earth at the same level, but inclining gradually to the sides and apparently intended for the same use. Such smooth surface is what is known as a "summer road," used by many travelers in good weather in preference to the macadamized stone. Recovery may be had against a city for the death of one killed by coming in contact with a heavily charged and exposed electric wire used by the police department of the city, and lying so near the highway as to endanger a traveler deviating a few feet from the beaten path, and the city cannot avoid liability for the death of a person coming in contact with the wire by the fact that the accident occurred on the side of a road, of which 16 feet was macadamized in the middle, and that, if deceased had kept to the macadamized portion, he would not have lost his life. Emery v. City of Philadelphia, 57 Atl. 977, 978, 208 Pa. 492.

SUMMONS.

The return being a part of the summons, it is sufficiently described by the word "summons." Casety v. Jamison, 77 Pac. 800, 801, 35 Wash. 478.

SUMS COLLECTED.

The term "sums collected," in a statute allowing a commission in tax suits on sums collected, means sums collected for taxes. On sums collected for costs in the action no commission is chargeable. State v. Smith, 13 Mo. App. 421, 423.

SUMS DUE.

All sums due, see "All."

SUNDAY.

Playing baseball on Sunday as crime, see "Crime."

SUPERSEDEAS.

"A supersedeas suspends the efficacy of the judgment, but does not, like a reversal, annul the judgment itself. Its object and effect are to stay future proceedings, and not to undo what is already done. It has no retroactive operation, such as to deprive the judgment of its force and authority from the beginning, but only suspends them after and while it is itself effectual." Hey v. Harding (Ky.) 78 S. W. 136 (quoting Runyon v. Bennett, 84 Ky. [4 Dana] 598, 29 Am. Dec. 431).

"A supersedeas is a statutory remedy. It is only obtained by a strict compliance with all the required conditions, none of which can be dispensed with. Time is an essential element in the proceeding, and one which neither the court nor the judges can disregard." Whitaker v. McBride (Neb.) 98 N. W. 877, 878 (quoting Sage v. Central R. Co., 93 U. S. 412, 23 L. Ed. 933).

SUPERVISORS.

See "Board of Supervisors."

SUPPOSED.

The word "supposed," as used in a plea in trespass for killing a dog, alleging that on the date of "the said supposed killing of said dog" it was found by defendant hunting wild deer, is equivalent to "alleged," and is a sufficient admission of a cause of action. Mossman v. Bostridge (Vt.) 57 Atl. 995.

SURCHARGE.

To surcharge or falsify is to allege an omission in an account or deny the correctness of some or all of the items rendered. One who objects to a stated account must surcharge or falsify it; and an account rendered by an administrator is a stated account. Tate v. Gairdner, 46 S. E. 73, 74, 116 Ga. 133.

SURETY.

As creditor, see "Creditor."

A surety "is a person who, being liable to pay a debt or perform an obligation, is entitled, if it is enforced against him, to be Indemnified by some other person, who ought himself to have made payment or performed before the surety was compelled to do so." McGraw v. Union Trust Co. (Mich.) 99 N. W. 758 (quoting Smith v. Shelden, 35 Mich. 48, 24 Am. Rep. 529).

"A surety is one who contracts for the payment of a debt in case of the failure of another person who is himself principally responsible for it; or, as it has otherwise been expressed, a surety is a person who, being liable to pay a debt, is entitled, if it is enforced against him, to be indemnified by some other person who ought himself to have paid it before the surety was himself compelled to do so." Wm. Deering & Co. v. Veal (Ky.) 78 S. W. 886, 887 (quoting Brandt, Sureties, § 1).

SURPLUS.

The term "surplus," as used in the nomenclature of bankers, does not include undivided profits. Such profits may be surplus in the sense that they are a constituent of capital, but they are not surplus in the commonly accepted sense. It is quite usual, upon the organization of financial corporations, for the stockholders to contribute, besides the share capital, a fund which is known as "surplus." It is also quite usual for the directors or managers of these institutions to set apart and to add to this fund from time to time some part of the accumulated profits of the business in excess of dividend requirements. The fund produced in either of these ways is what is known as "surplus." The term is not used to designate the accumulated profits of ordinary banking firms or individual bankers; and, when the statute uses it, it does so with reference to the particular class of bankers to which alone it is applicable, and means the fund created by corporate or quasi public institutions as an addition to or re-enforcement of the share capital. Leather Mfrs.' Nat. Bank v. Treat (U. S.) 128 Fed. 262, 263, 62 O. C. A. 644.

SURPLUS PROFITS.

Under Laws 1890, p. 1071, c. 564, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1829, c. 688, providing that the directors of a stock corporation shall not make dividends except from the "surplus profits" arising from the business of the corporation, where the stockholders paid into the treasury $500,000 for which no additional stock was issued, and the company thereafter entered into a merger agreement with another corporation, and for the purpose of equalizing the capital and surplus of the merging companies $200,000 was returned to the former stockholders, the sum so returned was not surplus profits of the company, for it did not in any sense arise from its profits or earnings in the course of its business, but was contributed solely for the purpose of strengthening the company and adding to its working capital. People v. Knight, 89 N. Y. Supp. 72, 74, 96 App. Div. 120.

SURPRISE.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 800, providing that a new trial may be granted for mistake or surprise, the granting of a new trial on a showing by defendant in an action on account, after verdict for plaintiff, that when he heard a witness testify on the trial concerning two payments by defendant to the plaintiff's decedent, and that the account in suit had been paid to decedent, he was at first surprised, but gradually the facts came to him, especially when it was found the draft by which payment of the account in suit was made verified the statement of the witness, is not an abuse of discretion of the trial court. Connally v. Pehle, 79 S. W. 1006, 1009, 105 Mo. App. 407.

SURROGATE.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 2747, providing that the surrogate or Supreme Court may by reference ascertain the rights of the parties interested in the legacy, and grant an order for the payment of the money due, the words "the surrogate" must be deemed to refer to the judicial officer who has or had general jurisdiction over the estate, its representatives, and its management and disposition. Kinneally v. People, 90 N. Y. Supp. 587, 589.

SURVEY.

See "Official Survey."

SURVIVING CHILDREN.

The words "surviving children," in a will providing that in the event of the death of any of the children his share in the trust fund should go to his lawful issue upon their arriving at full age, or, if there should be no lawful issue who should arrive at full age, such child's share in the trust fund shall go to the surviving children and their heirs and assigns forever, refer to those surviving at the death of one of the children. Lawrence v. Phillips, 71 N. E. 541, 542, 186 Mass. 320.

SURVIVOR.

The term "survivors," as used in the code of a mutual benefit insurance association, providing that the purpose of a fund is to pay a sum to survivors of a member at his death; that, if a member shall die whose survivors possess no benefit certificate, the money shall not be paid without the order of court; and that, if a member die whose survivors produce a death certificate, the recient of the money shall give a receipt—does not include a person who is neither a relative nor member of the household of, nor connected by marriage with, the member of the association. Koerts v. Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, Order of Hermann's Sons, 97 N. W. 163, 164, 119 Wis. 520.

SUSPICIOUS PLACE.

What constitutes a "suspicious place," within a police regulation requiring a report as to all suspicious places, is to be determined by the exercise of good judgment and discretion on the part of the captain of the precinct, as he is required to make the report; but such judgment and discretion are not a mere whim or caprice on his part, but must have for their foundation some evidence. People v. Greene, 87 N. Y. Supp. 172, 175, 92 App. Div. 243.

SUSTAINED BY SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE.

A case where the verdict is under the evidence, inadequate, is a case "not sustained by sufficient evidence," within Code, § 3755, authorizing the trial court to grant a new trial where the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, etc. Tathwell v. City of Cedar Rapids, 97 N. W. 98, 122 Iowa, 50.

SWITCH.

See "Derail Switch."

SWORE.

The word "swore" does not technically and necessarily imply a judicial administration of an oath. Any utterance or an affirmation with an appeal to God is to swear an oath, no matter how or before whom the utterance is made. That is its common import. In law it has a more technical meaning, and implies that the swearing has been officially done, but not necessarily judicially done. It is not sufficient, in an indictment for subornation of perjury, to charge that defendant procured the witness falsely and upon oath to depose, etc., since such averment relates to the acts of defendant and not the witness; nor is the defect cured by further expressions which assume, without stating that the witness was sworn, such as that when he was so sworn, or when he swore, he did not believe the things which he testified to be true. United States v. Howard (U. S.) 132 Fed. 325, 338.

SWORN COMPLAINT.

It is sufficient compliance with the requirement of an act relating to the disposing of an intruder on Indian lands that a "sworn complaint" shall be filed, if the complaint is verified by the authorized attorney of the tribe or nation which is plaintiff, who states that the facts alleged are within his knowledge. Brought v. Cherokee Nation (U. S.) 129 Fed. 192, 195, 63 C. C. A. 350.

SYRUP.

"Syrup" as defined by the United States Department of Agriculture, is the product obtained by purifying and evaporating the juice of a sugar-producing plant without removing any of the sugar. Syrup thus obtained from cane is cane syrup, syrup so obtained from sorghum is sorghum syrup, and syrup so obtained from corn is corn syrup. People v. Harris (Mich.) 97 N. W. 402, 403.

SYSTEM.

See "High Tension System."

TABLE.

See "Gaming Table."

TAIL.

See "Estate Tail."

TAKE.

Solicit distinguished, see "Solicit."

To "take," in the active sense, means to lay hold of, to seize with hands or otherwise. The word "take," as used in the statute providing that if any person take any woman unlawfully and against her will, to marry him or any other person, he shall be fined, means to obtain possession by force or artifice; to get the custody or control of; to reduce to one's power of will. Under the statute, such taking is an essential to constitute the crime. State v. Hromadko, 99 N. W. 560, 561, 123 Iowa, 665.

TAKE EFFECT.

A policy of life insurance and the application on which the same was issued provided that it should not "take effect or be in force" until delivered to the applicant in person during his lifetime and while in good health. The expression "take effect or be in force" merely intended to distinguish between policies which have not been delivered and those which have been delivered. Austin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n (U. S.) 132 Fed. 555, 559.

The phrase "to take effect from and after the death of the husband," in an antenuptial agreement providing for the annual payment of a certain sum to the wife in lieu of dower, the same to take effect from and after the death of the husband, does not describe the time of the payment, but the event which brings the annuity into existence—the time from which it begins to run. Mower v. Sanford, 57 Atl. 119, 120, 76 Conn. 504, 63 L. R. A. 625, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1008.

TAKE ENTIRE CHARGE.

Where real estate agents agreed with the owner of premises to take entire charge of the premises for a specified time, the term "take entire charge" imports a promise to act as the owner's agent for such time in the care and management of the property. Seymour v. Warren, 71 N. E. 260, 261, 179 N. Y. L.

TAKING.

Proceedings by the United States to condemn land for a public building or other governmental purpose may be dismissed at any time before the actual acceptance of the property and payment therefor, until which time there is no taking of the property, and the United States is not subject to the payment of costs or damages to the landowners on such dismissal. United States v. Dickson (U. S.) 127 Fed. 774, 775; Same v. English, Id.; Same v. Glenn, Id.; Same v. Koch, Id.

Any substantial interference with private property which destroys or materially lessens its value, or by which the owner's right to its use and enjoyment is in any substantial degree abridged or destroyed, is a "taking," within Const. art. 1, § 22, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. Stockdale v. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co. (Utah) 77 Pac. 849.

In Laws 1897, p. 887, c. 27, relative to an addition to a certain park, and providing that the provisions of law relating to the "taking of private property" for public streets and places shall be applicable so far as the same shall be necessary for the acquiring of the land, the terms "taking of private property" and "acquiring all land," require not only the vesting of title, but payment for the property. In re City of New York, 89 N. Y. Supp. 6, 8, 95 App. Div. 552.

TAKING ORDERS.

The phrase "taking orders," as used in Laws March 16, 1901 (6th Sess.) p. 155, § 8, declaring that the act shall not apply to runners traveling for wholesale houses and taking orders, does not contemplate that the runner shall have the goods with him at the time of the sale and deliver them, but in the common acceptation of the phrase the agent or runner sells the goods by sample, taking orders therefor, and thereafter delivers the goods. In re Abel (Idaho) 77 Pac. 621, 622.

TANK.

A tank of any kind, as defined by Webster is "an artificial receptacle for liquids; a large basin or cistern." As used in a statute imposing a tax on each oil depot in the state, wherein petroleum or other oils are stored in bulk or tank, the word "tank" is to be construed as referring to oils stored in large oil tanks holding hundreds or thousands of barrels of oil, which are in common use, and not to oils stored in barrels in warehouses or sheds. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1020, 1022.

TAX.

See "Transfer Tax."

Assess synonymous, see "Assess."

The crucial attributes of a tax are that it is a toll upon property without the consent of the owner, and the money secured is to be applied toward governmental expenses of the body politic for whose benefit the imposition is to be made. Heerwagen v. Cross-town St. Ry. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 218, 225, 90 App. Div. 275.

Levies payable in labor on highways, though in the nature of a tax, are not understood as embraced in the term "tax"; and statutory provisions for assessment are not applicable to it unless made so by express terms. State v. Ide, 77 Pac. 961, 965, 85 Wash. 576.

TEACHER.

A statute punishing any guardian of any female under the age of 18 years, or any other person to whose care such female shall have been confided, who shall carnally know her, includes a school teacher, and the relation of teacher and pupil exists as well after the child reaches home as it does in the school room. It exists on Sunday as well as on a school day. State v. Hesterly, 81 S. W. 624, 627, 182 Mo. 16.

TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

As common carrier, see "Common Carrier."

TELEPHONE.

The word "telephone," as used in a municipal ordinance constituting a contract between the city and a telephone company, containing a provision for furnishing to the citizens telephone service at a specified rate for business places and dwellings per annum, is used as including all improvements, equipments, and appliances essential in the operation of a telephone to make it most effective in use. Charles Simon's Sons Co.

v. Maryland Telephone & Telegraph Co. (Md.) 57 Atl. 193, 197, 63 L. R. A. 727.

TELEPHONE COMPANY.

As quasi public corporation, see "Quasi Public Corporation."

TEMPORARY INSANITY.

Drunkenness is frequently characterized by law writers as temporary insanity. Waldron v. Angleman (N. J.) 58 Atl. 568, 569.

TEMPORARY RECEIVER.

The term "temporary receiver" perhaps might better be confined to the mere custodian receiver, who is often appointed, upon the filing of the bill, under the general equity power of the court, in order to preserve the assets from waste until the hearing can be had which will determine whether the corporation is to be disabled or not, and its assets vested in a receiver. Gallagher v. Asphalt Co. of America (N. J.) 58 Atl. 403, 408.

TEN DAYS.

See "Within Ten Days."

TENANCY.

See "Joint Tenancy"; "Landlord and Tenant."

TENANT AT WILL.

Where parties leased by parol from a brewer certain premises, they to remain as long as they wanted, and the rental to be determined by the number of barrels of beer purchased from the lessor, and to be payable just as the beer bill was payable they were tenants at will. Lyons v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 58 Atl. 924, 209 Pa. 550.

TENANT IN COMMON.

Tenants in common are not privies. "They do not claim under each other. They may claim their several titles from entirely different sources. In this respect they differ from joint tenants and coparceners." As said in Co. Litt., "Tenants in common are they which have lands or tenements in fee simple, fee tail, or for terms of life, etc., and they have such lands or tenements by several titles, and not by a joint title; and none of them know of this several, but they ought by law to occupy these lands or tenements in common." Allred v. Smith, 47 S. E. 597, 599, 135 N. C. 443, 65 L. R. A. 924.

TEND.

The use of the word "tend" does not contemplate conjecture. It contemplates that the testimony has a tendency to prove the allegations of the complaint, and not some other theory inconsistent therewith. Shaw v. New Year Gold Mines Co. (Mont.) 77 Pac. 515, 516.

TENDERED.

See "Business Tendered."

TENEMENT.

Tenements and hereditaments include every species of realty, as well corporeal as incorporeal. In re Handley's Estate, 57 Atl. 755, 757, 208 Pa. 388.

TENEMENT HOUSE.

Apartment or community house distinguished, see "Apartment House."

A restrictive covenant in a deed against tenement houses is not to be construed as relating to first-class apartment houses having all the conveniences and appliances of the best order of houses, and externally in their architecture of the character and appearance corresponding with first-class dwellings in the immediate neighborhood. Kitching v. Brown, 87 N. Y. Supp. 75, 77, 92 App. Div. 160.

TERM.

See "Adjourned Term."

TERM OF OFFICE.

See "Continuance in Office."

TERMS AND CONDITIONS, RIGHTS, AND PRIVILEGES.

Ordinarily, in the use of legal phraseology, the phrase "terms and conditions, rights and privileges," is not employed to convey power over or relating to the time or period through which the tenure dealt with by the acts is intended to run, but conveys power over or relates to the means, the methods, and the incidents connected with the exercise of such tenure. Such plainly was meant to be the signification of the phrase as used in the acts of 1859, 1861, and 1865, relating to the incorporation of the Chicago city railways, and granting rights thereto in the streets of the city, and providing that the railways shall be constructed, furnished, and operated in such manner and on such terms and conditions and on such rights and privileges as the common council by contract may prescribe. Govin v. City of Chicago (U. S.) 132 Fed. 848, 855.

TERRITORY.

See "Defined Territory."

TESTATOR.

The word "testator" applies to "testatrix," irrespective of the act concerning statutes, because "testatrix," as Webster defines it, means "a female testator." Walker v. Hyland (N. J.) 56 Atl. 268, 271.

THAT IS TO SAY.

The words "that is to say," as used in a will whereby the testator, after giving the real estate to his wife, devised to his daughter his personal property, and in fee simple all the real estate, "that is to say that if at the death of my wife my daughter, M., shall then be living the fee to said real estate shall vest in her," etc., clearly mean the same as if the testator had said "by this I mean that if," etc., or "provided if at the death of my wife," etc. Orr v. Yates, 70 N. E. 731, 209 Ill. 222.

THEIR.

The word "their," as used in Laws Ga. 1833, p. 264, relating to the charter of the Georgia Railroad Company, and providing that the stock of the company and its branches shall be exempt from taxation for a fixed period, and after that shall be subject to a tax not exceeding a specified per cent. per annum on the net proceeds of their investments, does not refer to the shareholders who should become interested in the enterprise, but refers to the corporation, and is used in the same sense as if the pronoun "its" had been used instead of "their." Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright (U. S.) 132 Fed. 912, 914.

THEN.

The word "then," as used in a deed of trust stipulating that, in case of the absence from the county of the trustee, another person should become his successor, and in the absence of the trustee and his successor "then the then sheriff of said county, * * * who shall thereupon become their successor to the title * * * with all the powers, duties and obligations thereof," may sell, etc., plainly has reference to whomsoever is sheriff at the time of the default. McNutt v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. W. 703, 704, 181 Mo. 94.

THEN AND THERE.

Where the day and date of the first fact alleged is given, and the others are stated as having "then and there" occurred, it is to be inferred that the facts alleged were coexistent—occurring at the same point of time. State v. Hand (N. J.) 58 Atl. 641.

THERE.

See "Then and There."

THEREAT.

The word "thereat," in Const. art. 11, § 8, declaring that a freeholder's charter should be submitted to the qualified electors of the city at a general or special election, and that, if a majority of the electors voting thereat shall ratify it, it shall be submitted to the Legislature, refers to the particular phrase "general or special election," and has exactly the same meaning as if the sentence had read, "if a majority of such qualified electors voting at such election shall ratify the same." City of Santa Rosa v. Bower, 75 Pac. 829, 830, 142 Cal. 299.

THING.

See "Incorporeal Thing."
Other thing, see "Other."

THING IN ACTION.

See "Chose in Action."

THINK.

See "As She Thinks Proper."

"The word 'think' has various meanings. Its meaning must be ascertained from the connection in which it is used in a sentence. Some of its meanings, according to Webster, are 'to form an opinion by reasoning; to judge; to conclude; to believe.'" An instruction that if the jury should find in favor of plaintiff they should assess her such damages as they think, under the evidence, would compensate her for the pain and suffering she has endured by reason of her injuries, and such further sum as they think would fairly compensate plaintiff for the injuries sustained, can be as well understood by the jury as if the word "believe" or "find" had been used instead of the word "think." Ilges v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 93, 95, 102 Mo. App. 529.

THIRD PARTY.

The former owner and grantee of a tract of land sold and conveyed for nonpayment of taxes thereon is a "third party," within the meaning of the proposition of law that the acts of an officer de facto will be sustained in any proceeding, collateral or direct, in the interest of third parties or the public. Old Dominion Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Sohn, 46 S. E. 222, 228, 54 W. Va. 101.

THREAT.

A "threat," within Gen. St. 1902, § 1296, subjecting to punishment any person who shall threaten or use any means to intimidate any person to compel him against his will to do or abstain from doing any act which such person has a legal right to do, is a menace of such nature as to unsettle the mind of the person on whom it operated. State v. Stockford, 58 Atl. 769, 773, 77 Conn. 227.

THREE-CARD MONTE.

Three-card monte is said to be a sleight of hand game or trick played with three cards, one of which is usually a court card. The performer throws the cards face down upon a table in such a manner as to deceive the eye of the onlooker, who is induced to bet that he can pick out the court card. While the cards are manipulated by one person alone, who is commonly called the "dealer," the game is generally known and understood to be a confidence game, and is also declared by the statute to be a confidence game or swindle known as "three-card monte." State v. Edgen, 80 S. W. 942, 944, 181 Mo. 582 (citing Standard Dict. p. 1147).

TILLING.

See "Farming."

TIMBER.

Slabs are not included in the material designated as "lumber and timber" in the statute giving a lien on the lumber and timber for services in cutting logs. Engl v. Hardell (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1046, 1048.

TIME.

See "From Time to Time"; "Reasonable Time."

The words "time and place," in Gen. St. 1902, § 1130, requiring a description in the notice of the time and place of the occurrence of the injury, mean a statement of the day and hour when, and a description of the locality where, the person injured received the direct injury to his person or property from the defendant's negligent act, as nearly as these facts can be given. Peck v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 58 Atl. 757, 758, 77 Conn. 161.

TIME OF RENDITION OF JUDGMENT.

The time of the rendition of the judgment, within Gen. St. 1902, §§ 790-793, designating the time of rendition of the judgment as the point of time from which the period limited for procuring an appeal is to be computed, is the time when the court gives its decision in the case, and not the time when the judgment file is made out and signed, which is a matter of subsequent clerical action. Appeal of Bulkeley, 57 Atl. 112, 113, 76 Conn. 454.

TINWARE.

See "Sale of Tinware."

TITLE.

See "Color of Title"; "Confer Title of Nobility"; "Marketable Title"; "Perfect Title."

Title is but the means whereby the owner of lands hath the just possession of his property. Adams v. Hopkins, 77 Pac. 712, 717, 144 Cal. 19.

The word "title," as used in a deed from a mortgagor to a mortgagee, stipulating that the mortgage was not to be considered as merged in the title, but was to be held as protection to title, meant the title as it existed at the time of the conveyance, and which was then the subject of consideration. The purpose of this provision in the deed was to protect the grantee against any liens or charges on the title which might have intervened intermediate the execution of the mortgage and the deed. Coon v. Smith, 88 N. Y. Supp. 261, 262, 43 Misc. Rep. 112.

Possession under a claim of ownership in itself constitutes title in a low degree. It is sufficient to give plaintiff standing to bring an action against those who have no title at all. Waller v. Julius (Kan.) 74 Pac. 157.

TO.

The word "to" means within, not up to. A street railroad company was required to run its cars to a certain village. It was not a compliance to construct its road up to the boundary line of the village. Houghton County St. Ry. Co. v. Common Council of Village of Laurium (Mich.) 98 N. W. 393, 395.

The word "to" means "into"; as, where a corporation was authorized to construct a road to the city of Hudson, the word "to" meant "into." People v. Klammer (Mich.) 100 N. W. 600, 601 (citing Farmers' Turnpike Road v. Coventry, 10 Johns. [N. Y.] 389).

The word "to," employed in an act fixing the boundaries of a right of way to Salt Lake City, is a word of exclusion, and excludes the terminus of the railroad, which was then located near the business portion and center of the city. Moon v. Salt Lake County, 76 Pac. 222, 224, 27 Utah, 435.

The word "to," as defined by Bouvier, is a term of exclusion, unless by necessary implication it is manifestly used in a different sense. Where plaintiff was allowed "to" the 15th of March to make and serve a case, the word "to" was a term of exclusion, and excluded the 15th day of March. Maynes v. Gray (Kan.) 76 Pac. 443.

The word "to" has no one specific meaning in a legal sense, though it is generally a word of exclusion. Its meaning is ascertained from the reason and sense in which it is used. Thus, if a boundary of land extends to a field, the field itself will not be included in the boundary. But generally, if the time named as limiting an extension is designated by a word which includes an extended and indefinite number of days, as to a certain term of court, then the word "to" would limit the time to the first day of such period. Bloch Queensware Co. v. Smith, 80 S. W. 592, 107 Mo. App. 13.

"To the October term," where the time to file a bill of exceptions is extended to that time, means to the first of the term—that is, up to and including the first day; and if it is not filed until the second day of that term it is too late. Bloch Queensware Co. v. Smith, 80 S. W. 592, 107 Mo. App. 13.

TO BE SHIPPED PROMPT.

TO EXCESS.

The expression "to excess," in reference to the use of intoxicating liquors, is equivalent to "excessively" or "intemperately." Moore v. Prudential Ins. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 368, 92 App. Div. 135.

TONNAGE.

See "Registered Tonnage."

TOOL

A "tool" is a mechanical implement—any implement used by a craftsman or laborer at his work. Where a contract for the excavation and refilling of a sewer trench provided that plaintiff should furnish all "labor and tools," and excavate the trench to the depth required, and that defendants should furnish all "suitable and proper material," coal used to generate power in plaintiff's engine, used in the work of excavation, was within the term "labor and tools," rather than the term "materials." Camardella v. Holmes, 89 N. Y. Supp. 616, 617, 97 App. Div. 120.

TOOL OF TRADE.

See "Common Tool of Trade."

A watch and chain are not exempt as a timepiece constituting a part of the tools of trade of a barber, where among such tools there was also a clock. In re Everleth (U. S.) 129 Fed. 620.

TORT.

Pollock, in his treatise on Torts, defines a "tort" to be "an act or omission (not being merely a breach of duty arising out of a personal relation or undertaken by contract) which is related to harm suffered by a determinate person in the following ways: (1) It may be an act which, without lawful justification or excuse, is intended by the agent to cause harm, and does cause the harm complained of; (2) it may be an act in itself contrary to law, or omission of specific legal duty which causes harm not intended by the person so acting or omitting; (3) it may be an act or omission causing harm which the person so acting or omitting did not intend to cause, but might and should, with due diligence, have foreseen and prevented; (4) it may, in special cases, consist merely in not avoiding or preventing harm which the party was bound absolutely or within limits to avoid or prevent. A special duty of this kind may be (1) absolute; (2) limited to answering for harm which is assignable to negligence. In some positions a man becomes, so to speak, an insurer to the public against a certain risk; in others, he warrants only that all has been done for safety that reasonable care can do." Drum v. Miller, 47 S. E. 421, 423, 135 N. C. 204, 65 L. R. A. 890.

TOTAL INCAPACITY.

Under a benefit certificate payable in case insured should become totally incapacitated to perform manual labor, "total incapacity" means inability to perform sustained manual labor, so as to enable one to earn or assist in earning a livelihood. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen v. Orrell, 69 N. E. 68, 69, 206 Ill. 208.

TOTAL INSURANCE.

The words "total insurance," as used in a fire policy for $4,500, which provided that it should be void if the insured should procure any other insurance on the same property, unless otherwise provided by agreement added to the policy, and which contained the clause: "$3,500 total insurance permitted, concurrent herewith, on buildings," etc. "Other insurance permitted, concurrent herewith, on stock"—contemplate the entire insurance on the property, and limit the insurance, taking into account the amount written in the policy, and the policy did not authorize $3,500 additional insurance, and it was forfeited by the insured taking a policy for additional insurance on the same property from another company. Senor v. Western Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 79 S. W. 687, 689, 181 Mo. 104.

TOWN.

See "Organized Town."

The word "town" is often used as a generic term embracive of all such primary municipal corporations as incorporated cities and villages; and it has become a well-settled rule of construction that the term "town," when used in the general statute, may be applied to or include cities, unless the contrary appears from the whole statute to have been the intention of the Legislature. Tucker v. Board of Com'rs, 97 N. W. 103, 104, 90 Minn. 408.

TOWNSHIP.

As district, see "District."

TOY.

Where there was evidence that a 22-caliber Stevens rifle was used for hunting and killing game, and was capable of killing a human being, it was not within Rev. St. 1898, § 49a, prohibiting the use or possession of "any toy pistol, toy revolver, or toy firearm." Taylor v. Sell (Wis.) 97 N. W. 498.

Ping pong balls of celluloid are "toys," within Tariff Act, July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1674]. United States v. Strauss Bros. & Co. (U. S.) 128 Fed. 473.

TRADITIONARY EVIDENCE.

The party offering in evidence reputation to prove ancient boundaries must confine his proof to the declarations of persons having competent knowledge of the matter in controversy, and who are since deceased. This species of evidence is very properly denominated "traditionary evidence." Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 545, 554 (citing 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 130, 145, and notes; 1 Phil. Ev. [Cow. & H. & Edw. Notes] 218, and note 87).

TRAIN.

See "Mixed Train."

TRAIN DISPATCHER.

"The object of train dispatching is to place in the hands of conductors, who manage the trains of a railroad, proper and safe orders for their guidance. The source of such orders is the office of the train dispatcher from which they emanate, and their destination is the hand of the conductor of the train whose movements they are intended to direct and control. The order is in transitu from the time it leaves the one until it reaches the other, and every agent of the company through whose hands the order passes is necessarily engaged in its transmission until it reaches its ultimate destination." Virginia & S. Ry. Co. v. Clowers' Adm'x, 47 S. E. 1003, 1004, 102 Va. 867.

TRANSACTIONING BUSINESS.

See, also, "Carrying On Business"; "Doing Business."

By passively continuing to hold a previously existing and valid lien or title, a foreign corporation is not "transacting business" within the state, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 1770b, providing that no foreign corporation which has not complied with certain requirements shall transact business in the state. The mere commencement and prosecution of a suit by a foreign corporation to enforce a lien on lands in the state acquired by it through the execution, in the state of its domicile, of bonds and trust deeds, prior to the enactment of Rev. St. 1898, § 1770b, providing that no foreign corporation which has not complied with certain requirements shall transact business in the state, is not a "transaction of business" forbidden by the statute. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Bashford (Wis.) 97 N. W. 940, 941.

TRANSACTION.

"Transaction," in Code Civ. Proc. § 484, relating to the uniting of actions on claims arising out of transactions connected with the same subject of action, means the doing or performance of any business; the management of any affair; the act of transacting or conducting any business; negotiation; management; a proceeding. Rogers v. Wheeler, 85 N. Y. Supp. 981, 985, 89 App. Div. 435 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Pom. Code Rem. § 473).

"Transactions and communications," within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting evidence of personal transactions and communications between interested persons and a decedent, embrace every variety of affairs which can form the subject of negotiation, interviews, or actions between persons, and include every method by which one person can derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition, or language of another. Holland v. Holland, 90 N. Y. Supp. 208, 211 (citing Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316).

The word "transaction," as used in Rev. Code 1899, § 5274, relating to counterclaims, and authorizing the setting up as a counterclaim of a claim arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, is broader in meaning than the word "contract," and includes torts. One slander cannot be set up as a counterclaim against another slander, although both are uttered at the same time and place and in the same conversation. Wrege v. Jones (N. D.) 100 N. W. 705, 706.

The term "transaction," as used in the statute relating to counterclaims, and providing that a counterclaim must arise out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, is obviously broader than the term "contract," and authorizes matters to be set up as counterclaim which could not be pleaded as arising on the contract relied on by plaintiff. The cause of action arises from the transaction set forth in the complaint when the combination of acts and events, circumstances and defaults, upon which the rights of the parties are based, when viewed in one aspect, result in plaintiff's right of action, and, when viewed in another aspect, result favorably to defendant. The transaction is not necessarily confined by the facts stated in the complaint, but the defendant may set up new facts and show the entire transaction, and counterclaim on that state of facts as the transaction on which plaintiff's claim is founded. In an action to recover damages for the alleged fraudulent acts of defendant, a corporation engaged in the business of buying, selling, and dealing in grain, provisions, etc., for future delivery, defendant may set up as a counterclaim a claim based on the fact that it made investments for plaintiff in the purchase of grain for future delivery as outlined in the complaint, and by reason of fluctuation in the market it was necessary, from time to time, to advance money on such purchases to protect the same, and that defendant made a series of such advances, for which judgment was asked. King v. Coe Commission Co. (Minn.) 100 N. W. 667, 668.

TRANSFER.

By section 1 of the bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 545 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3420], the word "transfer" is defined to include the sale and every other and different mode of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property, absolutely or conditionally, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. "The word is used in its most comprehensive sense, and is intended to include every means and manner by which property can pass from the ownership and possession of another, * * * and by which the result forbidden by the statute may be accomplished; 'a preference enabling a creditor to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditors of the same class.'" The giving of a chattel mortgage is a "transfer" of property, as defined by the bankruptcy act, it being a settled law of the state of New York that a chattel mortgage is a sale of the thing mortgaged, and operates as a transfer of the whole legal title to the mortgagee, subject only to be defeated by the full performance of the condition. In re Riggs Restaurant Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 691, 693 (quoting Pirie v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 182 U. S. 438, 21 Sup. Ct. 906, 45 L. Ed. 1171).

A transfer is defined in the bankruptcy act of 1898 to include the sale and every other and different method of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property absolutely or conditionally, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. Insolvents, by depositing money in a bank on an open account, subject to check, do not thereby make a "transfer of property," within the meaning of the act. New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 201, 192 U. S. 138, 48 L. Ed. 880.

The deposit of money in bank by an insolvent within four months prior to his bankruptcy, on open account, subject to check, does not constitute a transfer of property amounting to a preference under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3445], though the bank may be at the time a creditor, and under section 68a, 30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450], the bank has the right to set off so much of its claims as equals the balance in such account. In re George M. Hill Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 815, 318, 66 L. R. A. 68 (citing New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 192 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 48 L. Ed. 880).

"It has frequently been held that the word 'transfer,' as used in the national bankruptcy act, includes the payment of money." Dickenson v. Stults, 48 S. E. 173, 174, 120 Ga. 632 (citing Coll. Bankr. [3d Ed.] 421).

TRANSFER TAX.

A transfer tax must be regarded as a tax, not upon the money which is the subject of the legacy, but upon the passing of that money under the will, in possession or enjoyment. In re Wolfe's Estate, 85 N. Y. Supp. 949, 950, 89 App. Div. 349.

TRANSIENT.

The word "transient" is a relative term, which, in the absence of any inflexible statutory or legislative definition, may be the source of much vexation and uncertainty. The abuse sought to be avoided by Code, § 700, giving cities power to define by ordinance who shall be considered transient merchants, to regulate, license, and tax itinerant doctors, etc., is the practice of that class of dealers who, with large or small stocks of goods, establish themselves for a few days, weeks, or months in a place, and then move on into other fields, staying nowhere long enough to have acquired a permanent residence, and, while claiming the benefit and protection of the laws of the state, contribute nothing to the local or general public revenue. The provision does not in express terms or by necessary implication give cities the power to exact a license from opticians who fit and adjust spectacles. City of Waukon v. Fisk (Iowa) 100 N. W. 475, 477.

TRANSITORY ACTION.

Local action distinguished, see "Local Action."

TRAVEL.

"To travel is to pass or make a journey from place to place, whether on foot, on horseback, or in any conveyance." Hendry v. Town of North Hampton, 58 Atl. 922, 924, 72 N. H. 351, 64 L. R. A. 70.

TRAVELER.

"A traveler is one who travels in any way." A person riding on a bicycle is a "traveler," within Laws 1893, p. 47, c. 59, § 1, making towns liable for damages to any person traveling on a highway, because of dangerous embankments and defective railings which render it unsuitable for travel. Hendry v. Town of North Hampton, 58 Atl. 922, 924, 72 N. H. 351, 64 L. R. A. 70.

The word "travelers," as used in a city ordinance providing that no person shall construct an area into the street in front of any building extending more than five feet, or not provided with a sufficient railing to protect travelers from falling therein, means people who are lawfully using the highway. Devine v. National Wall Paper Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 704, 707, 95 App. Div. 194.

TRAVELING.

Traveling is "the act of making a journey; change of place; passage." Hendry v. Town of North Hampton, 58 Atl. 922, 924, 72 N. H. 351, 64 L. R. A. 70.

TRAVELING PHYSICIAN.

A physician maintaining four offices in different towns, and keeping an assistant at each place, and treating patients at the places at stated intervals, but having his headquarters at one of the places, where he lives with his family and receives his mail, is not a "traveling physician," within the meaning of a statute imposing an occupation tax on physicians, surgeons, etc., traveling from place to place in practicing their profession. Adams v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 935.

TRAVELING SALESMAN.

The words "traveling salesmen," as used in Rev. St. Mo. 1899, §§ 1024-1026, requiring foreign corporations for pecuniary profit, doing business in the state, to file articles of incorporation and be subject to local visitation, and the payment of taxes on its business, and expressly excepting from the operation of the statute "drummers or traveling salesmen soliciting business in this state for foreign corporations which are entirely nonresident," mean employees of such corporations employed to go into other states and communities to drum up and solicit business for the houses they represent. Strain v. Chicago Portrait Co. (U. S.) 126 Fed. 831, 835.

TREASURE TROVE.

Lost property distinguished, see "Lost Property."

Treasure trove, and its legal status, according to Blackstone, is where any money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion is found hidden in the earth, or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown, in which case the treasure belongs to the king. But if he that hid it be known, or afterwards found out, the owner, and not the king, is entitled to it. Ferguson v. Ray, 77 Pac. 600, 601, 44 Or. 557.

TREATMENT.

See "Cruel and Inhuman Treatment."

TREES.

See "Line Trees."

TRESPASS.

Conversion distinguished, see "Conversion."

The word "trespass" frequently—even generally—conveys the idea of force; but it also includes in its largest sense any transgression or offense against the law of nature, of society, or of the county in which we live, whether it relates to a man's person or property. A libel is a trespass. Cox v. Strickland, 47 S. E. 912, 913, 120 Ga. 104.

Trespass is an offense against the possession, and an action therefor can be maintained by one not holding the fee. Roper Lumber Co. v. Elizabeth City Lumber Co., 47 S. E. 757, 759, 135 N. C. 742.

Trespass is an action sounding in damages, and the compensation for damage recoverable therein is, as the words imply, to be measured by the plaintiff's damage or loss, arising from the defendant's trespass or wrongful act set out in the plaintiff's declaration. This is true alike of all forms of the action of trespass, from assault to the latest development of the action of trespass on the case. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. International Paper Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 92, 93.

TRESPASSER.

See "Willful Trespasser."

A judge who renders an order for commitment and issues a warrant of commitment on it is not necessarily a trespasser. He is such only when he has assumed a jurisdiction which did not belong to him, and so the whole proceeding is coram non judice. McVeigh v. Ripley, 58 Atl. 701, 703, 77 Conn. 136.

A person on a railroad track a distance from a path used by the public with the acquiescence of the company, and who was not going toward the opening in the railroad fence where the path entered the right of way, is a trespasser. Le Duc v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 364, 367, 92 App. Div. 107.

TRIAL

See "Speedy Trial."

Any trial, see "Any."

Where a witness in proceedings before a referee dies, and before the evidence is finally submitted the referee also dies, on a subsequent hearing before another referee such testimony is not inadmissible on the ground that the former hearing was not a "trial," within Code Civ. Proc. § 830, allowing evidence of a deceased witness taken at a former trial to be interposed, where the parties against whom the testimony was offered had the opportunity to cross-examine such witness. Taft v. Little, 70 N. E. 211, 212, 178 N. Y. 127.

TRIAL BY JURY.

"Trial by jury," in the primary and usual sense of the term at the common law and in the American Constitution, is not merely a trial by a jury of 12 men before an officer vested with authority to cause them to be summoned and impaneled, to administer oaths to them and to the constable in charge, and to enter judgment and issue execution on their verdict, but it is a trial by a jury of 12 men in the presence and under the superintendence of a judge empowered to instruct them on the law and to advise them on the facts, and, except on acquittal of a criminal charge, to set aside their verdict if in his opinion it is against the law or the evidence. Archer v. Board of Levee Inspectors (U. S.) 128 Fed. 125, 128 (citing Cap- ital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 585, 48 L. Ed. 873).

The right of trial by jury secured by Const., Bill of Rights, § 7, providing that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate, includes the elements of a trial by jury as they were known to and understood by the framers of the Constitution and the people who adopted it. The system of trial by jury in criminal cases, which existed in the state for several years prior to the adoption of the Constitution, gave the state, as well as the defendant on trial for crime, a right to have the place of trial changed when necessary to secure a fair and impartial trial, and the Constitution secured the right thus known and understood. Hence Rev. Codes 1899, § 8122, providing for a change of venue on the application of the state's attorney, when a fair and impartial trial of a criminal case cannot be had in the original county, does not violate the constitutional provision. Barry v. Truax (N. D.) 99 N. W. 769, 771, 65 L. R. A. 762.

A jury trial is a public proceeding, as well in respect to the production of proof as to the instruction of the jury by the judge. The parties have a right to be heard in respect to everything transacted, and to bring in review all the proceedings at the trial. Buffalo Structural Steel Co. v. Dickinson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 268, 270.

TRIBUTARY.

Where one has appropriated water from a river, a tributary thereof, the waters of which he is entitled to prevent another from diverting, need not be a running natural surface stream which empties into the river. Ogilvy Irrigating & Land Co. v. Insinger (Colo.) 75 Pac. 598.

TROVER.

The gist of an action of trover is the conversion by defendant of goods to which the plaintiff has the right of possession. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. International Paper Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 92, 95.

TRUNK RAILWAY.

An electric railroad company authorized to perform the duties of a carrier of freight and passengers between two cities in different states and all intermediate points is a "trunk railway," within a constitutional provision declaring that no city shall grant any franchise to street railways, etc., except to the highest and best bidder therefor, but that the provision shall not apply to a trunk railway. Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co. (Ky.) 77 S. W. 674, 678, 63 L. R. A. 637.

TRUST.

The combination by stockholders in two competing interstate railway companies to form a stockholding corporation which should acquire, in exchange for its own capital stock, a controlling interest in the capital stock of each of such railway companies, is a "trust," within the meaning of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200], which declares illegal every combination in the form of a trust or otherwise in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 452, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679.

The term "trust" includes any form of combination between corporations, or corporations and natural persons, for the purpose of regulating production and repressing competition by means of the power thus centralized. It was first used in a narrower sense, we believe, of an organization formed by a combination of several corporations under one direction, by the device of a transfer by the stockholders in each corporation of a majority of the stock to a central committee, who issued to the stockholders in return certificates showing, in effect, that, though they had parted with their stock, they were still entitled to share in the profits; the purpose being to control competition in production and transportation, and thus the price to the consumer. MacGinniss v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 75 Pac. 89, 95, 29 Mont. 428.

TRUST.

See "Active Trust"; "Constructive Trust"; "Deed of Trust"; "In Trust"; "Voluntary Trust."
See, also, "Constructive Trust."

A gift to a charitable corporation for its corporate purposes is not a trust in the eyes of the law. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Soc., 90 N. Y. Supp. 168, 178, 44 Misc. Rep. 594.

TRUST EX MALEFICIO.

A trust ex maleficio arises on account of the fraud or misconduct of the trustee in taking title, or by virtue of some illegal act upon his part. Rogers v. Richards, 74 Pac. 255, 256, 67 Kan. 708.

TRUSTEE.

See "Involuntary Trustee"; "Substituted Trustee."

Directors of a bank are, in a certain sense, undoubtedly to be considered trustees, but only in that sense in which an agent or bailee intrusted with the care and management of property is considered a trustee. A director more nearly resembles a managing partner. Stone v. Rottman, 83 S. W. 76, 82, 183 Mo. 552.

TRUSTEE OF EXPRESS TRUST.

One who, in concert with other persons, obtained franchises for the construction of street railways in a city, and, before incorporating, tore up certain existing railways, and contracted, on behalf of himself and those associated with him, to sell certain of the material so torn up, is a "trustee of an express trust," within the meaning of a statute authorizing such a trustee to sue in his own name. Nelson v. Hirsch & Sons' Iron & Rail Co., 77 S. W. 590, 594, 102 Mo. App. 498.

A factor is not a "trustee of an express trust," in the strict sense of the term, but he is a "trustee," under Rev. St. 1898, § 2607, defining a trustee of an express trust to include a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another. Beardsley v. Schmidt (Wis.) 98 N. W. 235, 237.

TYPEWRITING.

The word "typewriting" is defined as the process of printing letter by letter by the use of a typewriter. State ex rel. Coleman v. City of Oakland (Kan.) 77 Pac. 694, 696.

TYPEWRITTEN.

As printed, see "Printed."

UNAPPROPRIATED.

The terms "unoccupied" and "unappropriated" refer to land that is not in the possession of one who claims the right of possession by virtue of a compliance with the law. Conn v. Oberto (Colo.) 76 Pac. 369, 370.

UNAVOIDABLE ACCIDENT.

The writ in an action begun within the period of limitations was issued April 16th, and the next day plaintiff's attorney in another county sent the writ by mail to the clerk of the county court, with a letter requesting him to approve the bail bond, and forward the writ to plaintiff's local attorney by United States mail. The clerk complied with the request, and on April 18th forwarded the letter to the latter attorney, who was then away from home, but returned in about a week, when a period of some 12 days still remained for service. He did not find the writ, and knew nothing about it until the following August, when it was discovered in a pigeonhole with mail relating to an official position held by the attorney, which had come in envelopes of the same sort. The attorney had assumed that his associates in the other county would attend to the service of the writ, and he acted in good faith. The writ failed in service by "unavoidable accident," within the meaning of V. S. 1214, providing that if, in an action commenced within the time limited by statute, the writ fails of sufficient service by unavoidable accident, the plaintiff may have a year from the determination of the original suit to commence a new action. Tracy v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. (Vt.) 57 Atl. 104, 107.

UNAVOIDABLE HINDRANCE.

Where a vessel commenced discharging cargo in Rio de Janeiro on the day that the revolution began there in 1893, in which the insurgents captured government warships in the harbor, and there was thereafter more or less firing between such ships and forts and batteries on shore, and such a condition of affairs was produced by the hostilities as to render it practically impossible to receive the cargo with the dispatch contemplated by the charter, either because of the intrinsic danger incident to unloading or the inability to procure the necessary men to do the work, such condition constituted an unavoidable hindrance, and, to the extent that it prevented compliance with the contract, excused performance, and relieved the charterers from liability under the provision requiring them to pay demurrage for detention by the default of themselves or their agent. Burrill v. Crossman (U. S.) 130 Fed. 765, 765.

UNCONDITIONAL CONTRACT IN WRITING.

An order for money drawn by a municipal corporation upon its treasurer, payable upon demand and without condition, is in effect a promissory note, and is an "unconditional contract in writing," within the meaning of a statute providing that, whenever defendant in justice court on an unconditional contract in writing makes defense, he shall make such defense at the first term. Morgan v. City of Cohutta, 47 S. E. 971, 972, 120 Ga. 423.

UNDUE INFLUENCE.

The word "undue," as used in connection with "undue influence" as affecting the validity of a will, is not used in the sense lexicographers give to it as one of the popular meanings, disproportionate, inordinate, unworthy, as in the phrases "undue excitement," "undue partiality," "undue attachment," or the like; but as a legal phrase it is used in a stricter sense, as denoting something wrong according to the standard morals which the law enforces in the relations of men, and therefore something legally wrong, something violative of a legal duty; in a word, something illegal. Caughey v. Bridenbaugh, 57 Atl. 821, 823, 208 Pa. 414.

"It is a rule governing in ascertaining whether undue influence was exerted over the mind of a testator that the influence was such that it induced the testator to act contrary to his own wishes, and to make a different will from what he would have made if he had been left free to exercise his own wishes and desires according to his own judgment and discretion. No matter how great the fraud may have been, nor how vigorous and active the influence produced upon and exercised over the testator, they would not avail to set aside the will unless they were sufficient to overcome the volition and desire of the testator. Not every influence brought to bear upon the mind of the testator by a beneficiary will be classed as undue influence. Persuasion, entreaty, cajolery, importunity, argument, intercession, and solicitation are permissible, and cannot be held to be undue influence unless they subverted and overthrew the will of the testator, and caused him to do a thing that he did not desire to do. No more could a will made from mere persuasion, entreaty, or argument, which has been weighed and considered by the testator, and his own mind made up and voluntarily formed, be classed as undue influence, than could the arguments of counsel to a court, which are weighed and considered in arriving at a just conclusion as to the law of the case, be designated 'undue influence.'" Wetz v. Schneider (Tex.) 78 S. W. 394, 396.

On an issue as to undue influence in the making of a will, the court said that the rule as to undue influence was well settled in the state, and was very aptly stated in Riley v. Sherwood, 144 Mo. 354, 45 S. W. 1077, as follows: "In this state the rule is established that such influence must be such as amounts to overpersuasion, coercion, or force, destroying the free agency and will power of testator. It must not be merely the influence of affection or attachment, nor the desire of gratifying the wishes of one beloved and trusted by the testator." Hughes v. Rader (Mo.) 82 S. W. 32, 53.

Undue influence which will invalidate a gift must be something which destroys the free agency of the donor, and substitutes therefor the will of another. What constitutes such undue influence cannot be precisely defined, and each case must be determined upon the consideration of its special facts. The means employed and extent of the influence are immaterial if their effect be to destroy the free agency of the donor. The ultimate facts of undue influence may, and in many cases can only, be established by circumstantial evidence. Prescott v. Johnson, 97 N. W. 891, 892, 91 Minn. 273.

UNEQUIVOCAL EVIDENCE.

The expression "unequivocal evidence" in the syllabus and opinion in Re McCoy's Will, 89 N. W. 665, 64 Neb. 150, was the equivalent of "evidence of an unequivocal act or conduct." A simple preponderance of the evidence is all that is required to maintain an issue of fact in a civil action. Davidson's Estate v. Davidson (Neb.) 97 N. W. 797.

UNFAIR.

The word "unfair" in a publication may sometimes mean dishonest, and when, by a colloquium or innuendo, shown to have this meaning, might give rise to a cause of action; but it does not necessarily involve so serious a charge. It may convey the idea of discrimination. It may mean that one is prejudiced or partial. It may mean illiberal, hard, ungenerous, or exacting. A publication stating the facts and reasons why defendants placed plaintiffs on an unfair list, taken as a whole, casts no imputation upon plaintiffs' character as individuals or upon their solvency or standing as merchants, and is not libelous. Watters v. Retail Clerks' Union No. 479, 47 S. E. 911, 912, 120 Ga. 424.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

Unfair competition in trade is not confined to the imitation of a trade-mark, but takes as many forms as the ingenuity of man can devise. It may consist of the imitation of a sign, a trade-name, a label, a wrapper, a package, or almost any other imitation by a business rival of some distinguishing ear-mark of an established business, which the court can see is calculated to mislead the public, and lead purchasers into the belief that they are buying the goods of the first manufacturer. The first question is whether there is an imitation in fact, and this must be determined by inspection of the rival symbols or devices. It is not to be expected, of course, that there will ever be an exact copy. The imitator will always seek to introduce enough difference to justify a claim that there has been no imitation, while incorporating enough similarities to carry the general effect of the original design to the mind of the unwary purchaser. Cornelius v. Ferguson (S. D.) 97 N. W. 388, 390.

UNFAVORABLE.

See "Very Unfavorable."

UNFORTUNATE.

The word "unfortunate," as used in a devise of a fund in a will to be used in organizing and maintaining a home for bettering the condition and comforting the unfortunate widows and orphans of a certain city, is used in the sense of poor or indigent, and a devise for the indigent widows and orphans of a city is good, and not void on the theory that the class named is too indefinite. Gidley v. Loverberg (Tex.) 79 S. W. 831, 835.

UNIVERSAL MALICE.

By "universal malice" we do not mean a malicious purpose to take the life of all persons, but it is that depravity of the human heart which determines to take life upon slight or insufficient provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim. Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 26, 30.

UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

A tenant does not become primarily an unlawful detainer upon breach of the covenant in the lease to pay rent, but rather upon failure to pay after demand by a legal notice in the statutory time. This constitutes him an unlawful detainer of the premises. Hunter v. Porter (Idaho) 77 Pac. 434, 438.

UNLAWFULLY CARRYING A PISTOL.

To constitute the offense of unlawfully carrying a pistol the pistol must be carried on or about defendant's person. Davis v. State (Tex.) 82 S. W. 512.

UNNECESSARY DANGER.

See "Exposure to Unnecessary Danger."

UNOCCUPIED.

The terms "unoccupied" and "unappropriated" refer to land that is not in the possession of one who claims the right of possession by virtue of a compliance with the law. Conn v. Oberto (Colo.) 76 Pac. 369, 370.

UNPROFESSIONAL CONDUCT.

An attorney was declared to be guilty of unprofessional conduct who represented to an ignorant man, who had employed him to obtain for him a divorce, that he filed a bill and obtained a decree of divorce, and misled and deceived him by delivering to him a copy of the fictitious decree, and represented to the mother of the woman whom he was about to make his second wife that her prospective son-in-law was divorced, when he had not filed a bill nor taken any steps toward obtaining for his client a divorce, and when he had not been divorced. People v. Belinski, 69 N. E. 5, 6, 205 Ill. 564.

UNREASONABLY RESISTED.

Where, in an action against executors on a note indorsed by testator, the only question litigated was whether testator had waived protest, and such fact was established by a son of testator, who was also the father of the executor and brother of the executrix, whose testimony was not disputed, and whose whereabouts were at all times known to defendants, a finding that payment was "unreasonably resisted," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1836, allowing plaintiff costs where his claim has been unreasonably resisted, was warranted. Pauley v. Millsbaugh, 88 N. Y. Supp. 565, 567, 95 App. Div. 208.

UNSOUND MIND.

The words "lunacy" and "unsound mind" have been bent out of their technical sense in some instances, a legislative construction being given thereto in harmony with the broad views of courts that they include every phase of unsound mind rendering one incapable of caring for himself or his property. In re Streiff, 97 N. W. 189, 191, 119 Wis. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 903.

UNTIL.

The word "until," in New York City Charter, § 1401 (Laws 1901, p. 599, c. 466), providing that judges of the Court of Special Sessions shall hold office until December 31st in the years mentioned, was inclusive. People v. Fitzgerald, 89 N. Y. Supp. 268, 96 App. Div. 242.

UPPER STORIES.

In a statute providing that owners of buildings more than two stories high shall provide convenient exits from the different upper stories, the term "upper stories" means all stories above the ground floor. Rose v. King, 49 Ohio St. 213, 221, 30 N. E. 267, 15 L. R. A. 160.

URBAN HOMESTEAD.

In order to constitute land an "urban homestead," it is not necessary that it should have been originally surveyed or platted by the city. It is sufficient that the land is recognized as a part of the plat or plan. It is unimportant that the lots of which it is composed do not conform to the dimensions or shape of lots generally in the platted parts of the city, where its use, controlled by the city and surroundings, impress the property with the character of an urban homestead. A contention, in a suit by the owner to enjoin the sale of such property on execution, that such lot constituted a part of a rural homestead, is untenable. Harris v. Matthews (Tex.) 81 S. W. 1198, 1204.

USABLE VALUE.

"Usable value" means the value of the use of the premises to the occupant, as distinct from the rental of the premises in a lease by the owner to a tenant. Bates v. Holbrook, 85 N. Y. Supp. 673, 677, 89 App. Div. 548.

USE.

See "Public Use"; "Religious Use."

USE AND OCCUPATION.

See "Action for Use and Occupation."

USED.

The word "used," in a question in an application for life insurance, "Have you ever used spirits, wine, or malt liquors to excess?" does not imply an occasional indulgence in strong drink; it means to be accustomed; to make a practice of. It is a word which is synonymous with custom or habit or habitual indulgence. A negative answer to the question does not constitute a misrepresentation or false statement which will avoid the policy issued thereon merely because it is shown that the insured had sometimes, but not habitually, drank to excess. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Exchange Bank of Macon (U. S.) 126 Fed. 360, 361, 61 C. C. A. 310.

USING FOR HIRE.

persons, the hirers, did not take temporary possession, but where the owners handled the wagon and team for pay. Swetman v. City of Covington (Ky.) 82 S. W. 386.

USUAL RESIDENCE.

"Usual residence" means customary; common." State v. Snyder, 82 S. W. 12, 27, 182 Mo. 462 (quoting State v. Washburn, 48 Mo. 240).

USUALLY RESIDENT WITHIN.

Inhabitant of, synonymous, see "Inhabitant of."

USUFRUCT.

The term "usufruct" signifies the right of enjoying a thing, the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profit, utility, and advantage which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. Schwartz v. Gerhardt, 75 Pac. 698, 699, 44 Or. 425 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

UTILITY.

See "Public Utility."

UTMOST CARE AND SKILL.

The words "utmost care and skill" do not mean the utmost care and diligence which men are capable of exercising, but mean the utmost care consistent with the carrier's undertaking, and with due regard for all the other matters which should be considered in conducting the business. Ilges v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 93, 94, 102 Mo. App. 529 (citing Dodge v. Boston & B. S. S. Co., 148 Mass. 207, 19 N. E. 373, 2 L. R. A. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 541).

In an action against a street railroad company for personal injuries, the court instructed that the defendant was bound to exercise toward plaintiff "the utmost care, skill, and vigilance" to carry her safely, and also, on her arrival at destination, to stop the car at the usual stopping place, or some other place where it was suitable for plaintiff to alight; and if defendant's servants in charge of the car failed to exercise the utmost care, skill, and vigilance, and by reason thereof did not stop at the usual place, but beyond it at a place unsafe and unsuitable for alighting, and plaintiff was consequently injured while alighting, and while she herself was exercising ordinary care, defendant was liable. Defendant insisted that the phrase, "utmost care, skill, and vigilance," overstated the care defendant was bound to observe, and called for the highest conceivable care, and that the court should have defined the expression "utmost care and skill" as the care and skill which very cautious men exhibit in similar circumstances. The appellate court, in passing on defendant's objections, said that that objection had often been raised to instructing juries by the words used in the present case, and that it was not the best or most approved form of charge, and that it was well to advise the jury that the law means by "utmost care and skill" the degree of those qualities used by very cautious men in the same vocation. Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 314, 317, 102 Mo. App. 573.

VACANCY.

The word "vacancy," as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the Constitution or law, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein. State v. Acton (Mont.) 77 Pac. 299, 300.

The term "vacancy," as used in a constitutional provision that the filling of all vacancies not otherwise directed or provided by the Constitution shall be made in such manner as the Legislature shall direct, cannot be made to cover the case of an office of which there is an incumbent in possession, and in the discharge of his duties, merely by the device of extending his term. State v. Trewhitt (Tenn.) 82 S. W. 480, 482.

Laws 1903, c. 363, redistricted Maury county, and extinguished a number of civil districts by merging them with other original districts, reducing the number from 25 to 9. The justices of the peace for four districts were left unaffected. The places of the justices for the other five districts could be filled by an election held after 10 days' notice given by the proper authorities; for, notwithstanding these five are new districts, yet the places to be filled in them are "vacancies," within the statute. State v. Akin (Tenn.) 79 S. W. 805, 806 (citing Condon v. Maloney, 108 Tenn. 82, 65 S. W. 871).

VALUE.

The word "value," as used in the Code of 1873, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 104, providing that if any person by false pretense shall obtain from another person any money, goods, etc., with intent to cheat, and if the value of the property or promissory note or written instrument or security fraudulently obtained shall be $30 or upwards, such person so offending shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary, etc., means the amount of the liability expressed, assumed, or incurred by means of the written instrument to which the signature was fraudulently obtained. Moline v. State (Neb.) 100 N. W. 810, 812.

VEIN.

See "Known Vein."

"Vein of coal," "coal bed," and "coal seam" are used as equivalent terms. Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193.

VENDOR'S LIEN.

A vendor's lien "is simply the vendor's right to enforce his claim for the purchase money against or out of the vendor's equitable estate," not his legal estate, for he has none. Flanagan Estate v. Great Cent. Land Co. (Or.) 77 Pac. 485, 487 (citing Security Savings & Trust Co. v. Mackenzie, 33 Or. 209, 52 Pac. 1046).

"It is indispensably necessary to the existence of a vendor's lien that the parties should stand in the relation to each other of vendor and vendee. It arises out of and is incident to the purchase, and is founded upon an implied trust between the vendor and purchaser, and the law does not authorize the vendee to transfer this lien with the note taken for the purchase money, even though he expressly proposes to do so." A loan of money to pay the purchase price of land does not create a vendor's lien in the lender. Hardin v. Hooks (Ark.) 81 S. W. 386, 387 (quoting Hecht v. Spears, 27 Ark. 229, 11 Am. Rep. 784).

VERDICT.

See "Motion for Verdict."

An inquest of insanity held by two justices of the peace upon the alleged insanity of any person or inhabitant of their county, and their certificate that said person therein named is insane and a proper subject for treatment in the hospital for the insane, is not a judgment of a court or equivalent thereto, nor is such finding and certificate equivalent to a verdict of a jury or a finding of a court that such person is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own estate; its purpose being to establish the fact that such person is entitled to admission to a hospital for the insane for treatment. Leinas v. Weiss (Ind.) 71 N. E. 254, 255, 256.

VERY UNFAVORABLE.

To say that the general character of a person for truth and veracity is "very unfavorable" is in common parlance but another mode of saying that it is bad in that regard. Martin's Ex'r v. Martin, 25 Ala. 201, 211.

VESTED ESTATE.

A future estate is vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property or the determination of all intermediate or preceding estates. In re Ryder, 89 N. Y. Supp. 460, 462, 43 Misc. Rep. 476 (citing Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547, § 80).

The rule for determining whether an estate bestowed by a will is vested or contingent is that, where the time of division or payment is of the substance of the gift, the legacy is contingent; when time is mentioned only as a qualifying clause of the payment or division, then the legacy is vested; or, in other words, legacies payable after the death of the testator are either vested or contingent, and, when the testator annexes time to the payment only, the legacy will be vested, but, if of the gift itself, it will be contingent. Johnson v. Terry, 36 South. 775, 776, 139 Ala. 614.

VESTED REMAINDER.

See, also, "Contingent Remainder."

"A vested remainder is an estate to take effect after another estate for years, life, or in tail, which is so limited that, if that particular estate were to expire or end in any way at the present time, some certain person who is in esse and answered the description of the remainderman during the continuance of the particular estate would thereupon become entitled to the immediate possession, irrespective of the concurrence of any collateral contingency." A testator devised real estate to his daughter for life, remainder to her children, if any surviving her, otherwise to testator's brothers and sisters, and, in case any one or more or all of them should be dead at the time of his death, the share of such deceased brother or sister should go to and be equally divided among his or her children, share and share alike. At the time of the suit for the partition, testator's daughter, though married, was 50 years of age, and had never had any children. It was held that the remainder to testator's brothers and sisters was not a vested remainder, but a contingent one, and hence no partition could be had during the daughter's life. Ruddell v. Wren, 70 N. E. 751, 753, 208 Ill. 508.

"A vested remainder is where a present interest passes to a certain and definite person, but to be enjoyed in futuro. * * * It is a rule of law that an estate shall be held to vest at the earliest possible period, unless there be a clear manifestation of the intention of the testator to the contrary. Where there is a devise to a class of persons to take effect in enjoyment at a future period, the estate vests in the persons as they come in esse, subject to open and let in others as they are born afterwards." Where a testator who died in March, 1902, by his will bequeathed his residuary estate in trust, the income to be paid to his wife for life, and after her death to be divided between his children then living, the children of any deceased child to take in place of their parent, all children and the heirs of any deceased took a vested interest on the testator's death, which became subject to the legacy tax imposed by section 29 of the war revenue act of 1898, Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 464 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2307]. Land Title & Trust Co. v. McCoach (U. S.) 127 Fed. 381, 385 (quoting Doe v. Considine, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 458, 474, 18 L. Ed. 869).

"The true criterion of a vested remainder is the existence in an ascertained person of a present, fixed right of future enjoyment of the estate, limited in remainder, which right will take effect in possession immediately on the determination of the precedent estate, irrespective of any collateral event, provided the estate in remainder does not determine before the precedent estate." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 389. Mr. Washburn, in his work on Real Property, says: "The broad distinction between vested and contingent remainders is this: In the first, there is some person in esse, known and ascertained, who, by the will or deed creating the estate, is to take and enjoy the estate upon the expiration of the existing particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat. In the second, it depends upon the happening of a contingent event whether the estate limited as a remainder shall ever take effect at all. The event may either happen, or it may not happen until after the particular estate upon which it depended shall have determined, so that the estate in remainder will never take effect." A vested remainder is one "when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment, or a fixed right of future enjoyment." 4 Kent, Comm. 194. "That a remainder cannot be vested unless there be some certain person or persons in being in whom it can be regarded as vested is a proposition as to which, upon principle, it would seem that there could be little doubt, and that such is the law is recognized by the most authoritative writers and by numerous decisions." 1 Tiffany's Modern Law of Real Prop. 120." Testator devised real estate to his wife for life with remainder to J., adding that, on the latter dying before distribution of the property, his issue, if he left any, otherwise his heirs, should receive his share. Held, that J. took a vested remainder, so that he and the life tenant could give a perfect title. Callison v. Morris, 98 N. W. 780, 781, 123 Iowa, 297.

The distinction between vested and contingent remainders is clearly stated in the case of Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. (10 Rich.) 376, as follows: "According to the elementary writers, a vested remainder is one which is limited to an ascertained person in being, whose right to the estate is fixed and certain, and does not depend on the happening of any future event, but whose enjoyment and possession is postponed to some future time. A contingent remainder, on the other hand, is one which is limited to a person not in being or not ascertained, or, if limited to an ascertained person, it is so limited that his right to the estate depends upon some contingency in the future. So that the most marked distinction between the two kinds of remainders is that in one case the right to the estate is fixed and certain, though the right to the possession is deferred to some future period, but is dependent upon the happening of some future contingency. As it has been well expressed, 'It is not the uncertainty of the estate in the future, but the uncertainty of the right to such enjoyment, which marks the difference between a contingent and a vested remainder.'" A trust deed granted a fee to the trustee for the benefit of the grantor for life, and provided that after her death the trustee should convey the property to certain named children and grandchildren, or, if any of them died before conveyance, leaving children, such children should take the share of their parents. The parties named took a vested, and not a contingent, remainder. Woodley v. Calhoun, 48 S. E. 272, 273, 69 S. C. 285.

A testator who died in March, 1901, by his will bequeathed his residuary estate in trust, the income to be paid to his wife during her life, with remainder to his children living at the time of her death, and the lawful issue of any deceased child or children; such issue taking the share only their parent would have taken if living. Held, that the remainder so created was not vested, not being limited to "persons in esse and ascertained," but was contingent, being limited to persons who could not be ascertained until the death of the wife, and that such bequests were not subject to the legacy tax imposed by section 29 of the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 464 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2307]; the wife being still living at the time of the taking effect of the amendment of June 27, 1902, c. 1160, § 8, 32 Stat. 406 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1903, p. 282], exempting from the tax "any contingent beneficial interest not absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment" prior to July 1, 1902. Land Title & Trust Co. v. McCoach (U. S.) 129 Fed. 901 (reversing [U. S.] 127 Fed. 381).

VESTED RIGHT.

When the phrase "a vested right" or "a vested interest" is used in other relations, it may with reasonable precision be held to mean some right or interest in property that has become fixed or established, and is no longer open to doubt or controversy. Graham v. Great Falls Water Power & Town-Site Co. (Mont.) 76 Pac. 808, 810 (citing Evans-Snider-Buel Co. v. McFadden, 105 Fed. 293, 44 C. C. A. 494, 58 L. R. A. 900).

VICE PRINCIPAL

A vice principal is the representative of the master, for whose acts and negligence the master is responsible. Southern Ry. Co. v. Cheaves (Miss.) 36 South. 691, 697.

"Vice principal" is defined as one who performs personal duties of the master, which cannot be delegated, such as the duty to provide reasonably safe machinery and appliances and a reasonably safe place in which to work, to provide for inspection and repair of premises and appliances, and to inform immature, ignorant, or unskilled servants of the dangers of the situation. Baler v. Selke, 71 N. E. 1074, 1076, 211 Ill. 512 (citing Mobile & O. Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 155 Ill. 78, 39 N. E. 590).

A superintendent or foreman is not necessarily a vice principal simply because he occupies that position. Title or rank has not of itself any special significance in this connection. When engaged with the other servants in the common employment of the master, the superintendent or foreman is a fellow servant, and for his personal negligence the master is not responsible; but when clothed with special authority in respect to the management and conduct of the master's business, a general supervision of it, the control and direction of the other servants under his charge, authority to direct them in the performance of their duties, he is, in respect to those absolute duties the master owes such other servant, a vice principal. He stands in the place of the master in the performance of those duties, whether in reference to the selection of safe instrumentalities, a safe place to work, or in giving proper warning of dangers and risks not known to the servant, or which he could not by the exercise of reasonable prudence discover; and his failure and neglect to perform such absolute duties render the master liable. Dixon v. Union Ironworks, 97 N. W. 375, 377, 90 Minn. 492.

If an employé has no authority from the master, then in the very nature of things he cannot be a vice principal. If he has authority, whether express or implied, his vice principalship depends upon whether the scope of such authority includes attention to or performance of any of the nondelegable duties of the master, and, if so, then whether the alleged negligent act is referable to any of those duties. Beresford v. American Coal Co. (Iowa) 98 N. W. 902, 904.

VICINAGE.

See "Jury of the Vicinage."

VICINITY.

Under a contract releasing a railroad from all liability for loss by fire of any property "situated or hereafter placed in the vicinity of such track, whether such loss result from negligence or other cause," it was error to submit to the jury the question whether the property destroyed by the fire, which started at a point about 40 feet from the track, and consumed lumber situated some 400 feet from that point and near the tracks, the ground being littered with shavings, which it was the duty, under the contract, of the property owner to clear away, was situated in the vicinity of the tracks, but the court should have so declared as a matter of law. Mann v. Pere Marquette R. Co. (Mich.) 97 N. W. 721, 724.

VICINITY CONTRACT.

By the terms of a contract plaintiff was appointed by defendant an agent for the sale of machinery at De Pere, such agent to have the privilege of making sales in the vicinity of De Pere. On the back of the printed form of contract was the following indorsement: "The design of a vicinity contract is to pay an agent the stipulated commission on whatever machinery he may sell under the provisions of the contract, not in the territory of another agent who had the exclusive right to sell in a defined territory." The agent's territory is not a "defined territory," within the meaning of the indorsement on the contract. The business of these agents is not to sit still at some place and sell machinery to those who come to the agent and want to buy it, but to canvass or work their territory; and these vicinity contracts are made rather than those of a definite territory on purpose to meet cases of this kind, where a locality may be more closely connected in a business way with any one village than one near by, and to avoid conflict between different agents from broader territory. McGeehan v. Gaar, Scott & Co. (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1072, 1074.

VIOLATION.

See "Action for the Violation of a Law."

VISITATION.

By "visitation" of a corporation is meant the act of examining into its affairs. The purpose of visitation is to supervise, direct, and control the management of the corporation. An application by a bona fide stockholder of a national bank to examine its books, accounts, and loans, etc., in order to determine the value of his stock, is not a "visitation" of the corporation, within Rev. St. U. S. § 241 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3517], providing that no national banking association shall be subject to any visitorial powers. Harkness v. Guthrie, 75 Pac. 624, 625, 27 Utah, 248.

VIVA VOCE.

The term "viva voce," when applied to elections, is used in opposition or contradistinction to the ballot, and simply means that the voter shall declare himself by voice, instead of by ballot. In re Brearton, 89 N. Y. Supp. 893, 899, 44 Misc. Rep. 247.

VOID.

Null synonymous, see "Null."

"Strictly speaking, 'void' means without legal efficacy; ineffectual to bind parties, or to convey or support a right." A contract which is illegal as contrary to public policy is absolutely void, and may be attacked by any one, and in any proceeding in which it is sought to found rights thereon. A sale by a telephone company of its property and franchises is contrary to public policy and void, in the absence of legislative authority. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Evansville (U. S.) 127 Fed. 187, 197.

The word "void," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 3739 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2508], declaring that all contracts or agreements made in violation of the section shall be void (the section providing that no member of Congress shall directly or indirectly make, hold, or enjoy any contract entered into in behalf of the United States), is obviously used in the sense of null or of no effect from the beginning, and not admitting of ratification. It is not intended to say that contracts or agreements made in violation of the statute shall by only voidable, or that they shall be only capable of being avoided, at the election of some officer of the government. This statute applies to a contract made between the United States and one who was not at the time a member of Congress, and who became such while the contract was still executory in whole or in part, and in such a case, on his becoming a member, the contract was dissolved, and his obligation to further perform it and his right to enjoy further benefit from it were terminated by operation of law. United States v. Dietrich (U. S.) 126 Fed. 671, 674.

A void contract is in fact no contract, since an instrument of that nature does not alter the relations previously existing between the contracting parties, nor will it serve as the foundation of any right. Allen v. City of Davenport (U. S.) 132 Fed. 209, 216.

VOID JUDGMENT.

A void judgment is, "in legal effect, no judgment. By it no rights divest; from it no rights can be obtained. Being worthless in itself, all proceedings founded upon it are equally worthless. It neither binds nor bars any one. The acts performed under it, and all claims flowing out of it, are void. The parties attempting to enforce it may be responsible as trespassers. The purchaser at a sale by virtue of his authority finds himself without title and without redress. The first and most material inquiry in relation to a judgment or decree, then, is in reference to its validity, for, if it be null, no inaction upon the part of the defendant, no resulting equity in the hands of third persons, no power residing in any legislative or other department of the government, can invest it with any of the elements of power or of validity." A default judgment against an infant who has been personally served is voidable only. Cook v. Edson Keith & Co. (Ind. T.) 82 S. W. 918, 919 (quoting Freem. Judgm.).

VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE.

Steeplechase riding is a "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," within an insurance policy providing that it shall not cover injuries caused by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Smith v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 69 N. E. 1059, 185 Mass. 74, 64 L. R. A. 117.

VOLUNTARY PAYMENT.

"A mere protest accompanying a payment does not change its character. It remains, nevertheless, a voluntary payment, and concludes the parties." Gerry v. Siebrecht, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1034, 1036 (citing Flower v. Lance, 59 N. Y. 603).

VOLUNTARY TRUST.

A voluntary trust is an obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in and voluntarily accepted by one for the benefit of another. The trustee stands upon the same footing as a confidential agent or adviser, and, in cases of minor children, much like a guardian. The confidence reposed is the essence of the relation, and the trust is always for the benefit of some third party or parties, or for some particular object. In re Reith's Estate, 77 Pac. 942, 943, 144 Cal. 314.

VOUCHER.

A "voucher," in Sess. Laws 1899, pp. 405, 406, directing that the sheriff shall at the end of each quarter file with the commissioners a sworn statement, accompanied by proper vouchers, showing all expenses incurred, is a written acquittance or receipt showing the payment of the debt. Mombert v. Bannock County (Idaho) 75 Pac. 239, 241.

VULGAR.

A remark to a married woman, "Look me in the eye. Are you satisfied with the man you married?" will not sustain a conviction for using obscene and vulgar language in the presence of a female, where there is nothing in the evidence to indicate that the remark was intended to convey an obscene and vulgar meaning. Roberts v. State, 47 S. E. 511, 512, 120 Ga. 177.

WAGE-EARNER.

See "Independent Contractor."

WAGER.

A wager is "a contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening of an uncertain event." "A wager is an agreement between parties differing as to an uncertain fact or forecast of a future event." In an action to recover money from defendants, obtained from the plaintiff by means of inducing him to believe that a foot race was "fixed," so that one party was sure to win, and persuading the plaintiff to participate to the extent of betting the money of one side to the simulated race as if it were his own, on the assurance that he should receive 20 per cent. of the sum won, he being ignorant at the time that the money all belonged to the parties on both sides of the pretended wager, held that, although he was in delicto, by consenting to act in such deceitful attitude, he was not in pari delicto with the conspirators, and is therefore entitled to recover back the sum of $5,000 which the conspirators persuaded him to intrust to the possession of one of them as a stakeholder, not to be bet on the race, but to be used to make a showing by the stakeholder in the event of a count of the stake money being called for by one of the feigned bettors. Wright v. Stewart (U. S.) 130 Fed. 905, 920 (quoting Black, Law Dict.; Bish. Cont. par. 530).

Where money is deposited with stock-brokers as a margin, with the understanding that there is to be no actual delivery of stock, though in case of a purchase there could be delivery if desired, and that the contract was to be adjusted by the payment of the difference between the price named therein and the market price at the time of settlement, the contract is a wager. Wheeler v. Metropolitan Stock Exchange, 56 Atl. 754, 72 N. H. 315.

The essence of a wager is that each party stands to win or lose on the result, and that the gains depend on the event. Thompson v. Williamson (N. J.) 53 Atl. 602, 604.

WAGES.

See "Laborer for Wages."

Earnings synonymous, see "Earnings."

Salary synonymous, see "Salary."

The compensation received by a man who owned a team, wagons, and a plow, with which he worked by the day for different employers, as he could obtain work, earning usually from $9 to $15 per week, and working alone when he could not find work for his team, must fall within the meaning of either "wages," or "hire," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 27, 30 Stat. 545 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3420], defining a wage earner to be one who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,500 per year. In re Yoder (U. S.) 127 Fed. 894, 895.

WAGON.

The word "wagon" is synonymous with the word "carriage," and may be used to designate any wheeled vehicle intended to be drawn by horses. Luce v. Hassam (Vt.) 58 Atl. 725, 726.

The words "wagon" and "cart" are generic terms, and mean almost any vehicle, whether used for the transportation of persons or property. Luce v. Hassam (Vt.) 58 Atl. 725, 726.

WAIVE.

To "waive" means in law to relinquish intentionally a known right, or intentionally to do an act inconsistent with claiming it. Chamberlain v. City of Saginaw (Mich.) 97 N. W. 156, 157.

WAIVER.

See "Implied Waiver."

A waiver is a voluntary relinquishment of the right that one party has in his relations to another. Astrich v. German-American Ins. Co. (U. S.) 131 Fed. 13, 20.

"Waiver involves an intentional relinquishment of a known right." Griffith v. Newell, 48 S. E. 259, 260, 69 S. C. 300 (citing Carolina Grocery Co. v. Moore, 63 S. C. 184, 188, 41 S. E. 88).

"Waiver" has generally been defined by the courts as the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. Without the existence of a right, there can be no abandonment, for there would be nothing to abandon. Statements of local agents of a fire insurance company that one of them was authorized to adjust a loss, and the action of this agent in making out proofs of loss, and professing to adjust the claim, were not a waiver by the company of a provision of the policy that action thereon must be commenced within one year after loss. Barry & Finan Lumber Co. v. Citizens' Ins. Co. (Mich.) 98 N. W. 761, 762 (citing Ostrander, Ins. § 57).

"Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right." Where, in an action against a nonresident in a state court, its attorney was directed to appear solely for the purpose of removing the cause to the federal court, and on the last day for filing an answer for the cause the attorney filed a petition for removal and removal bond, and applied to the judge for an order of removal, and when, over objection, the court postponed a hearing of the application for removal to the following week, the attorney, believing it necessary to sustain his right to remove, and for that purpose only, orally asked for and obtained an extension of time to plead, such application for time should be construed as an application for an extension of time to appear for the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction, or otherwise, and did not constitute an appearance sufficient to confer jurisdiction, for there was no relinquishment of the intention to deny the right of the state court to proceed in the cause. Waters v. Central Trust Co. of New York (U. S.) 126 Fed. 469, 472, 62 C. C. A. 45 (citing Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115; Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co., 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240).

WALL

As building, see "Building."

WANT.

A statement by a surety to the holder of a note, "I want it settled," comes far short of being a notice or request to forthwith proceed and collect the note, and may be said to be simply the expression of a wish or desire which every honest man would entertain with reference to a pecuniary obligation resting on him. Bowling v. Chambers (Colo.) 77 Pac. 16, 19.

WANTON INJURY.

"Mere proof of an injury caused by breach of duty to exercise ordinary care is not sufficient to establish a cause of action for a wanton injury, and a person cannot be permitted, in an action charging the latter, to recover for the former, if seasonable objections are made." Turtenwald v. Wiscon- sin Lakes Ice & Cartage Co., 98 N. W. 948, 949, 121 Wis. 65 (citing Wilson v. Chippewa Valley Electric R. Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 536, 66 L. R. A. 912).

WANTON NEGLIGENCE.

Wanton and reckless negligence on the part of a servant of a railroad company in dealing with a trespasser on its train "includes something more than ordinary inadvertence. In its essence it is like a willful, intentional wrong. It is illustrated by an act which otherwise might be unobjectionable, but which is liable or likely to do great harm, and which is done in a wanton and reckless disregard of the probable injurious consequences." Plaintiff, a boy of from eight to nine years of age, who lived near a railroad and was familiar with trains, was injured in jumping off a slowly moving freight car on which he was stealing a ride. The immediate cause of his jumping was an order of the brakeman to get off "or I'll break your neck." There was no such apparent probability of the injury caused as to indicate in the language of the brakeman wanton and reckless negligence. Bjornquist v. Boston & A. R. Co., 70 N. E. 53, 55, 185 Mass. 130.

WANTONLY.

Recklessly synonymous, see "Recklessly."

By the expression "wantonly," as used in an indictment for slander by imputing to a woman a want of chastity, is meant that the words charged to have been uttered by defendant must have been uttered regardless of the consequences, in a reckless manner, or under such circumstances as evinced a mischievous intent and without excuse. Rainwater v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 38, 39.

WAREHOUSE.

A warehouse "is a house in which wares or goods are kept; a storehouse." Adams County v. Kansas City & O. Ry. Co. (Neb.) 99 N. W. 245, 247 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

WARPING.

Warping is not a part of the process of weaving. It must precede that of weaving, and its object is to prepare the threads and yarns for the weaving process. Hoeninghaus v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 570, 571.

WARRANT.

See "Convey and Warrant."

"Warrants" and "orders" for payment of money are synonymous. A warrant is an order for the payment of money. State v. Woods, 36 South. 626, 627, 112 La. 617.

The word "warranted," as used in Code, art. 81, § 146 (Acts 1808, p. 819, c. 275), obliging a person loaning money on a mortgage on property in the state to make affidavit that he has not required, and will not require, the mortgagor to pay the taxes on the interest warranted to be paid in advance, etc., was intended to mean "covenanted," and the section, as amended by Acts 1902, p. 33, c. 26, uses the word "covenanted." The section does not apply to a mortgage to secure the purchase money of the mortgaged article, interest not being covenanted for, or, so far as appears, secretly or indirectly provided for. Salabes v. J. Castelberg & Sons (Md.) 57 Atl. 20, 22, 64 L. R. A. 800.

WARRANT OF ATTACHMENT.

"A warrant of attachment is meeme process, and is nothing more than a provisional remedy. It is ancillary to the relief sought in the principal action, and is intended to preserve the property or its proceeds if it has been sold as perishable in the hands of the sheriff or in the custody of the law to abide the event of the suit." Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Sloan (N. C.) 48 S. E. 577.

WARRANTY.

See "Affirmative Warranty"; "Express Warranty"; "Promissory Warranty."

"Warranties in insurance law are of two kinds—affirmative and promissory. Affirmative warranties consist of a representation in the policy of a fact. Promissory warranties are those that require that something shall be done or not done after the policy takes effect." Rosenthal Clothing & Dry Goods Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 1021.

A warranty in insurance is "a stipulation or agreement on the part of the insured party, in the nature of a condition." A stipulation in a fire policy that the insurance company should not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by order of any civil authority, is not a "warranty," within Civ. Code Cal. §§ 2607, 2608, providing that a statement in a policy of a matter relating to the thing insured or to the risk as a fact, and a statement which imports that it is intended to do or not to do a thing which materially affects the risk, is a warranty; the statute not creating any new definition of warranty in insurance. Conner v. Manchester Assur. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 743, 744 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

WASTE.

"Waste" may be defined as the "doing of those acts which cause lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance, or the neglect or omission to do those acts which are required to prevent lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance. The term is not an arbitrary one, to be applied inflexibly, without regard to the quality of the estate, or the relation to it of the person charged to have committed the wrong, but the question as to whether it has been committed in a given case is to be determined in view of the particular facts and circumstances appearing in that case." A mortgagor removed from the mortgaged premises, giving notice of such fact to the mortgagee, and he took possession and rented the premises. At that time the buildings, fences, etc., were out of repair, and while the mortgagee was in possession he made no repairs, but on an accounting between the parties it did not appear that the premises had been in any way permanently injured owing to failure to make repairs. Since the mortgagor was credited on the accounting with any sum that might have been spent for repairs, she was not damaged, and a finding that the mortgagee had not been guilty of permissive waste was correct. Chapman v. Cooney, 57 Atl. 928, 929, 25 R. L. 657.

WATER.

See "Appropriation of Water"; "Inland Waters"; "Percolating Water"; "Public Water."

WATER COURSE.

The elements of a water course are definite banks, and with an obvious bed or channel showing the presence of running water at times, anyway. Erwin v. Erie R. Co., 90 N. Y. Supp. 315, 317.

"A stream does not cease to be a water course, and become mere surface water, because at a certain point it spreads over a level meadow several rods in width, and flows for a distance without defined banks before flowing again in a definite channel." Harrington v. Demaris (Or.) 77 Pac. 603, 606 (citing Gould, Waters [3d Ed.] § 264).

WATERPROOF CLOTH.

Woolen or worsted fabrics known as "cravenette cloths," which have been subjected to a process to render them nonabsorbent, are dutiable under Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule J, par. 369 (26 Stat. 593), as "waterproof cloth." Brown & Eadie v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 446.

WATERS OF THE STATE.

In Pen. Code, § 636, providing that every person who shall set any net for catching fish in waters of the state shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, the words "waters of the state" refer to the waters coming within the regulating power of the state concerning the fish therein. People v. Miles, 77 Pac. 666, 669, 143 Cal. 636.

WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

See "Navigable Water of the United States."

WATERWORKS COMPANY.

As quasal corporation, see "Quasal Corporation."

WAY.

See "Private Way"; "Public Way."
Private road distinguished, see "Private Road."

The character of a "way," whether it is public or private, is determined by the extent of the right to use it, and not by the extent to which that right is exercised. If all the people have the right to use it, it is a public way, although the number who may have occasion to exercise the right is very small. Railroad Commission of Texas v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex.) 80 S. W. 102, 104 (citing Phillips v. Watson, 63 Iowa, 28, 18 N. W. 659).

WAYLEAVE.

In 12 Ency. of Laws of England, 575, it is said: "The term 'wayleave' means a right of way. * * * In considering the extent to which a wayleave may be used, the very object of the grant or reservation to which it is ancillary must be borne in mind, and this may involve a user of a different kind from that which was actually in contemplation at the time of the grant or reservation." Jones & Co. v. Venable (Ga.) 47 S. E. 549, 551.

WEAPON.

See "Deadly Weapon."

WEARING APPAREL.

Neither a watch and chain, nor a sword and belt, constituting a part of Masonic regalia, are exempt to a bankrupt as "wearing apparel," under the Vermont statute. In re Everleth (U. S.) 129 Fed. 620.

Lace neckwear is included in "wearing apparel made wholly or in part of lace," as that phrase is used in paragraph 339, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, 80 Stat. 181 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1662]. Goldenberg Bros. & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 130 Fed. 108, 109.

WEED.

"The word 'weed' has a common, everyday meaning to the mind of every man. It may also have a technical meaning to the botanist or the chemist. It is a nuisance to the farmer, the gardener, or the owner of a well-kept lawn, notwithstanding that some weeds may contain valuable medicinal properties, which, when extracted, may be of benefit and profit to mankind. But it is a fact of common information, of which courts may properly take judicial notice, that a high, rank growth of weeds in a populous community has a strong tendency to produce sickness and to impair the health of the inhabitants, and so may be a nuisance in such locality, notwithstanding they may be comparatively innocuous in the country, when far away from human habitation." A city ordinance made it a misdemeanor for any owner, lessee, etc., of any part of any lot to allow or maintain on any such lot any growth of weeds to a height of over one foot, and defined the word "weeds," as therein used, to include all rank vegetable growth which exhale unpleasant and noxious odors, and also high and rank vegetable growth that may conceal filthy deposits. Held, that a conviction for the violation of such ordinance was proper under evidence tending to prove that, at the time the city gave defendant notice to cut down the weeds on his lot, there were weeds on the lot from four to five feet high, about one-third of which were sunflowers, the notice to cut down the weeds having been given in July. City of St. Louis v. Galt, 77 S. W. 876, 877, 179 Mo. 8, 63 L. R. A. 778.

WEEK.

See "Successive Weeks."

WELL FOUNDED.

In discussing the contention that the trial court erred in charging that a reasonable doubt must be "well founded" it is said: "The expression is certainly a loose one, and not to be commended. The term 'well founded' has a double significance. It may mean founded on good reasons, or it may be defined as not baseless or having no support. In the latter sense the instruction is not erroneous, for it is well settled that a doubt, to be reasonable, must have some basis either in the evidence, or from a lack of evidence on some material proposition. In other words, it is not a barely possible one, nor one sought after, not a capricious nor an imaginary one, nor one based upon a surmise or groundless conjecture. In other words, it must be a rational or substantial one, having some basis in reason, although it need not be such a one as the jurors may be able to give a reason for." State v. Mahoney, 97 N. W. 1089, 1091, 122 Iowa, 168.

WEST HALF.

See "Half."

WESTERLY.

The word "westerly," as used in an order of the county court incorporating a village, which describes the commons as "on the west side of said limits one quarter of a mile in a westerly direction," should be construed to mean due west, rendering the description definite and certain. State ex rel. Chandler v. Huff, 79 S. W. 1010, 1012, 105 Mo. App. 354.

WHARFAGE.

Wharfage is the use of a wharf furnished in the ordinary course of navigation. The James T. Furber (U. S.) 129 Fed. 808, 810.

WHEN SO MADE.

The words "when so made," in Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, § 590, and Gen. St. 1897, § 4843, providing that the case, when so made, shall be settled, certified, and signed by the judge, evidently include all the preliminary steps to the presentation of the case to the judge for settlement. Butler v. Scott (Kan.) 75 Pac. 496, 497.

WHENEVER.

"Whenever" is an adverb of time. It is not the equivalent of 'in any case.' Its meaning, and the only meaning given to it by lexicographers, is 'at whatever time.'" As used in a constitutional provision that, whenever the requisite majority of the judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals sitting are unable to agree upon a decision, the case shall be reheard by a full bench, it does not mean in any case in which the requisite majority of the judges sitting, etc., but means at whatever time it may happen that the requisite majority of the judges sitting, etc., the case shall be reheard. Funkhouser v. Spahr, 46 S. E. 378, 379, 102 Va. 308.

WHERE.

The word "where," as used in the statute providing that notice of the time and place of taking depositions shall be served on the adverse party or his attorney, where such party or his attorney resides in the state, is synonymous with "if," and assumes the condition of one or the other—either adverse party or litigant—residing in the state. Swink v. Anthony (Mo.) 81 S. W. 915, 916.

WHEREUPON.

The word "whereupon," as used in a municipal charter directing that, on ordinances being passed over his veto, the mayor shall cause them to be published, whereupon they shall be of force as law, means "after which," and the meaning of the provision is that after the commands of the law as thus given have been obeyed, and not before, the ordinances shall be of the force of law. Mayor & Board of Trustees of Town of New Iberia v. Moss Hotel Co., 36 South. 552, 553, 112 La. 525.

WHILE.

In Batts' Ann. St. art. 4560ea, protecting persons, while engaged in the work of operating cars, against the negligence of any servant or employé of the company, the word "while" places a time limit on the protection, and means "during the time such employé may be engaged in the work of operating the locomotive." Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Howard (Tex.) 80 S. W. 229, 230.

WILL.

See "Found with the Will"; "Good Will." Desire equivalent, see "Desire."

WILLFUL—WILLFULLY.

The term "willful," when applied to the intent with which an act is done, implies a purpose or willingness to do the act. State v. McGahey, 97 N. W. 835, 837, 12 N. D. 535.

The word "willful," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5341 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3628], defining "manslaughter" as the unlawful and willful killing of another without malice, means done wrongfully, with evil intent. It means any act which a person of reasonable knowledge and ability must know to be contrary to duty; and, while the act must be done with evil design and knowingly, still a killing which takes place under circumstances showing a reckless disregard for the life of another, and the reckless and negligent use of means reasonably calculated to take the life of another, would be a killing done willfully. Roberts v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 897, 902, 61 C. O. A. 427.

The word "willful," used "in a statute creating a criminal offense, means something more than an intention to do a thing. It implies the doing the act purposely and deliberately; indicating a purpose to do it without authority; careless whether he has the right or not; in violation of law; and it is this which makes the criminal intent, without which one cannot be brought within the meaning of a criminal statute." State v. Morgan (N. C.) 48 S. E. 670, 671 (quoting State v. Whitener, 93 N. C. 590).

That the term "willfully," when applied to the intent with which an act is done, implies simply a purpose or willingness to commit the act referred to. It does not require any intent to violate law or injure another.

Klenk v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 76 Pac. 214, 215, 27 Utah, 428.

The word "willfully," in Pen. Code, § 639, subjecting to punishment any person who willfully or maliciously displaces, injures, or destroys any water main, means something more than a voluntary act, and more also than an intentional act which in fact is wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose, or with a design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. McMorris v. Howell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1018, 1021, 89 App. Div. 272 (citing Wass v. Stevens, 128 N. Y. 123, 28 N. E. 21).

WILLFUL AND MALICIOUS INJURY.

The phrase "willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 2, 30 Stat. 550 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428], providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all his provable debts except such as are judgments in actions for fraud or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, includes a judgment for damages for criminal conversation, and hence such a judgment is not discharged by a discharge in bankruptcy. Tinker v. Colwell, 24 Sup. Ct. 505, 506, 193 U. S. 473, 48 L. Ed. 754.

WILLFUL DEFAULT.

The words "willful default" imply more than negligence or carelessness. The word "willful" means intentional, while the word "default" means transgression. Where a testator exempted his trustee from liability for losses occurring without his own willful default, it was evidently his intention to relieve the trustee from everything but his individual intentional transgression. In re Mallon's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 554, 43 Misc. Rep. 569.

WILLFUL DESERTION.

Willful desertion is a breach of matrimonial duty, and is composed, first, of a breaking off of matrimonial cohabitation; and, second, an intent in the mind to desert. Both facts must be shown. Mere cessation of cohabitation is not enough. Tillis v. Tillis (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 926.

WILLFUL TRESPASSER.

One who takes the ore of another from his land without right either recklessly or with the actual intent so to do is a "willful trespasser"; but one who takes such ore without right, but inadvertently and unintentionally, or in the honest belief that he is exercising his own right, is not a "willful trespasser." Resurrection Gold Min. Co. v. Fortune Gold Min. Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 668, 679.

WINE.

A Japanese alcoholic beverage made from rice by processes similar to those in making beer, which resembles still wine in its percentage of alcohol, which in quality is only remotely similar to wine, is not sufficiently similar to warrant its classification as such, under Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 296, 30 Stat. 174 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1654]. Nishimiya v. United States (U. S.) 131 Fed. 650.

WINNER.

All those who have won more than they have lost during one sitting by playing at cards are "winners," within the meaning of Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 38, § 132, which provides that any person who shall at any time or sitting by playing at cards lose to any person so playing any money amounting to $10, and shall pay the same, may sue and recover the money by action in assumpsit. Zellers v. White, 70 N. E. 669, 672, 208 Ill. 518, 100 Am. St. Rep. 243.

WIRES.

The word "wires," in Laws 1890, c. 566, p. 1148, § 65, providing that the occupant of any premises within 100 feet of the wires of any electric light corporation may require it to supply him with electric light, was intended to designate the wire through which was distributed the electricity with which the houses were to be lighted. Moore v. Champlain Electric Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 37, 39, 88 App. Div. 289.

WISH.

"Undoubtedly the word 'wish' may be equivalent to will or request or direct, if the context justifies that meaning." A testator left his property to his wife and daughter, the will reciting that his mother was living, and dependent upon her children, and therefore requested his wife to pay her such sums as might be requisite for her comfort. The will then added, "and it is my wish and expectation that when my wife, J., shall make her will, disposing of the property left her by me, that she will generously remember the children of my deceased brother, W., and such others as she may choose." The will did not create a trust in favor of the children of the deceased brother. Russell v. United States Trust Co. (U. S.) 127 Fed. 445, 447 (citing Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469; Phillips v. Phillips, 112 N. Y. 197, 19 N. E. 411, 8 Am. St. Rep. 737).

WITH THE WILL.

See "Found with the Will."

WITHIN THE CITY LIMITS.

Where a street railroad company agreed to issue transfer tickets within the city limits, "within the city limits" was interpreted as not to apply only to limits as then fixed, as it must have had in contemplation that the city in the future might exercise the right to annexing territory and thereby extend its limits. Indiana R. Co. v. Hoffman, 69 N. E. 399, 401, 161 Ind. 593.

WITHIN THE STATE.

See "Property not within the State."

WITHIN TEN DAYS.

Notice was posted in a custom house that it would be closed June 17th—a holiday observed by local custom, but not established by law. Certain importers, having notice of the closing of the custom house on that day, which was the tenth day after the liquidation of their entry, filed a protest on the day following. Held, that the protest was filed in accordance with the requirements of section 2931, Rev. St., providing that protests shall be made "within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties." Frost & Adams v. Saltonstall (U. S.) 129 Fed. 481.

WITHIN THREE DAYS.

See "Day."

WITHOUT HER CONSENT.

"Against her will" synonymous, see "Against Her Will."

WITHOUT ISSUE.

See "Die Without Issue."

WITHOUT NOTICE.

Bona fide purchaser without notice, see "Bona Fide Purchaser."

WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

See "Dismissal Without Prejudice."

The phrase, "without prejudice to interested parties," as used in an order consolidating with involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy the proceedings on a voluntary petition subsequently filed, cannot be construed to mean that a third person who took goods from the possession of the bankrupt on a writ of replevin from a state court, after the petition in involuntary bankruptcy had been filed and a receiver appointed therein, shall be permitted to retain possession of the merchandise taken under the replevin suit. If any signification be attached to the phraseology of the order it must be that the words quoted were inserted for the protection of the petitioning creditor's rights which might otherwise be defeated, and not for the benefit of the adverse claimant. In re Briskman (U. S.) 132 Fed. 201, 203.

WITNESS.

Any other witness, see "Any Other."

WOOD.

See "Logs of Wood."

WORK.

See "Public Work"; "Street Work."

The word "work," as used in a city charter, providing that all work exceeding in cost a specified sum shall be let to the lowest reasonable and responsible bidder, includes structures such as buildings and bridges. Chippewa Bridge Co. v. City of Durand (Wis.) 99 N. W. 603, 606.

"Work," as used in Batts' Ann. St. art. 4560e, protecting all persons while engaged in the work of operating cars against the negligence of any servant or employé of the company, is synonymous with "at," and in its connection means the doing of those things which constitute operating the locomotives, etc., and the person so engaged is protected against the negligence of any other employé during the time he is engaged in the act of operating the machinery. A person employed about a locomotive roundhouse to take charge of engines was not, while on his way to take charge of a locomotive and before he began to perform the act of operating the machinery, a servant engaged in the work of operating the cars, locomotive, or trains of a railroad, so as to give him or his representatives a right to recover for his injury when caused through the negligence of a fellow servant. Gulf, O. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Howard (Tex.) 80 S. W. 229, 230.

WORK OF NECESSITY.

Courts, in construing the term "necessity" as used in statutes relating to the statute prohibiting work on the Sabbath excepting work of necessity, is given a liberal rather than a literal interpretation, and it is "not an absolute, unavoidable, physical necessity that is meant, but rather an economic and moral necessity." Where a belt in a mill employing 200 persons broke on a Saturday through an unexpected defect, and could not be repaired that day because gasoline could not be procured in a town of 3,000 inhabitants, the repairing of it Sunday morning, without which the mill would have to be shut down Monday, as, after the belt was glued, it had to dry 18 hours before it could be used, was a work of necessity, within the statute. State v. Collett (Ark.) 79 S. W. 791, 792, 64 L. R. A. 204 (quoting Shipley v. State, 61 Ark. 216, 219, 32 S. W. 489, 33 S. W. 107).

WORSHIP.

See "House of Worship."

WORTHY.

The word "worthy" is elastic in its meaning, according to the context in which used. It may—perhaps, more exactly, does—mean virtuous, or of good standing, but its restriction to such significance would be absurd when used in a will enjoining the trustees of a fund to select subjects worthy of assistance; would strain through a distorting filter this testator's bounty, in view of the situations which he evidently contemplated as likely to surround its distribution. Kronshage v. Varrell (Wis.) 97 N. W. 923, 930.

WOUND.

See "Death Resulting from the Wound."

WRIT OF ERROR.

Appeal distinguished, see "Appeal."

A writ of error has been called an original writ, because it issued out of a reviewing court and was directed to the trial court; but it acts upon the record rather than upon the parties, removing the record into the supervising tribunal. The Supreme Court declares it to be "rather a continuation of the original litigation than the commencement of a new action." Bristol v. United States (U. S.) 129 Fed. 87, 89, 63 C. C. A. 529.

WRIT OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS.

The function of a writ of error coram nobis "is to vacate a judgment in the court where it was rendered by bringing some fact to the knowledge of that court which was not previously known, and which, if known, would have prevented the rendition of the judgment." On such a writ only such errors of fact can be assigned as are consistent with the record before the court in which the case was tried. Hadley v. Bernero, 78 S. W. 64, 67, 103 Mo. App. 549.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

See "Habeas Corpus."

WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

See "Mandamus."

WRIT OF PROHIBITION.

See "Prohibition."

WRIT OF REVIEW.

The writ of review bears the same relation to our system of civil procedure that the writ of certiorari sustained to the common law, the name only of the latter having been changed by statute, and, like the ancient mode of procedure, the modern writ merely brings up the record. McAnish v. Grant, 74 Pac. 396, 397, 44 Or. 57.

A writ of review will lie only when the inferior court or tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction or exercised its functions illegally or contrary to the course of procedure applicable to the matter before it. It cannot be used as a substitute for an appeal, nor can the mere error of an inferior court, officer, or tribunal, either of fact or of law, in the exercise of rightful jurisdiction, be reviewed or considered in such a proceeding. Farrow v. Nevin, 75 Pac. 711, 713, 44 Or. 496.

WRITTEN CONTRACT.

A "written contract" has been defined as "one which in all its terms is in writing." Bishop on Cont. (Enlarged Ed.) § 163. The signature of both parties is not always a necessary requisite to a written contract. National Cash Register Co. v. Leako, 58 Atl. 967, 968, 77 Conn. 276.

WRONG.

The term "wrong," in the maxim, "Equity will not suffer wrong without a remedy," has a significance which does not reach violations of mere moral rights. Any other wrong is said to involve a corresponding primary legal or equitable right, with an equitable or legal remedy, according to circumstances, for the former, and an equitable remedy for the latter. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 99 N. W. 909, 933, 121 Wis. 127 (citing Pom. Eq. Jur. 424).

WRONGFUL ACT.

The term "wrongful act," as used in Rev. St. Idaho, § 4100, providing that when a person's death is caused by the wrongful act of another his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, implies the omission of some duty, and that duty must be a duty owing to the decedent. It cannot be that if the death was caused by rightful act, or an unintentional act, with no omission of duty owing to the decedent, it can be considered wrongful. The death of a free passenger on a railway train, not due to the omission on the part of the railway company of any duty owing to the deceased, cannot be considered wrongful, within Rev. St. Idaho, § 4100. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Adams, 24 Sup. Ct. 408, 409, 192 U. S. 440, 48 L. Ed. 513.

YEAR.

See "First Ten Years."

When reference is made to a certain year the presumption is that the calendar year is meant; but where a legislative body is acting under a constitution providing a fiscal year different from the calendar year, its fiscal legislation should be referred to the fiscal year, and not to the calendar year. State v. Jennings, 47 S. E. 683, 685, 68 S. C. 411.
